MR. BLAINE IN NEW-YORK.

CONVICTING ARRAIGNMENT OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

SPLENDID PICTURE OF THE DOINGS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES — EX-REBELS TAKING THE LOAVES AND GIVING THE CRUMBS TO URIAH HEAP DEMOCRATS OF THE NORTH—DESPERATE EFFORTS OF THE CONFEDERATES TO RULE THE COUNTRY AND TYRANNIZE OVER THE BLACKS.

The reception of Mr. Blaine at the hall of the Cooper Union last evening was one of the grandest of demonstrations which even this City of demonstrations has ever witnessed. In every respect the audience was one which reflected credit upon the intelligence and patriotism of the Republicans of the Metropolis. Among those on the platform were Thurlow Weed, Elliot C. Cowdin, Luther R. Marsh, Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, Gen. G. B. Sheridan, William Blakeman, Judge F. J. Fithian, Henry Highland Garnett, Hon. William L. Estabrook, William A. Darling, Charles S. Spencer, ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer, Hon. A. W. Tenney, and many others. At 7:20 Hon. A. B. Cornell called the meeting to order and nominated Clarence A. Seward as Chairman. Mr. Seward accepted the honor in a neat speech, and, after the completion of the organization by the appointment of Vice Presidents and Secretaries, introduced to the audience the speaker of the evening, Hon. James G. Blaine. The appearance of the ex-Speaker was the signal for a most enthusiastic and tumultuous reception. Men cheered until they were hoarse, women waved their handkerchiefs, and for full five minutes the air resounded with the continuous applause. When the noise of his welcome had sufficiently subsided, Mr. Blaine advanced to the front of the platform and spoke for an hour and a half. His exposure of the meanness, duplicity, and false pretenses of the Democratic Confederate House was telling and was received with thunders of applause from the entire assemblage. His tribute to the courage of the Republican Senate in resisting the arrogant demands of the ex-Rebel Representatives called forth a renewed tempest of cheering, while his description of the servile submission of the Northern Democratic majority to the Southern Democratic minority was a masterpiece of sarcasm and indignation. The peroration in which he pointed the argument for protection to the Southern blacks by quoting Edmund Burke's appeal in the impeachment of Warren Hastings, in which justice was demanded for the suffering Hindoo, was spoken with the utmost effect, and was received accordingly. The scene when Mr. Blaine left the rostrum was a repetition of his welcome. It was generally conceded that the meeting was one of the most memorable in the annals of New-York politics.

After Mr. Blaine came Hon. A.W. Tenney, of Brooklyn, who spoke effectively for nearly an hour, and was succeeded by S. B. Dutcher, of Brooklyn, and Henry Highland Garnett. Loud calls were made for Gen. Sickles, but he did not respond. The meeting broke up at a late hour amid hearty cheers for the national and State tickets.

MR. CLARENCE A. SEWARD'S REMARKS.

Hon. A. B. Cornell opened the proceedings by nominating Hon. Clarence A. Seward as President of the meeting.

Mr. Seward, who was received with enthusiastic applause, spoke as follows:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I have the honor to thank you for the position which you have given me to-night, and if you could stand here as I do and see this magnificent array from our City you could understand the feeling of gratitude which I have. It has long been the custom of our people, when questions of grave national import were to be considered, to gather themselves together and gain that wisdom and strength which results from consultation and discussion. On a notable occasion, 100 years ago, those who then watched over the welfare of our Republic asserted, at a meeting which they had, that they held certain truths to be self-evident. Since that declaration those truths have formed a portion of the political creed of every true American. In accordance with that custom, thus long continued, we have come together to-night in goodly numbers to supplement the work of our forefathers, by adding to their truths this further one: That the right to govern the Union belongs to those who defended, protected, and preserved it. [Loud cheers.] Such is the creed of the Republican Party to-day. [Cheers.] The inquiry now is, Shall this further truth, with all the questions of finance, of civil reform, and of Southern reconstruction, which it involves, be now accepted by the American people? And shall Hayes and Wheeler, who represent those who accept that truth, be elected to sustain and enforce it? [Great cheering.]

The old cry, "Watchman, what of the night?" finds here new utterance. The signs are propitious. Vermont and Maine lead off with superb victories. Connecticut has already given such significant Republican gains, as insures her faithfulness. Ohio [cheers] expresses the gratitude which she feels for having been given the Republican nominee, by giving him and us a victory. And further toward the setting sun, the State of Indiana has shown her strength in the present, and gives happy promise for the future by largely increasing the number of her Republican Congressmen. She will do again in 1876 what she did in 1872. She then elected Hendricks as her Governor, but gave her electoral vote to Grant and Wilson. The gallant Harrison and those who sprang to his support are neither dismayed nor discouraged. They propose to demonstrate that what Indiana has done she will do yet again, by giving her electoral vote to the Republican nominee. [Cheers.] This being the outlook East and West, it is obvious that the real contest is nearer home; that it is, in fact, the electoral vote of the Empire State which is to determine the present contest. We are told that we have a solid South. A "solid South" in favor of "Northern men with Southern principles" for President and Vice President may make New-York, as she was in 1824, the arbiter of the question. Her duty in such a contest is plain: To vote for those whose first and only consideration will be the integrity of the Government and the prosperity of the people. [Cheers.] Grant that our opponents commenced this canvass with a solid South, and the fact is not half so dark as it would have been had not slavery been abolished. Admit the fact of the unity of the South, and it fails to afford a reason why we of the North should be discouraged. There was a "solid South" in the rebellion, and at its commencement there was a divided North. But hardly had the echoes of the first gun fired by treason died away when the division was sealed—the issue ceased to be doubtful, for a united North blotted out the slavery and crushed out the rebellion of a "solid South." Since then, with unparalleled magnanimity the Government has forgiven those who were its foes, and has permitted those who were leaders in the rebellion to hold seats as Representatives in Congress.

Notwithstanding all this, we have to-day the spectacle of South Carolina, the mother of nullification and secession, actually engaged in armed resistance to that portion of the Constitution known as the fourteenth amendment. Are we of the North again to be divided, and shall we accept South Carolina's new invitation? Shall we unlearn the lesson of the past? Or shall we assert once more in a peaceful way the power of a united North? [Great cheering.]

OFFICERS OF THE EVENING.

Judge Fithian here submitted the following list of Vice Presidents and Secretaries, which was adopted by the meeting:

MR. BLAINE'S SPEECH.

The President then said: I have now to present to you him whom you all came to hear, and who, after rendering loyal service in the West, comes to aid us with his voice and presence. I have the pleasure of introducing to you Hon. James G. Blaine. The mention of Mr. Blaine's name was received with the most enthusiastic cheering, again and again renewed. The ex-Speaker then addressed the meeting as follows:

It was my fortune, either good or ill—at least it was my fate—to have entered Congress some fourteen years ago, and the first Winter that I took my seat in the House we had under discussion a bill to prescribe a test oath for persons who should thereafter hold office under the Government of the United States. That oath has since become historic, and is popularly known as the iron-clad oath. Its design was to prevent men in rebellion against the Government of the United States holding office under that Government afterward. And I well remember one day being in the Senate when the bill was under discussion, and a pleasant-faced, agreeable gentleman, then a Senator from Indiana, Mr. Thomas A. Hendricks, [hisses,] of whom I always speak kindly in a personal sense, [laughter,] was occupying the floor, and I well remember, also, that he said to the Senate, "This oath you are now about to prescribe is useless; nay, it is mischievous. It is useless because, let me assure you," said he, with a certain spirit of prophecy which no one but a modern Democrat could ever put on, "let me assure you, when this rebellion is ended Lee and Beauregard, Slidell and Mason, and all their associates will be busy in seeking their personal safety by flight, and they will not bother you in seeking or holding office under the Government of the United States." Well, I thought for once that Mr. Hendricks was right; I thought, indeed, that it would be a presumptuous piece of arrogance and impudence, that I should not live to see, that men then engaged in rebellion should ever come back and claim to aid in the administration of this Government; and I certainly should have esteemed myself a dreamer of very wild dreams if I could then have thought that I should myself remain in the House of Representatives long enough to see, as I did see on the first Monday of December last, seventy of the associates of Lee and Slidell and Mason—Captains, Colonels, and Brigadiers of the Confederate Army—seventy of them, stand up at the bar of the House of Representatives and be sworn in as Democratic members—sworn in under the modified oath, for we Republicans, who are accused of such hard-hearted and cruel policy toward the South, have always modified that oath to adapt it to the tender consciences of rebels. And whereas I and every other loyal man that takes his seat from the North is compelled to swear that he never did rebel and never wished to rebel, and never intended to rebel, and that he takes the oath without any mental reservation or evasion under the pains and penalties of perjury in this world and future damnation in the next—while we are compelled to take this oath these seventy Southern scamps, [cheers,] they took their seats on the simple promise that they would try to behave well hereafter, [laughter,] and they came in under that oath and took their seats, and took off their hats, and hung up their coats, and sat down, and made themselves at home, and took command of the House. [Applause.] And the 110 Northern Democrats who were their associates were content to sit at their feet and take the policy of the Democratic Party of the Union from the seventy Southern rebels that were sworn in under this modified oath; and I say here that never in the days of the most arrogant pro-slavery régime that flourished under Pierce or Buchanan was Southern domination in the House of Representatives so absolute and uncontradicted as it has been in the Forty-fourth Congress.

SOUTHERN DOMINATION IN THE HOUSE.

Why, look at the facts, gentlemen; they are all familiar to you I know, but yet they will bear recital. You know, as every independent man knows, you know in the organization of a Parliamentary body its power is expressed through its committees. The greatest man who ever sat in the Speaker's chair, Mr. Clay, of Kentucky, said that the very essence of legislative power was in the committees of the House; that is where legislation is shaped, and formed, and fashioned, and completed, and when they came to appoint the committees of the House what did we see? These seventy Southern men, with a population of thirteen millions behind them, were associated with one hundred and ten Northern Democrats, with a population of thirty-two millions behind them. Now, it would have been the last point of generosity and liberality toward the South to have appointed the committees of the House on the basis of population. [Here the increasing audience rendered it somewhat difficult to hear the speaker.]

Mr. Blaine—If you only keep quiet I will make every man in the house hear me. It would, I say, have been the most liberal basis imaginable to have given the Southern men control of the committees in the proportion of population, for on no other basis, whether of finance or of commerce or of manufactures or of any great interest of the country, do they approach the North in anything like the ratio of population; and therefore I say it would be treating them with the utmost liberality to have given them between a third and a fourth part of the committees of the House. And yet they coolly, they very coolly take possession of twenty-one of the thirty-one committees of the House, and allow the Democrats of the North to have ten. [Laughter.] And those high-spirited and proud Democrats of the North obediently took what was given them, and sat down under it content; and Mr. Samuel S. Cox, who represents a portion of this City, or misrepresents it, as the case may be [laughter,] Mr. Samuel Cox, when twitted on that fact on the floor of the House, said he was glad of it. "Thank God," said Uriah Heep, "Master David, I am 'umble." [Laughter.]

THE DEMOCRATS KNOCK DOWN ANCIENT RULES FOR PARTY PURPOSES.

Well, as soon as they had appointed these committees, taking two-thirds of the committee power of the House on less than one-third of the population of the country, they got ready for legislation. And the first thing then they found in their way was a great body of rules in this House—a body of rules that contained the aggregated parliamentary wisdom of ninety years' experience in this country, and which for two centuries before had received the sanction of the British House of Commons. And among those rules the most important of all, the rule which goes more to the very pith and marrow of the purity of legislation, was that which says that upon your appropriation bills you shall not engraft any independent legislation. Understand me, gentlemen, I say the most important rule of the whole body of rules of the House is that which forbids the engrafting of independent legislation upon an appropriation bill. For example here comes up your Post Office Appropriation bill, appropriating $33,000,000 or $34,000,000 for the expenses of the Post Office Department. Up gets a Democrat, under instruction of the party caucus, and moves to put on to that a piece of legislation wholly unconnected with the Post Office Department—nothing whatever to do with it—some piece of legislation which could not be got through the House on its own merits, but can be put on the Committee of the Whole where the yeas and nays cannot be called, and where no man is put on his own responsibility. Then when it gets back to the House every man is put on the House in what is familiarly called the "Devil's Cross-roads," a bad way whichever direction you take, for you have got either to vote for the infamous legislation which is engrafted on the bill, or in voting against it you have got to vote against giving a single dollar to carry on the Post Office Department of the United States. Therefore, the rule of the House, which has been on the statute-books of the House for nearly ninety years, has forbidden that kind of legislation. It is said that shall not be done. Well, the first thing this House did, the very first step they took, was to entirely change that rule, and to say that no matter what piece of legislation was desired, it might be put on the Appropriation bill provided it was a measure of retrenchment. If it was a measure of retrenchment it might be put on the Appropriation bill and go through. That was a sort of silver lining or sugar-coating of a bitter pill, and they changed the rule of the House, every Republican voting against the change and every Democrat voting for it. And that change, the first for ninety years that came to us, is known as the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill.

Now that bill contains all charities of the United States Government. It contains all that is beneficent, all that is kindly, and all that is benevolent in our Government. It contains the appropriation for the Insane Asylum for the Army and Navy. It contains the appropriation for the Marine Hospital. It contains the appropriation for the coast and lakes and rivers and gulf and ocean. It contains the appropriation for bringing home shipwrecked mariners and distressed Americans from distant and possibly barbarous coasts. It contains the appropriation for your great light-house system, which furnishes eyes to the ocean, and by night warns the mariner of danger. And while, I say, this bill of charities, this bill of beneficence was under consideration in the House, up rose a Democrat, under instruction of a secret party caucus, and moved to amend it by putting on a clause repealing the Supervisors law of 1869.

THE SUPERVISORS LAW AN OFFENSE.

Well, what had the Supervisors law of 1869 to do with the charities of the United States Government? And immediately a Republican rose and said, why, under your amended rule, this is not in order, because your rule says you won't put any general legislation on the Appropriation bill, unless it be a measure of retrenchment. And then arises a man who sat in the chair of the Committee of the Whole, and whose name I don't now remember, and never wish to find out, and overruled the point of order, and said this was a measure of retrenchment, because he said, if you repeal the Supervisors law—and I want you to get that fine point—if you repeal the Supervisors law you won't have to pay the Supervisors. [Applause and laughter.] That is where the retrenchment came in. Now, gentlemen, I need not tell a New-York audience what the Supervisors law is; you all know it, because it was by reason of the frauds committed in your City, and the scandals connected with the Democratic victories, that created that law. You know, gentlemen, for I believe you call it an open secret in this City of New-York, that John T. Hoffman was seated as Governor on a fraudulent vote, and that the electoral vote given in 1868 was withheld from Grant and given to Seymour; and that that fraudulent vote was manœuvred and manipulated and originated, I don't say by whom, for I don't know the intricacies of New-York Democratic politics, and God forbid that I ever should, but I do say, on the testimony of the last candidate for the Presidency of the Democratic Party, Horace Greeley, that the present candidate of the Democratic Party, Samuel J. Tilden, was the author and the finisher of that fraud, and Mr. Greeley arraigned him for it. And that letter, which you probably have all got by heart, and which I feel as if I was carrying coals to Newcastle, when I refer to it before a New-York audience but which cannot be referred to too often, for I think it is a good thing in a political contest to show up political rascality in order to avoid it, and you have got it in this letter of of Mr. Tilden—this letter, which was addressed by Mr. Tilden on the last week of October to every one of the local committees in New-York. You all remember it. Mr. Tilden said:

MY DEAR SIR: Please to communicate at once with some suitable person in three or four principal towns and in each city of your county and request him [expenses duly arranged for at this end; laughter,] to telegraph William M. Tweed at Tammany Hall at the very minute of closing the polls the state of the vote in your county. There is," continues Mr. Tilden, for I omit a portion of the details of the letter, "an important object to be attained by a simultaneous transmission at the very hour of the closing of the polls without longer waiting. The opportunity can be taken by the usual half hour's lull in the telegraphic communication over the lines before the actual results begin to be transmitted by the Associated Press. Yours very respectfully,

SAMUEL J. TILDEN."

[Laughter.]

Now, I take it there is not a man who is not able and was not able to read that letter, and to understand, what Tilden understood, that the men in the country who got it would understand, what he intended should be understood by it. That was just as though Mr. Tilden had said "My dear Sir: The rural counties of New-York are nearly all Republican by large majorities, and we greatly fear that those majorities this year will be a little worse than usual; but if at the very moment of closing the polls, without waiting for the count, you will telegraph to New-York what those majorities are, and you send word to my friend William M. Tweed, at Tammany Hall, and give him half an hour's start, he has got a voting machine here that will count all the rural counties." [Applause.] That is what was done. That is what was notoriously done, and they got them in, and they ground out, I think, 40,000, (you know more about this than I do,) and declared the Democratic ticket carried by 10,000, which is a confession that the Republicans carried the State by 30,000. And quite recently, right here [and I put it rather in an indirectory way)—I am quite aware that Tilden says he never wrote that letter. I believe he says William M. Tweed forged it. I don't have the honor of the acquaintance of Tilden, nor did I ever see Tweed, but I think it is fair that Tweed should be heard from on that question. Tweed is coming home; and right here, in the City of his great achievements and triumphs, I respectfully ask for a suspension of public opinion on behalf of Tweed. [Laughter.]

No matter about that, this fraud was committed, and has sunk into the hearts of the honest men of this country, and it was taken up by Mr. Horace Greeley, then editing the New-York Tribune, and the first thing he did was to arraign Tilden in an open letter. The first blow by the throat and took him before the bar of public opinion of a continent, and he went on to give details showing where this audacious fraud was committed, and the result of Mr. Greeley's exposure, and the agitation in the Tribune, and the correspondence in Congress was the passage of the Supervisors' law, which, I understand, was simply that in every precinct of 20,000 and upward in which any respectable number of electors say they cannot have a fair count when a national officer is to be chosen, either as an Elector for President or a Representative in Congress, that the United States may appoint a supervisor to be present and to see to an honest count, and a fair declaration of that count. [Applause.] and I say, on the very outskirt, that the man objecting to that law confesses his willingness and his desire to commit some fraud of political scoundrelism. [Applause.] And I wish to say here, on behalf of New-England, where I belong, that in New-England we have from twelve to fourteen cities of over twenty thousand, and they are all Republican, and there never has been found a Democrat rash enough or reckless enough to come forward and swear that he didn't believe a fair count and honest declaration could be had. [Applause.] I believe there is not an honest Republican in this City who is not willing to swear every day that unless you have a supervision of this count an honest and fair count is impossible under the Tammany régime.

I very well remember this being on the statute-book when this bill of charities, this Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, was under consideration, up leaped, as I told you, this Democrat, and moved to repeal the Supervisors law, and, the point of order being overruled it was repealed as far as Congress could do it. They carried it by a party vote, and, with some little observation and experience in legislation, both State and national, I do undertake to say seriously that I never knew a proposition in a legislative body so absolutely and irredeemably infamous as that law. What was it, gentlemen? Why, it was taking the charities of the United States by the throat, in the spirit of the corsair and the pirate, and saying: You shall not have one dollar for the helpless brave soldiers and seamen of the Army and Navy for their asylum; you shall not have one dollar to spread a cot in a marine hospital on coast, or lake, or gulf, or river, or ocean; you shall not have one dollar to bring a starving American home from a foreign city where he may be located; you shall not have a pint of oil to light the beacons along your coast, those eyes of the ocean which would warn the mariner of shipwreck and ruin before him; you shall have none of all these charities unless you agree to repeal the Supervisors law of 1869 in order that we may cheat enough in the State of New-York to give its vote to Samuel J. Tilden. That is what the House said and did—said it in so many words—and they held on to the bill for sixty-four days; they attempted for sixty-four days to weary and worry and bully the Senate of the United States into conceding it, but, thank God, the Senate of the United States stood firm, [cries of "Good," and they said, in effect if not in words, to the House of Representatives, "Your proposition is entirely and absolutely infamous, and we will never consent to it." The Senate of the United States has a pleasant Chamber, and each Senator has a good arm-chair, and they kindly intimated to the House of Representatives that they proposed to sit there until the second centennial of American Independence, [applause,] and they were compelled to back down and back out, and the Supervisors law remains on the statute book, [cries of "Good!"] and you ought to have a chance for a fair count. And I ought to have said that the law enacted in 1869 and 1870 went into operation with a reasonably fair count in this City and State in 1872, and the man whose original agitation produced it, Horace Greeley, was the one who was defeated by it, and having done all in my power to assist in his defeat, I desire to say, and I say it with reverence for his memory, that I knew him well enough for twenty years to know that Mr. Greeley would a thousand times rather be defeated by an honest vote than be counted in by a fraud. [Applause.]

THE ARMY A BUGBEAR TO THE DEMOCRATS.

Well, this new mode of legislation on appropriation bills came along to the Army Appropriation bill. We reached the Army Appropriation bill, and those of you who attended Democratic meetings this year, or read Democratic newspapers, (neither of which I can commend as very profitable occupation,) must have seen how alarmingly we are in danger of being overrun in this country by military despotism. [Laughter.] Your liberties are in peril in New-York by reason of an enormous standing Army that is kept up. Think of it! We have got thirty-eight States and nine Territories, and Alaska unorganized. We have got 15,000 miles of ocean coast. We have got a territory larger than the continent of Europe. We have got 45,000,000 of people, and increasing every year, and we are absolutely threatened, and all our liberties imperiled, by a standing Army of 20,000 men. [Laughter.] That is what it is threatening your liberties—25,000 men. Well, I know that in addressing the citizens of New-York I have to speak of facts more public to you than to me, but as I understand it there are 3,000 Democratic policemen in this City alone—one-eighth of the whole Army of the United States—and they with great difficulty prevent the Democratic pickpockets from stealing your pocket-book and mine between the hotels and the depot. One-eighth of the Army of the United States on the Police force of New-York, and we are in danger of our liberties! Well, when the Army bill was under consideration we had another specimen of this legislation, and I want to detail it to you briefly. When the war was over we had more than a million of men on the rolls. They were mustered out. Many of these, I doubt not, are here to-night, better men for having aided in saving a great country; they were mustered out, and the question came up, "What shall be the peace footing of the United States?" and it was fixed by the act of 1866 at 25,000 men. When we came to discuss that question we found a great change established in this country. Four millions of people who had been slaves had been made free, and then had been made citizens, and 200,000 of these people had served in the ranks of the Union Army, and had served faithfully. I know it is somewhat the mode in certain circles to sneer at the colored soldiers, but I say, on the authority of the leading journals of the United States Army, that they were good soldiers; that they did their duty like loyal men; that they fought and bled, and many of them died, offering the last sacrifice which humanity can for any cause. [Applause.] I heard Ben Harrison, a gallant son of Indiana, say the other day, [applause,] that one of the handsomest foot races that he ever saw in his life was at the battle of Franklin, below Nashville, where Hood's Army was charged by a colored brigade, but the rebels broke, and he said he never saw men run as fast in his life as that colored brigade did, but they didn't overtake the rebels. I say these men had earned the right to wear the uniform of the United States, and when the peace establishment was fixed certain regiments of infantry and certain regiments of cavalry were ordered to be composed of colored soldiers, and they now are composed of them, and they are good regiments, and they did their duty faithfully; and yet this Congress put in a clause in the Appropriation bill disbanding these colored regiments and driving them out of the service. Now, another clause in the Army bill of 1866 forbids that any man who had served in the Confederate Army and borne arms against his country should ever be commissioned in the Army of the United States, and a bill is now pending on the calendar of the House of Representatives the spirit and purpose of which is to drive out the colored man from the Army of the United States, where he had faithfully served, and to bring back to it the Confederate soldier, who had done his best to destroy it, and that legislation was also defeated by the United States Senate. I might go on, gentlemen, and give you details of almost all the appropriation bills in which the spirit seemed to be to legislate against the nationality of the country.

HOW THE DEMOCRATS HAULED DOWN THE AMERICAN FLAG ABROAD.

Let me give you one more before I leave. We came to the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill, which provides the money for all your foreign intercourse and for your commercial agents. The Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation bill contains an appropriation of about one million three hundred thousand dollars. It provides pay for all your foreign Ministers and all your Consuls, and the pay of the Consuls of the United States is more than reimbursed by the fees collected by them. The fees of the Consuls of the United States are more than two hundred thousand dollars in excess of their salaries, and yet when they came to legislate on this little bill, which involved a very small outlay for the whole of the consular and diplomatic intercourse, they struck off forty-two places where we have had heretofore Consuls, and ordered that no Consul should thereafter be found, and they did it on the ground that, although the Consular system as a whole had largely more than paid its expenses, yet at these particular points the fees didn't quite amount to the salaries; and yet at these points you will find the English, the Spanish, the German, the French, the Austrian, the Russian, and even the little flags of Belgium and Holland, but no American flag, and the American flag was hauled down by their order, and forty-two places on the globe where it had hitherto been flying it was hauled down on the ground that it cost a few thousand dollars to keep it going. Now, gentlemen, the Republican Party, who fought for the protection of our flag over the whole territory, and over all the territory of the globe, take the ground that when the American flag has once been raised it shall never be hauled down. [Applause,] and I undertake to say that in the next Congress is Republican, as I hope it will be, [Applause,] and certainly will be if New-York does its full duty, one of the first acts will be to restore the American flag to the places where they have ordered it to be pulled down.

THE SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS.

But the one subject which I find is irritating above all others to the average Democratic mind, and which is ever apt to create a little profanity, is to mention to him Southern Democratic war claims, and then hear him apply adjectives and oaths, the mildest of which is "liar," with a prefix before it. He will tell you the Republican Party is going around falsifying and lying on the question of these claims, and they will open the Constitution of the United States and say to you: "Look there; the Constitution of the United States actually forbids the payment of those claims. These Republicans are lying throughout the length and breadth of the land." The Constitution, they tell you, repudiates it; the Democrats forbid it. Well, the third clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution does forbid the payment of the rebel debt. That is the debt of the rebel government or the rebel debt of any State, and it also forbids the payment for any slave that was emancipated under the thirteenth amendment. Now I think I can argue, and I think I can show that both those inhibitions can be got around and evaded, but I don't choose to do that. For the sake of the argument I admit in its broadest sense, as far as any Democrat will claim it, that these classes of claims are barred and cannot be paid.

Grant, now, that all that is in the Constitution. Those classes of claims are barred, and when I have made that admission I have pecked the egg-shell, because the class of claims about which we are legislating has nothing whatever to do with the debt of the rebel Government; has nothing whatever to do with the negroes emancipated under the thirteenth amendment. The class of claims which are now pending and impending relate to the destruction of every form of property that followed in the wake of the war—wheat, corn, flour, fences, houses, barns, horses, mules, cattle, hedges, railroads, culverts—every imaginable thing that was destroyed in the progress of our armies is now the thing which forms the basis of the united claims against the United States. And on the basis of those claims there are now pending in the House of Representatives 143 bills, beside, a general law, of which I hold in my hand a precise fac simile, and from which I will read one paragraph, and that paragraph to any intelligent mind will show that under the operation of that law, should it ever be enacted, the Treasury of the United States could be bankrupted in six months. Now the bill pending to-day in the House of Representatives before the Judiciary Committee, to which it was referred last February and whence it has not been reported back, reads thus: "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allow reasonable compensation to all citizens of the United States"—mark you, "all citizens"—not all loyal citizens." Heretofore, and generally, we have been paying all the claims that loyal men have against the Government of the United States. Now the proposition is to jump that distinction—to leap clear over it. It authorizes the Government to pay "all citizens of the United States—to allow reasonable compensation to all citizens of the United States for the use and occupation of their property by the United States Army, or any part thereof, during the late civil war." Mark you, wherever the Army encamped or marched on foot, on railroad or turnpike, or crossed bridges, losses and rents may be demanded and damages collected. And I want the lawyers here present to listen to the rule of evidence; "provided that affidavit of the claimant, supported by the competent testimony of any reputable citizen, shall be sufficient proof to establish the fact of the use and occupation of such property by said Army!" [Laughter.] A man puts in a claim, and he has an associate swear that he knows it is a good claim, and that concludes the case. Petroleum V. Nasby puts in a claim for loaves at Confederate Cross Roads, and Bacon, who keeps the liquor-store, swears he knows it is just; and the claim is made out. Nothing more is to be heard if a claimant swears that the Government owes him, and a reputable citizens indorses his statement. And I tell you that when you come to the construction that a Democratic House puts on a reputable citizen you open a wide door. [Laughter.]

Now, the fact that I want to impress upon your minds here is that this is absolutely trampling under foot the distinction that has heretofore prevailed. The Democrats say, "You have been paying war claims yourself;" and they thus present to me the argumentum ad hominem. They say "you have yourself referred war claims." I answer, "certainly I have done it, but it was always to claims of loyal men;" and so entirely do we recognize the right of loyal men who have lost by the war to compensation, that in 1871 we established what is known as the Southern Claims Commission, to hear and determine every case of loss that was made by loyal men in and for and by and in behalf of the Armies of the United States, of loyal men in New-York, who furnished horses or forage, or bacon. In the Constitution of the United States he read that clause which says: "private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and it he has a just claim it is recognized. And so the loyal man in Virginia and Louisiana, he has just as strong a claim, nay, he has a stronger claim than the loyal man of the North because he was loyal under difficulties. Therefore he established the Southern Claims Commission, and up to this time $2,700,000 have been allowed; and we intend that the Government of the United States, strong in its financial ability, powerful in its credit, abundant in its resources, shall reward and pay to the uttermost farthing every man who did and dared be loyal. [Applause and cheers.] But when you come to pay the public enemy, when you come to pay the men who were at that very moment using their resources to destroy your Government, you enter upon an entirely different question.

Some gentlemen may naturally ask, "Why, when you were passing the fourteenth amendment, and you were prohibiting the payment of claims for slaves and the rebel debt of all kinds, did you not prohibit claims from passing Congress?" My answer to that is this, that when the fourteenth amendment was passed in 1866, it never entered into the brain of man to conceive of a height and length and breadth and depth of Democratic and rebel impudence and insolence that could think of asking the United States to pay their side of the expenses of this war. [Applause.] That is the result of ten years of progress, to bring them up to that. [Laughter.] It had never been dreamed of at that time—never once. Now gentlemen will say, "This is all nonsense—this is a great bugbear; you are getting this up for the campaign, to affect people who are green; it is a campaign ruse." My answer to that, or rather my question—for, as I am a Yankee, I claim the privilege of answering one question by asking another—I ask, "Why do Southern men put these claims in if it is mere nonsense? If this means nothing—if, to use a phrase of the day, this does not 'mean business'—why do they put the bills in?" Just answer that, my Democratic friends. They know, just as well as you know to-day, or as well as any man knows, that the putting forward of claims of this character would be a stumbling-block, an offense to the loyal men of the North. They knew it would be lost. They know perfectly well that they would have to meet the fact on every stump, and that it probably would be the hardest campaign nut to crack they would meet. With all that, such is the unanimity of opinion or the South in favor of these claims that there is not a Southern Representative on the floor elected by Democratic votes who dares to refuse to put in these bills. There is not one.

A DEMOCRATIC ADMINISTRATION WOULD NOT RESIST THESE DEMANDS.

I say the sentiment of the House on this question amounts to a positive unanimity; and you give them a Democratic administration elected by a "solid South," deriving its entire political strength and prestige from its Southern vote, controlled, as it would be, by the Southern vote—controlled in all its measures as the present House of Representatives is controlled by an inferior number of Southern men who represent it on the floor—and I ask what power is there in an administration with Samuel J. Tilden at the head, if it should come to that, to resist such demands as these? It is absolutely absurd to trust them. Give them the entire control of the Treasury of the United States, and say they would not help themselves last? Gentlemen, I am only accusing them, when I say this, of having human nature. You may take any class of men and beat them in war, as we beat the rebels, and let them be isolated into power, and they will help themselves out of the Treasury. Northern men would do it; anybody would do it who had the opportunity, for human nature is human nature. The passion of the rebellion lies smoldering and ready to be fanned into a flame. Give them power and they will put the foot on you in the North. [Applause.] Any Northern man who votes the Democratic ticket with the idea that they are to be governed by some namby pamby sentiment about civil service reform or some talk of civil service preached in that remarkable letter put forth by the St. Louis Convention; anybody who believes that kind of sentiment is to be the warp and woof of Tilden's administration if he shall be elected, does not understand human nature. They will seize the Treasury of the United States; they will do it boldly. I will say for these Southern fellows that they are bold. They put that front down square on the necks of Northern Democrats; they take command of the colored troops in the North. They know it would be lost. They know perfectly well that they would have to meet the fact on every stump, and that it probably would be the hardest campaign nut to crack they would meet. With all that, such is the unanimity of opinion or the South in favor of these claims that there is not a Southern Representative on the floor elected by Democratic votes who dares to refuse to put in these bills. WHY THE SOUTH DON'T WANT SPECIE RESUMPTION.

Then, gentlemen, this connects itself most palpably with another question. You know very well, as soon as Congress had passed the Specie Resumption act of 1875, proposing to resume specie payment on behalf of the Government on the 1st of January, 1879, Mr. Tilden made haste to induce the Democratic Legislature of New-York to conform the legislation of your great State to that of the nation. They did it. An act on your statute books to-day provides for the collection and payment of your taxes in gold and silver, and the enforcement of your contracts in gold and silver. It was done with some ostentation and was proclaimed along by that eminent proclamation writer, Manton Marble. When that was done, Mr. Tilden discovered that they could not have Southern support of that basis. I state here to-night this well-known fact, that Southern men are deeply and deadly hostile to specie payment. Why, they know perfectly well that when gold dollars and silver dollars are the currency of this country, and you are paying and receiving them, and your taxes are collected in them, and your Government disburses them—they know very well, I say, and no one knows better, that never will a dollar be collected in this country for the payment of the rebel debt or the payment of any rebel claim whatever. [Applause.] And they also know that if they can keep the greenback bag open at both ends they can get rebel claims in at one end and manufacture paper money of some kind at the other, and that you and I and the country will have to take care of the paper money hereafter. That is the whole of it; that accounts for the step backward, though they promised there should ments are declared to be citizens and entitled to privileges as such, and also the rights of white Republicans are substantially disregarded and lawlessly violated. It has been said, and justly, that "the nation which fails to protect its citizens abroad deserves the contempt of all other nations; but what shall we say of a Government which not only refrains from protecting the rights or persons of its citizens at home, but permits the elective franchise—so dear to us all—to be taken away by force and violence, or rendered useless by contrivance and fraud?

MR. ADAMS' FALACIOUS REASONING.

Let us, however, turning from these subjects, consider briefly upon what grounds the Democratic Party urge that there should be at this time a change of administration of the General Government. Grave national reasons should certainly be given for this by those who insist upon withdrawing control from the party which preserved the nation from destruction by treason, and has, up to the present time so administered its affairs as to make it respected abroad, besides placing it on a financial credit—although a world second to that of no country upon the face of the earth. We find this change insisted upon from many sources and especially by Mr. Charles Francis Adams, a late convert, and by Gov. Seymour and others. Mr. Adams, in a letter written to the New-York State Democratic Committee, dated Sept. 23, 1876, declares: "The time has now come for a radical change and the constitution of a wholly new indiance, tied up by no restriction other than the genuine wishes of honest men of all parties." And he adds: "Verily, verily, if the people are wise they will lay down party and seize the present opportunity to make a change." And Gov. Seymour urges change in view of what he calls the aspects of our country which demand our attention—its moral disorders, and its material distress. But he proceeds to say: "I admit that the same spirit of extravagance which marks the expenditure of the Government Administration by the Republican Party has been shown by every State and Municipal Government, without regard to the party which has controlled them, since the close of the war." And he suggests that with a Democratic President and House of Representatives, and a Republican Senate, we have the check upon arbitrary power designed by our Fathers.

Now, one would suppose from reading the letter of Mr. Adams that he designed to convey the impression that the time had come for the people to unite in the election of Mr. Tilden and in the elevation of the Democratic Party to power, because, in such event, they would "lay down party and seize the present opportunity to make a change, and, by creating a new influence, no other restriction would be imposed upon such party than the genuine wishes of the honest men of all parties." Is it really the belief of Mr. Adams that, even if Mr. Tilden should be elected, he would be tied up in his Executive action by "no restriction save that imposed by the genuine wishes of the honest men of all parties?" Does he believe that Mr. Tilden would fail to act in harmony with the purposes of his own? And, does he believe that those purposes would be in any manner changed or modified by the wishes of such Republicans as might, under his advice, unite with the Democratic Party? Does he not, indeed, know from the history of that party that it has followed with intensity, and carried out at any sacrifice its own party schemes, and that its leaders have never failed to obey the wishes of the party?

DEMOCRATIC MAXIMUM OF PRETENSE AND MINIMUM OF TRUTH.

We must, I think, resort to some better reason than this for making the proposed change. Mr. Seymour admits that the extravagance of the Republican Party in conducting the General Government has been equaled by that of the Democratic Party in every State and city in which it has ruled, and we are not likely, therefore, to gain in that respect by the change proposed. Other considerations, however, are urged in the platform adopted by the Democratic Party at St. Louis. It is there asserted that "the result of Republican rule has been to look fast the prosperity of an industrious people in the paralysis of hard times." No reasons are stated for this assertion, and when we consider that depression in business prevails throughout the civilized world, and that this paralysis is found not only in England, but in France and Germany, and in most of the Continental nations, we are led to suppose that to attribute it to the influence of the Republican Party is a little too ridiculous. It is, however, further asserted in that platform that "change indispensable, because reform in the Government is necessary to remind and establish in the hearts of the whole people the Union eleven years ago happily rescued from the danger of secession of States." Such an assertion is the more extraordinary when we consider its source. It proceeds from the very men, or its representatives, who attempted to destroy the Union by a wicked rebellion organized and brought on in 1861. And it sounds strange, indeed, to hear from such men the suggestion that, in order to establish a love of the Union in the hearts of the people, it is necessary to take its Government from the Republican Party, by which alone it was sustained and preserved in the period of its severest trial. And it is equally extraordinary that it should be proposed to establish this love of Union in the hearts of the people by placing at the head of the nation Mr. Tilden, whose record from 1860 down to the close of the war disclosed—if not hostility to the cause of the Union—certainly an utter indifference to its preservation, and strong sympathy with the traitors who were attempting to destroy it. It is, however, found at this late indispensable to assert the contrary, because it is well-known that, were it admitted that he had thus failed in his duty to the Constitution and laws of his country every Northern State would oppose his election. And so well satisfied are his friends and the leaders of his party that to establish belief in his patriotism is indispensable, that repeated and public efforts have been made by them for that purpose; and more especially by Mr. Hewitt, in the House of Representatives, where he made statements—all of which were entirely unfounded—concerning the opinions and the action of Mr. Tilden at the commencement of the rebellion and during its continuance. Thus, we have it asserted by him that Mr. Tilden united in the call for the monster meeting at Union square, that he contributed largely to the fitting out of the Tammany Regiment, and that he declared from the time the first State seceded that war was the only remedy for the purpose of restoring the Union. That these statements were utterly unfounded is manifest from testimony, documents, and records which cannot be disputed. Thus it appears that this regiment and three others were the only regiments raised in the City of New-York for the entire expense of which was paid by the Union Defense Committee, and afterward by the Government. And, in direct hostility to the declaration of Mr. Hewitt, that from the time the first State seceded, Mr. Tilden insisted that war was the remedy, we have from a speech made by him on the 1st day of February, 1861, before a convention which met in this hall for the purpose, as would appear from its proceedings, of sympathizing with the rebellion, (six States then having seceded from the Union,) that "he argued strongly against coercion, showing the strength and resources of the Southern States, and reasoning that self-interest, if no higher motive, should deter us from plunging into a civil war, which could not fail to prove disastrous to us as a nation, and to bring poverty and suffering on our own citizens, and that he for one would resist, under any and all circumstances, the use of force to coerce the South into the Union." And that convention also resolved, (Mr. Tilden being one of the committee which drew the resolutions,) "That in the opinion of the convention the worst and the most ineffective argument that can be addressed by the Confederacy or its adhering members to the seceding States is civil war. Civil war will not restore the Union, but will defeat forever its reconstruction."

A DOUBLE-FACED AND COWARDLY PARTY.

If we add to the views thus expressed by Mr. Tilden, his letter to Judge Kent, just previous to the election of Mr. Lincoln, in which he declared, in substance, that the success of the Northern States would place the Southern States under the heel of a foreign Government, which they might justly resist; and also his action in connection with the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Political Knowledge—consisting principally in asserting the blessings of slavery and the unconstitutionality of every war measure—and also his participation in the Chicago Convention of 1864, and in framing the resolution which declared the war a failure, we shall be able to form a very correct estimate of the propriety of selecting him as a person calculated to reawaken a love of the Union in the hearts of our people.

It is further insisted in the St. Louis platform that change of Administration is necessary to "establish a sound currency." I suppose we all know what is ordinarily meant by a "sound currency." It consists of gold and silver, or their equivalent, and that equivalent, if paper, can only answer this meaning by being convertible into the precious metals at will. Now this was provided for by a Republican Congress in 1875; which enacted that on or before the 1st day of January, 1879, the paper money of the United States should be redeemable in coin. It is not pretended that by any means our Government could well have anticipated that date for the purpose of resumption; and yet we find it asserted in this platform that the act requiring resumption at that time is a hindrance to it, and, therefore, should be repealed; and in harmony with this purpose the House of Representatives passed an act utterly repealing it, and providing no means whatever for resumption.

When we look at the platform for the purpose of ascertaining by what means resumption is to be accomplished under Democratic rule, we are there told that it is to be by "a judicious system of preparation, by public economies, by official retrenchments, and by wise finance." These certainly are sufficiently indefinite to satisfy the most devoted adherent of the soft-money party; and when we consider that what shall be that "judicious system of preparation" is nowhere stated, except in the general language which follows, we can derive but very little, if any, information as to the time when resumption is to take place. Proceeding still further, it is declared in the platform that such a system (that is, the "judicious system of preparation" suggested) "will devise and, above all, intrusted to competent hands for execution," (by which, I suppose, is meant the Democratic Party,) "would, from the day of its adoption, bring healing on its wings to all our harassed industries, set in motion the wheels of commerce, manufactures, and the mechanical arts, restore employment to labor, and renew in all its natural sources the prosperity of the people." Where can anything be found more turgid, more unsatisfactory, more meaningless than this? And yet all this is put forth in the platform of a great party, framed for the purpose of commanding the respect and confidence of our people, and intended to show that by placing the Government in the hands of its leaders, such a system of preparation by public economies, official retrenchments and wise finance would be adopted as would bring forth the promised result.

DESPICABLE NONSENSE OF THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

We are further told, however, that change is necessary to "restore the public credit." Is not that already sufficiently established? And what, let me ask, is meant by its "restoration"? To what standard is it to be elevated or depressed? Is it to be brought to that standard which existed at the close—and for some time previous to the close—of the administration of Mr. Buchanan, when the public debt had been increased to $75,000,000, bonds for which, at six per cent. interest, were at some seventeen per cent. discount? Is this the restoration of national credit which the platform proposes to attain by change of administration? Already our credit throughout the world is so assured that bonds paying but four and a half per cent. interest are above par. Certainly, in view of these facts, and especially of its past history, we can hardly trust the Democratic Party to restore or maintain the public credit.

But it is further insisted that change is necessary to enable that party to "maintain the national honor." Where is this to be maintained? abroad or at home? Abroad, throughout all the nations of the earth our flag, our name, our credit are honored as never before. We do not, then, need the aid of Democratic leaders to maintain the national power abroad. And, if we may judge how they would maintain it in the future by the manner in which it was upheld by Buchanan and his advisers in the past, we should shudder at the thought of transferring the national power and confiding the maintenance of its honor to such hands. And it is quite certain that the opinions of these men as to State rights and their supremacy are substantially those of the men who control that party.

If it be meant by maintaining the national honor that it should be more effectually sustained at home by the protection of our own citizens, I agree that there the Republicans have been delinquent. But, from what cause? Our citizens have been massacred at New-Orleans, and generally throughout Louisiana, and more recently at Hamburg and in other portions of South Carolina, where—as elsewhere throughout the South—by the organization of rifle and other clubs, our Republicans, white and black, are threatened, not only with deprivation of their rights, but with the destruction of life itself, if they attempt the independent exercise of the elective franchise. A nation which fails to protect its citizens at home when thus threatened, is dishonored. And yet when the attempt is made by our Government, through its Attorney General, to give such advice and direction to the United States Marshals as in some degree to protect the citizen at the polls, the leaders of the Democratic Party, South and North, denounce the effort as unconstitutional, insisting that colored citizens are to be left to the mercy of armed men deeply interested in preventing them from attending the polls.

That our Government is bound to protect its citizens in the right to vote for members of Congress, no lawyer will venture to deny; and any person who has doubts upon that subject, can easily quiet them by referring to the fifty-eighth article of the Federalist, written by Alexander Hamilton, urging the adoption, by the States, of that portion of the Constitution which provided for this protection—he asserting that without it the General Government would be left without the power of self-preservation.

It is insisted, however, that if a change should not be made upon the grounds mentioned, the extravagance and public expenditure of which the Republican Party has been guilty require that the Government should be placed in other hands. Upon this subject it is well to look at the proof which was officially disclosed in June last, from which it appears that during the administration of Gen. Jackson $10 55 were lost upon $1,000 disbursed; $21 15 during the administration of Van Buren; $10 37 during that of Harrison; $8 34 during that of Polk; $7 64 during that of Taylor and Fillmore; $5 86 during that of Pierce; $6 98 during that of Buchanan; $1 41 only during that of Lincoln; 43 cents on $1,000 during that of Johnson, and for the first four years of President Grant's administration, but 40 cents; and for the second term thus far, but 26 cents, while in the Post Office Department, not included in the present statement, the loss on each $1,000 during Jackson's administration was $11 18, $36 19 in Van Buren's; but $1 39 during the first term of President Grant, and $1 83 during the second.

The past instructs accurately—practice being much more satisfactory than promises; and by reference to that we find that the loss by fraudulent misappropriation by officials has been constantly diminishing, and was never so trifling as during the last four years of Gen. Grant's administration. And when we consider that during the entire Republican administration, from 1861 to the present time, vast expenditures—exceeding many times that of any previous like number of years—have been made, (a part of them during a prolonged and wasteful war,) it is surprising that so little has been wrongfully taken from the national Treasury. If it be urged that the expenses of the Government have been greater under Republican rule, the answer is that the cost to each person for such expenses in 1860 was $1 91, while in 1875—assuming forty millions to have been the population—the cost was but $1 70; and, if we assume that 43,000,000 was our population, the cost was but $1 60 to each person. We, therefore, fail to see any probability that a change of administration will increase in the hearts of our people a love of the Union—or tend to establish a sound currency—or a better public credit—or, better, maintain the national honor; and we also fail to perceive that such a change would yield greater economy in the administration of the Government, or, better, prevent fraudulent appropriations of its revenues by officials.

But we are told, in addition to all these reasons for a change, that better men—statesmen better calculated to conduct the affairs of the Government—will be placed in charge of its interests if the Democratic Party succeeds to power in the coming election. Again the past instructs us, and we cannot but recur, under its teaching, to the infamy of that Democratic Administration which permitted our Government to be controlled by traitors, whose purpose was to destroy our nationality and degrade our flag. That was the last effort of Democrats to administer this Government, and what legacy did they leave to the Republican Party? An empty Treasury, unarmed regiments to resist treason, treasonable leaders in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, a North divided, through sympathy with the rebels, as illustrated by the course of Mr. Tilden, then an influential member of the Democratic Party, and now proposed for the Presidency of the United States.

What this legacy was, is disclosed when we remember that to restore the Union, to subject rebellion and reduce traitors to the discipline of the Constitution and laws, 2,600,401 men were called into the field, 95,085 of these were killed and 190,349 more died in the service. To these should be added one-third more as the number who died from diseases contracted in our armies—making in all a loss of some 450,000 men. In 1861 the entire sums paid for pensions was but $1,089,218 75. In 1874 this amount had swollen to over twenty-nine millions annually, while the national debt entailed upon us was some two hundred and five thousand millions—annually costing about one hundred and fifty millions of dollars.

If we are to estimate the men who, by the proposed change, are to become rulers by those who controlled the Democratic Party when it was last in power, we pray to be delivered from a course so intolerable. The labors and responsibilities which devolved upon the Republican Party when, under the leadership of Mr. Lincoln, it attempted to redeem the country from the terrible condition in which the Democratic Party had placed it are well known to our people. Thousands and tens of thousands of brave Democrats, abandoning and disregarding the doctrines, associations, and purposes of leaders of their party, joined the Union Armies; and, when, under the leadership of Gen. Grant, we were nearing the great end sought to be attained, these leaders, of whom Mr. Tilden was one, again appeared in a convention held at Chicago in 1864, to nominate one of their number for the Presidency. Their purpose was again to resume control of the nation, and to attain this they resolved that the experiment of war had proved a failure; that the rule of the Republican Party had been a succession of constitutional outrages upon the country, and they attempted by their influence to suspend the draft designed to reinforce our armies, and thus to paralyze the nation in its final struggle. They failed in this purpose. The war was continued, and finally ended by the surrender of Gen. Lee and his associate officers and the armies under them. Then commenced in Congress a further struggle to prevent the country from securing by constitutional guarantees the fruits of the war. The most determined resistance was made by leaders of the Democratic Party against the submission to the country of such amendments to the Constitution as were necessary to secure citizenship to the blacks, prevent repudiation of the national debt, the payment of the Confederate debt, or compensation to Southern men for the value of their slaves. And this opposition was continued in the halls of Congress, in the Legislatures of such of the States as were controlled by the Democratic Party, and, ultimately, in an attempt by the States of Ohio, New-Jersey, New-York, and Indiana, so soon as they came under Democratical control, to withdraw their assent to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, for the purpose of defeating the great purposes for which the war had been continued. In this, however, they failed; and, finally, after all these efforts, came the nomination of Gov. Seymour in 1868. I have referred to the frauds practiced in the City of New-York in the attempt to elect him. They failed of their purpose. But the enormity of these frauds was so great that to prevent their repetition, and to secure to citizens entitled to vote for members of the House of Representatives protection in so doing, acts of Congress were passed to guard against frauds at subsequent elections.

UNDER THE GUISE OF REFORM.

In 1872 another effort for supremacy was made by the Democratic Party, under the leadership of Mr. Greeley. This, also failed, and now, in 1876, we have the attempt repeated—not under a leader of patriotic antecedents—but under one associated from the beginning with secessionists sympathizing with treason, and doing what he dared to aid the rebellion. And, a strangely enough, we find this effort masked under the guise of "reform," superadded to which the garb of the patriot is also assumed; for the leaders of that party well know that without this disguise success at the North would be impossible. We are, however, significantly warned of their sentiments, of their hypocrisy, and of their purposes when we scrutinize with care how, under the mask of patriotism, by phrases designed to convey a double meaning, they attempt to imitate, by their platform utterances, those of the Republican platform adopted at Cincinnati. Take, for instance, that portion of the latter which declares that "the pledges which the nation has given to our soldiers and sailors must be fulfilled; and a grateful people will always hold those who imperiled their lives for the country's preservation in the kindest remembrance." That is a plain and simple tribute paid to the soldiers and sailors who subdued the rebellion, and a promise that a grateful people would always hold them in kindest remembrance for having thus imperiled their lives for their country. An attempt is made in the Democratic platform to convey the impression of a similar tribute and promise; but, when we remember that this was framed by, or in the interest of, the very men who fought us in the field, and who attempted, with arms in their hands, to overcome and destroy the armies of the Union, it would be absurd to suppose they would really unite in any such tribute or in any such promise. They did, however, resolve "that the soldiers and sailors of the Republic"—being careful not to distinguish between those North and those South, "and the widows and orphans of those who have fallen in battle," being careful not to discriminate between those slain when fighting for the Union and those who fell in the Confederate cause, "have a just claim upon the care and protection of their fellow-citizens." This deceptive phrase well illustrates many others in the platform put forth by the Democracy. We have not, however, time to do this, and I proceed, therefore, to consider briefly what is the real purpose of the Southern leaders who now control the Democratic Party.

We are told by their public speakers and by their press that in this canvass the Republican Party is disinterring dead issues—waving the "bloody shirt," and thus barking up a hypertree to people from the real questions before the country—and that in so doing hate and discord are being awakened and promoted between North and South. What issues thus designated are referred to, and what is meant by this charge of waving the "bloody shirt"? Do Republicans present dead issues when they insist that it is the purpose of leaders of the Democratic Party, so soon as they shall acquire legislative and executive control of the Government, to pass acts now before the House of Representatives, authorizing payments to Southern men who were rebels during the war, for all property used, occupied, taken, appropriated, or injured by the Union Armies? Is this a dead issue, or one forced upon the North as it must be, and method in which an issue can be presented to the country. Bills have been introduced into Congress by Southern members, expressly providing for such payment to an amount nearly if not quite equal to the national debt. Have we heard it suggested from any Democratic source—North or South—that it is not the purpose of that party thus to appropriate the revenues of the nation? and is such suggestion were made should it be credited by reflecting men, who know that the representatives of those whose claims are pressed constitute a large majority of the Democratic Party in the House, and control its action now, as they did before the war? This, therefore, is not a dead issue, unconcerned by the Republican Party, but one raised and distinctly presented by the action of Democratic leaders which must be met now, for after the election it may be too late.

LOYALTY THE PRICE OF CONCORD.

What other issue is said to have been invoked from the dead to confront them? They insist that the past should for the sake of national union and harmony be forgotten—or at least never referred to; and that the North should be content, and even rejoiced to see the hails of Congress swarming with the men who not only forced the South into rebellion, but led its armies in the field. If, in connection with such a spectacle, we could discern in the sentiments, speech, and conduct of these men, an abandonment of the doctrines which led to the rebellion—a hearty submission to the Constitution—a subjection, earnest and sincere to such of its amendments as were designed to secure rights of citizenship to the blacks, entire prompt payment of our national debt, and prevent repayment of the Confederate debt, and all legislation intended to obtain compensation for manumitted slaves—if this could be seen, I should feel that at length the North and South could fraternally unite in the government of the country, each accepting with cheerfulness the conditions imposed at the close of the war. But are we not warned in many ways, and with terrible earnestness, that the end for which we upon public opinion, and never can be cemented by civil war."

Now, gentlemen, both these ideas proceed upon the political theory that the government we live under is a confederacy. For a three years ago a greater man than Mr. Tilden, and a greater man than Mr. Buchanan—a man named Webster, from Massachusetts, [applause,] had a great debate with the secessionists and nullifiers of that day; and Mr. Webster laid it down as the corner-stone of the argument in these words: "That the Constitution of the United States is not a league or confederacy or compact between the people of the several States in their sovereign capacity, but is a government proper, founded on the adoption of the people, and creating direct relations between itself and individuals." And his eminent biographer, Mr. George Tickner Curtis, of whom I will only speak with respect, but who is now in the inconsistent attitude of supporting Mr. Tilden, in detailing this great speech of Mr. Webster's—greater than his reply to Hayne, the speech of 1833, a speech which in his works may be found under the title of "The Constitution not a Compact"—Mr. George Tickner Curtis, who, for his political consistency I greatly regret to say, is now supporting Mr. Tilden, says in the biography of Mr. Webster: "Perhaps there is no speech ever made by Mr. Webster that is so close in its reasoning. Whoever would understand that theory of the Constitution which regards it as the enactment of a fundamental law, must go to this speech to find its best and clearest exposition. Whoever would know the doctrine that enables the Government of the United States years later to call for, and to energies of a great population, strong enough to encounter, and to prevent the dismemberment of this Union by the secession attempted in 1861 and suppressed in 1865 must find it in the position maintained by Mr. Webster in his great speech in 1833." And I here say that there is not a line, or a sentiment, or a position, or an argument in that great speech of Mr. Webster's that is not to-day the cornerstone of the foundation of the Republican Party in this Union. [Applause.] And there is not a sentiment in that that is not absolutely at war with all the doctrines laid down by Mr. Tilden on this question of State rights—not one. [Applause.]

A NATION OR A CONFEDERACY?

Some gentlemen, I know, will say, and it is very natural they should, if they do not give the subject a little more than a superficial examination, that you are merely quarreling about terms. Suppose one party does call this a confederacy and the other a nation. A rose under another name smells as sweet, and the country is just as great under the one name as under the other. Ah! gentlemen, that is a terrible mistake. It was Mirabeau who told us that words are things; and they are very terrible things sometimes, and this is not a play upon words nor a mere difference as to terms. You show me a man that calls this country a confederacy, and I will show you a man who acknowledges his allegiance to be due to his State before it is due to the Federal Government. [Applause.] Show me a man that believes this is a confederacy and I will show you a man who has fully imbibed that fatal heresy that drove Virginia into the rebellion against her interests and against her wishes, and that made Robert E. Lee a rebel leader instead of a loyal soldier to the union of the States. [Applause.] Show me a man that calls this Government a nation, and I will show you one who believes that dearly and tenderly as he loves his State, much as you love New-York or as I love Maine, he puts his allegiance to his State second, and to the General Government first. [Applause.] We don't want any State flags in this country. I don't know whether you have got one in New-York; I should not know it if I should see it, and I am very sure you would not know the State flag of Maine, but we all know the flag of the Union. [Applause.] And you may to-day take the strongest Democratic State in this Union, which, in the boastful dispatches of the last three weeks, appears to be Georgia, where, with 40,000 more Republicans that there are Democrats in that State, they can give a Democratic majority of 80,000—take Georgia as the strongest Democratic State in this Union, and I make bold to declare here that outside of the Custom-houses and forts of the United States, you cannot find the National flag floating in Georgia anywhere. I make bold to say that; and I make bold further to say that you cannot hold a Republican meeting in any considerable town in Georgia, and attempt to march the streets flying the flag of the United States, to the music of any national air, without creating a riot and bloodshed in that State. [Applause.] And that is what they call a Democratic victory, a Democratic victory based upon trampling under foot the nationality of the country, and the memories of victories in the South to-day are, in direct hostility to the national spirit of this Government.

Now, I this Summer took occasion, during a period of some leisure, to examine for myself something about this question of confederacy and nation, and at some pains I read every message of every President from Washington down to Grant. I felt anxious to find out what the old patriarchs and patriots, the founders of the Government, had to say on this question, and I took, say the first twenty years of the Government—Washington, Adams, Jefferson—moderate Federalist, extreme Federalist, Republican, Democrat, representing all the phases and forms of the political opinion of that day, and I found that these three great old worthies, the founders of our Government, although in their blessed country of ours in their messages 115 times as a "nation," and not once as a "confederacy." [Applause.] And so with Madison, Monroe, John Quincy Adams, and Jackson, and Van Buren; and I came clear down, down, down, away to the melancholy days where lie the remains of the administrations of Pierce and Buchanan. [Laughter.] before in a national document emanating from the Executive Department of this Government I found this country referred to as a confederacy. Buchanan and Pierce began in their messages to call it a confederacy, and then began the laying of the egg which hatched out the treason which brought on the rebellion, and it is forever connected with that idea. [Applause.]

I object, therefore, to the word confederacy. I object to its being applied to this country. I object to the phrase confederate. I don't intend to be called one. It is a bad word. It is associated forever with a dishonored and a lost cause, seeking now revival through the instrumentality of the Democratic Party. It is a bad word in the dictionary. You never speak of confederates in goodness; it is always confederates in crime. [Laughter.] Men associate for virtue and confederate for villainy.

WORE REPUBLICANS MURDERED THAN FELL IN THREE GREAT BATTLES.

Now, gentlemen, I have not been indulging in what is popularly known as shaking the bloody shirt. I have preferred to dwell upon the Democratic Party as it now is, presenting to you as nearly as I may the spirit shown by them, the purposes intended by them, the measures covered by them in their present power in the House of Representatives, and I have desired in that presentation to ask you, as thinking men and responsible voters, if with the small modicum of power with which they have been intrusted in the House of Representatives, and intrusted at a time when they had every temptation and every impulse to be prudent and wary and cautious—if, with all these influences making them tend to prudence, they have acted as I have shown you they have, what do you suppose will be their course with a President of their choice in the chair and with the Senate of the United States acting in harmony with the House? If it be thus in the green tree, what, in God's name, might it not prove in the dry? [Applause.] But as to the bloody shirt. The shaking of the bloody shirt, of course, as has been well said, is not the crime; it is the making it bloody; and it will be shaken in this country just so long as it is rendered bloody. [Applause.] Now, they tell you that they had a peaceful election in Mississippi last year, and they recovered that State from the Republicans. Mississippi, upon any registry of voters, is Republican by an overwhelming majority. It is as strongly Republican nearly as Vermont, in the ratio, and they last year carried it for a Democratic Governor, they seized the Legislature, they have all the power, and they tell you very defiantly and with a great flourish of pride in the matter, that it was a peaceful election. Well, I wish to put it on record here and take the whole responsibility for the statement in its exactness, that at what they call a peaceful election there were more men murdered—that in the campaign, I mean, leading to and connected with the Democratic triumph in Mississippi—there were more men murdered than ever lost their lives at all the elections, Municipal, State, and national, that have ever been held in all the free States from Maine to California, in all the time of the Federal Government from George Washington down to Grant. [Applause.] Take all the election rows and riots and scrimmages and disturbances which in times of high excitement you are liable to have at the polls, and especially in large cities, where the population is dense and the elements disorderly at times, and put them all together, at all the elections in all the free States, from the formation of the Federal Government to this hour, they will not aggregate one-half, no, not one-fourth, the number that lost their lives in that peaceful election in Mississippi last year. I want to put on record another thing, that since the surrender of Gen. Lee—I state this from official data—I am not making a loose or random assertion—I am stating it from evidence that would be accepted in any court, a little stricter evidence than that with which it is proposed to assail the Treasury of the United States for war claims—I am putting it on evidence, and evidence that would have been accumulative a hundred fold if the men who could have testified freely had dared to testify—I desire to put another fact, on equally reliable data, on record, and that is this: that since the war closed in 1865 there have been more men murdered in the South for political opinions—and that is, murdered for being Republicans—there have been more men in those eleven years murdered in the South for being Republicans than fell on the Union side in the three bloodiest battles of the war.

I make that statement on the official data, and yet nothing is more common than to sneer at the "bloody shirt;" and a man who pretends to discuss the validity and the integrity of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments, and to insist that they form the great groundwork of this contest in which we are engaged, is rather laughed down in Democratic audiences and in Democratic newspapers; that is a question which we are forcing upon the people that does not belong here; that the South wants peace, and we who talk about outrages that are inflicted upon the poor negroes down there are shaking the bloody shirt and merely trying to get up an excitement to hide some more formidable issue which they think we wish to avoid.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL FRANCHISE CANNOT BE TRAMPLED DOWN.

Well, gentlemen, all I have to say about this is simply that the Government if it intends to be honest, and I hope it does so intend, is bound either to repeal and annul the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments or to enforce them. [Applause.] For there is one thing you cannot stand, and that is to allow these amendments to remain in your Constitution and quietly permit them to be trampled under foot and made of non-effect. [Applause.] That this Government can't stand. Let me tell you, gentlemen, that can never be endured in this country, and the man who thinks he can do that with safety in New-York has either never read history or read it in vain. The man who thinks that any constitutional franchise wherewith he is clothed enables or empowers him to trample upon the constitutional franchise of another man makes a great and grievous mistake. [Applause.] The Government of the United States is powerful; none more so on the globe, [cheers,] but it is not powerful enough to do wrong. [Cheers.] And one of the most magnificent passages containing an instruction that should never be forgotten, bearing with powerful parallelism upon our Constitution, is found in the declaration of Mr. Burke before the proud tribunal of the British House of Commons when in the impeachment of Warren Hastings he pleaded for the rights of the down-trodden Hindoo in India, and standing there representing more of talent and statesmanship than any man of England for a century; he said to that body which represented all there was of British greatness that British power was not strong enough or mighty enough to trample in the dust the humblest Hindoo at the banks of the Ganges, and yet preserve the rights of the proudest peer of the realm on the banks of the Thames. [Cheers.] And I say to you, gentlemen, that contains the lesson of this hour, because the United States is not strong enough to disregard the Constitutional rights of the most ignorant negro in Alabama and Louisiana, and guarantee that of the wealthiest man in New-York or Pennsylvania. [Applause.] "Peace be within thy walls, oh, Jerusalem! and prosperity within thy palaces. But remember that the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth, the friend of the friendless, the always helper of the helpless."

Mr. Blaine concluded amid loud cheers.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

Hon. A. W. Tenney was next introduced. As a New-Yorker, he said, he congratulated the meeting on the reception which it had given to the man from Maine. The speaker proceeded to state at length his objections to Mr. Tilden as a candidate for the Presidency. He was opposed to him, he said, because he was a Democrat, and because he possessed all the particular characteristics which that name implied; because during the terrible decade of blood he was no friend of the nation and of the boys in blue; because his surroundings were bad, and because he was a political sham. The grounds of his opposition to Mr. Tilden rested in the first instance on Democratic authority, and in support of his proposition he quoted from the Cincinnati Enquirer of June 5 and 6 the utterances of August Belmont, the Brooklyn Argus, and the Chicago Times. He supplemented these proofs with quotations from Mr. Tilden's confidential letters. The man whom the Democrats presented as candidate for the Presidency of the United States did not see fit to give his name that the nation might live.

Hon. Silas B. Dutcher was the next speaker. He also, in the first instance, paid a compliment to Mr. Blaine, whom he described as the "Harry Clay of the Republican Party." He (Mr. Dutcher) was not, he said, one of those who had any apology to make for the Republican Party; he was not there to defend it, for it needed no defense. Its record was the record of the country during fifteen years when were the most important of the country's history. Mr. Dutcher exposed Mr. Tilden's pretense of having saved the State of New-York over seven million dollars, and in conclusion impressed upon the Republican Party the importance of the work which lay before it.

At the conclusion of Mr. Dutcher's remarks there were loud cries for Hon. D. E. Sickles, but he had previously left the hall.

Rev. Henry Highland Garnett was then presented, but, declining gracefully to make a speech, simply advised the hunters to separate, and ponder over and well digest what they had heard.

THE OUTSIDE MEETING.

IMMENSE CROWDS—A GRAND DISPLAY—SPEECHES BY SILAS B. DUTCHER, DANIEL S. RIDDLE, AND MR. BLAINE.

The spacious square in front of Cooper Institute was filled by thousands of enthusiastic listeners to the speeches made in favor of the Republican national and State tickets. A mammoth stand, three times as large as those ordinarily erected for outside meetings, extended along the space on the south side of the square, and was handsomely decorated with flags, streamers, and Chinese lanterns. The square was brilliantly illuminated by calcium lights, making it as bright as mid-day, and a grand display of fireworks added to the immense demonstration.

The stand was occupied by prominent representatives of Republican district associations, Boys in Blue, and kindred organizations. Hon. Jacob M. Patterson, Chairman of the Republican Central Committee, called the meeting to order and presided.

MR. DUTCHER'S SPEECH.

Hon. Silas B. Dutcher, of Brooklyn, was received with enthusiastic cheers for the "redemption of old Kings County."

During Mr. Dutcher's speech a Democrat called out for three cheers for the Democracy. "Yes," responded Mr. Dutcher, "do you want to know what Democracy is? You have it pure and unadulterated here in New-York City. Grant has paid off $425,000,000 of the public debt, while your City debt has grown from $38,000,000 to over $125,000,000 under the control of Tilden and his friends." [Applause.] Every man who fought under the "Stars and Bars" was a Democrat, and it was a Democrat who hauled down the American flag. If Democrats did not want these crimes remembered against them, they should not exhibit the spirit they always betrayed when they fancied they were about to resume their long-lost power. [Applause.] There had been good men in the Democratic Party, and 400,000 of them voted for Grant when he was first nominated. 500,000 when he was again nominated, and 600,000 of the honest men now in the Democratic Party would vote for Rutherford B. Hayes, whose "bloody shirt" was riddled by rebel bullets on the field of battle, when Samuel J. Tilden, who could not find time to sign a call for a Union meeting, was writing a long letter to induce Secretary Cameron to invest in "my brother's essence of coffee." [Cheers and laughter.] Hendricks voted against men and money to put down the rebellion, and against the constitutional amendments made necessary by the war, and was of the same opinion now as he was then. Democrat, Tilden's candidate for Governor of the State of New-York, was a man who had been dismissed from his district attorneyship by the President for making fraudulent mileage charges, and he immediately turned a "Reformer" to lead the Democratic Party, and was made Lieutenant Governor of the Empire State. [Applause and laughter.] Mr. Dutcher closed by predicting that the State of New-York, which had always, since 1860, voted for a Republican President, when its vote was honestly cast, would, on the 7th of November, cast its thirty-five electoral votes for Hayes and Wheeler, and true reform. [Applause.]

DANIEL S. RIDDLE'S REMARKS.

The Chairman next introduced Mr. Daniel S. Riddle, of this City, who addressed the assembly at length. He said that the great issue in the present campaign was whether or not this United States Government should be handed over to its most bitter enemies. The rebel elements and the copperhead elements which caused and sustained the war were at the present day in the Democratic Party, and these elements were striving hard for the possession of the Government. Every one of those who chuckled over rebel victories, and who dropped their lip when they heard of Union victories during that terrible war, were to-day shrieking for "Tilden and Reform." Samuel J. Tilden was even worse than any of these men, for he had cheated the Government out of his income tax.

MR. BLAINE OUT OF DOORS.

Soon after Mr. Riddle concluded, the announcement was made that Mr. Blaine would in a few moments be ready to address the immense crowd of people that had by this time assembled, and as that gentleman appeared on the platform, he was greeted with cheer after cheer. The greatest enthusiasm was manifested, and the chairman's voice could scarcely be heard as he introduced the orator of the evening.

Mr. Blaine, as soon as the applause had subsided, said that his strength was hardly equal to the task of making two speeches in one evening. He wished, however, to say to them as voters of New-York that the contest in this Centennial year was whether or not every man who had a right to vote should do so. The next question was whether the men who had preserved this Government should control it, or whether it should be given into the hands of that party that had attempted to destroy it. The Republican Party had taken the ground that men of all classes, be they black, white, of American or foreign birth, Catholic or Protestant, should have the right to vote, and do it freely. They wanted no man intimidated because of his nationality or color. If, in the coming election, every man that was entitled to do so should vote, did any one among his hearers think for a moment that there was a single Democrat in the country who had any doubt as to the result. No, there was not; for on the night of Nov. 7 the Republican Party would have gained a victory. Mr. Blaine expressed his regret at being unable to address them at greater length, and bid them a cordial good night, after which he retired from the platform amid vociferous applause. As he took his departure the crowd, while dispersing, cheered him lustily.

THE PENNSYLVANIA REPUBLICANS.

RINGING ADDRESS FROM THE STATE COMMITTEE.

HEAD-QUARTERS REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE, PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 14, 1876.

To the People of Pennsylvania:

Eleven years after the overthrow of the rebellion we find the men who forced it upon the country again preparing to seize the Government. It is the old Confederate Army united upon the old Confederate heresy. They have never abandoned their cherished idea—they still think with Mr. Tilden that ours is a confederacy, and not a nation. They have made him their candidate because he never abandoned his desired conviction that "the Constitution of the United States is only organized revolution," and that "any State has the right to snap the tie at its pleasure."

This was the heresy that fired the rebel gun from Charleston against Sumter in 1861; and this is the heresy they are remarshaled in 1876 to re-establish.

To this end they have crushed out Republican opinion in every Southern State. To this end they have made the white Republican an outcast and the black Republican a vassal. To this end coercion of Republicans is their stern discipline. By force, their Confederate heresy is again the cement to make a solid South.

The Confederate Army is far more united to-day in the new effort to seize the Government than it was fifteen years ago in the mad effort to destroy it. To-day treason is aided by their sympathizers in the North. They have concentrated the struggle upon a single issue—the revolution of the Government. They stuk every other question out of sight, and therein they teach us our duty.

Shall they recover by the ballot, conferred upon them by Republican magnanimity, what they lost on the battle-field in conflict with the people they betrayed?

We have met and vanquished their assaulting columns five times since the first Tuesday of September, 1876—in Vermont, Maine, Colorado, Ohio, and Indiana—gaining ten members of Congress, electing five Legislatures, including that of Indiana, which even the rebel raiders from Kentucky were not able to capture.

Democratic victories in the South are only evidences of Democratic terrorism over Republicans. Sixty-five thousand Democratic majority in Georgia means 65,000 rebel shot-guns at the polls.

Three weeks only are left to us to meet the new crisis forced upon us by these men. What will Pennsylvania do? Our enemies, confident of successful coercion all over the South, have resolved to make another attack upon this great State. They leave the South in the safe custody of the reorganized Confederate Army, and they are now, as in 1863, marching upon Pennsylvania in determined array, and their rebel yell already is heard within our limits.

Let us be prepared for them. Our great Commonwealth has always been the stronghold of nationality. During the war she gave her treasures in men and money to the cause of her country. Standing between the two sections, she has always been the foe of sectionalism. She stood by Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, and Meade, during all the struggles of the war. The people believed that when Vicksburg and Gettysburg fell on the 4th of July, 1863, the great work of restoration was accomplished, and the rebellion was dead, but they are now brought face to face with a revolution as dangerous as the rebellion itself.

When fifteen States can be more unified by the shot-gun and the bludgeon than they were by armed secession itself, and when this consolation is rendered by the suppression of free speech, a free ballot, and free schools, its success must end in the Republican experiment. Those men tried to fight their way out of the Union at an incalculable sacrifice of human life, and now they are trying within the Union, by new forms of violence and fraud, to re-establish the dogmas supposed to be destroyed on the battle-field. All they ask is a sufficient centralization from the free States to complete their programme.

It is in this Centennial year, when Pennsylvania is inviting all the nations to her hospitalities, and proffering encouragement and kindness to her Southern sisters, that the Confederates advance upon her borders to make another effort for the heresy which originated and prolonged the rebellion.

Pennsylvania demands "peace and unity," but she commands them as the result of cheerful obedience to just law, and not as the sullen submission compelled by the officers of the law.

Pennsylvania demands industrial and commercial prosperity; but she knows that these are the fruits of peaceful and orderly society, based upon honesty and right, and cannot grow out of the anarchy and chaos threatened in a solid South. Pennsylvania will first have justice, then prosperity. Has the country no road to prosperity but that which disgraces the scars of the living soldiers and dishonors the graves of the dead?

Pennsylvania will have purity in public administration, but she wants none of the illusive promises of "reform" made by Tilden and ilus rated by Tweed and the disciples of Tammany Hall.

Men of Pennsylvania, upon you rests the responsibility—yours is the absorbing obligation. Will you "hold the fort?"

By order of the committee.

HENRY M. HOYT, Chairman.

A. WILSON NORRIS, Secretary.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE LOYAL CAUSE—LETTER FROM GEN. RUFUS SAXTON.

FORT LEAVENWORTH, Kan., Sept. 19, 1876.

To the Editor of the Columbia (S. C.) Union-Herald:

DEAR SIR: The recent action of the Republican Convention at Columbia in giving an almost unanimous indorsement to the wise and faithful administration of Gov. Chamberlain is worthy of all commendation. Since my service during the war as military Governor of South Carolina I have been an interested observer of her political career. The steadfast allegiance her people have given to the party of freedom is a good omen for the future of the State; and now when that party has inscribed reform and honest administration on its banners it ought to triumph. If the freedmen come forward in November and re-elect Gov. Chamberlain by an overwhelming majority, so practical an illustration of their capacity for self-government would gladden the hearts of all the friends of freedom and good government, and would furnish the best answer they could possibly make to those who assert that they are not fit to be trusted with the ballot. The coming election in South Carolina will be one of the most important to its future well-being ever held in the Palmetto State. A Republican defeat would be disastrous to the best interests of all the people, white as well as black. A Republican triumph—another grand step forward in the path way of her progress.

Yours respectfully, RUFUS SAXTON.

A BIRD INVASION.

The Charleston (S. C.) Journal of Thursday last says: "The city was swarmed last night with several species of birds, some resembling very much the dove, but considerably smaller than that bird, and other small birds, about the size of the sparrow, resembling nonpareils. These little visitors made their appearance about 9 o'clock in the evening in large numbers all over the city. They could be seen skimming the pavements and lodging at the corners of the doors and windows. One gentleman in Market street caught twenty-six in his store in a short time and caged them in his show-case. The Journal of Commerce office was attacked by them, and the windows of the composing-room had to be shut down to keep them out. Sea Captains say that they indicate that there has been a fearful storm in some locality and that these birds have been driven from their abode by the storm. They are evidently a species of bird from afar off and not accustomed to our climate, as they appear to be very much at a loss here."

A WRESTLING MATCH.

A FINE CONTEST AT CENTRAL PARK GARDEN.

THE MATCH BETWEEN COL. JAMES H. M'LAUGHLIN AND JACOB H. MARTIN—A FINE EXHIBITION OF COLLAR AND ELBOW WRESTLING—M'LAUGHLIN THE WINNER.

The wrestling contest last evening at Central Park Garden was witnessed by at least eight hundred persons. The contestants were Col. James H. McLaughlin, champion, and Jacob H. Martin, both of Michigan. Doubts were expressed by some present as to the genuineness of the match, but that it was a bona fide affair is unquestionable, the stakes being $500 a side and the championship. Twice before the men had met; each time they struggled in vain efforts to win, and both matches were pronounced a draw. There was, on both occasions, considerable partisan feeling manifested by the friends of either man, and it was to escape their annoying manifestations that the wrestlers came from Detroit to this City, to decide who was the better man. Some half hour after the promised time both men made their appearance on a platform where other and far more pleasing struggles have taken place. In personal appearance the two men are grand specimens of the human form. It would be difficult to determine which one presented the more perfect physical frame. Equal in height—six feet one inch in their stocking feet—of the same weight, 224 pounds—they were to all except the closest observer the exact physical counterparts of each other. But to the student of anotomical structure, a difference was perceptible. There was a greater depth of chest in Martin; his torso was the more superb of the two; but McLaughlin's arms and legs were a trifle the largest, and his lower limbs were more firmly placed. In this respect he seemed superior, though both were far better developed physically and in better proportions than perhaps any other two men in ten thousand. Their dress was neat and certainly cool enough for all purposes. They wore flesh-colored tights, rubber slippers, knit vests, and breech-clouts, the one chocolate, the other of a crimson color. Additional to this scanty costume each had on a short jacket, with loose sleeves, which was worn unbuttoned. It was to the collar of this shortened garment that the right hand of either man was clinched, while the left grasped the sleeve at the elbow.

The conditions of the match being announced, and with Mr. Harry Hill as referee, the struggle commenced. Instantly every muscle of their bodies was brought into active exercise. The hardened muscles of the arms and of the legs were strained almost to their utmost tension. To one not familiar with the sport their proceedings were at first rather uninteresting, but after a few minutes their determined efforts were recognized by every one present. McLaughlin pushed the struggle from the start. Martin was careful and cautious, but, despite his every effort, the champion succeeded in securing an inside crook with his right leg firmly locked on Martin's left, and, although the latter put forth all of his great strength to prevent a fall, McLaughlin, with an excellent application of the deltoid muscles, forced his opponent backward until he was past his equilibrium and was compelled to succumb. The Colonel won the fall in just nine minutes.

There were eleven minutes of rest, and then the giants resumed their struggle. Quick work followed, and lock followed lock in rapid succession, only to be broken by wondrous skill and strength. Presently Martin assumed the offensive, and with rapid strokes sought to confuse his skilled and more practiced opponent. McLaughlin's defensive tactics were excellent, but suddenly Martin took advantage of an opening, and almost before any one could realize the fact, the champion was lying flat upon the carpet. Martin had thrown his left foot to the outside of the Colonel's right leg, and then, with a sudden use of flexors and extensors, aided of course by the massive biceps and triceps of his upper arm, had quickly flung McLaughlin to the floor. It was well accomplished, and withal so suddenly that everybody was astonished when they saw the champion upon his back. The round lasted 14 minutes, 22 seconds.

Twenty minutes, less two, were spent in the rest, and then they clinched again. McLaughlin at once began to force the work, and the knowing ones whispered, "They'll eat it now; you'll see some fine work presently." Time and again he forced himself entirely to Martin's arms and with the aid of the spectacular major muscles sought to bear him backward. It was at such times as these that the external muscles of Martin's abdomen suffered the most. He exerted all his great strength—and he is said to be able to lift 1,300 pounds with either hand—to free himself, but not without a terrific struggle did he succeed. Then McLaughlin got an outside lock and was near placing Martin upon the floor; but the latter broke the lock and, amid great applause, once more faced his friendly opponent. Then came the final struggle. The Colonel, stooping almost to the floor, crept closer and closer in upon his opponent. In vain the latter put forth his immense strength to prevent an approach. McLaughlin was determined to win, and as he had a good advantage he continued his efforts with all his skill. Presently he was fairly under Martin and with strong arms was attempting to lift him upward and backward to the floor. The two men were in such a position that the slightest mistake would lose the match. For the first time a look of doubt was noticed upon the face of Martin; he realized his position and already was defeated. The audience stood up to witness the closing struggle; they saw the champion secure an inside heel lock, and then the strong man went down. Col. McLaughlin had won the fall, the money, and all the attendant honors.

CHIVALRY AT THE CENTENNIAL.

PREPARATIONS FOR MARYLAND, DELAWARE, VIRGINIA, AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—A TOURNAMENT, WITH A QUEEN OF LOVE AND BEAUTY TO CROWN THE VICTORS.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 16.—The preparations for the State day celebrations of Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, and the District of Columbia are in course of completion, and include the following ceremonies: At 10:30 o'clock Gov. Cochrane, of Delaware, will enter the grounds with a military escort, and accompanied by the Mayor and City Council of Wilmington, members of the State Legislature, members of Congress, and other distinguished citizens of the State. The visitors will proceed to the Delaware State building, where they will be welcomed by the Centennial management. At 11 o'clock, Gov. Carroll, of Maryland, with his staff, and escorted by the Fifth and Sixth Maryland Regiments, will arrive at the grounds, and at 12 o'clock the authorities of that State, and all visiting Marylanders will assemble in the Judges' Hall, when the Orator for the State, Hon. J. V. L. Findlay, will speak. At 1 o'clock the Centennial tournament will commence on the camp grounds at the foot of George's Hill. Virginia, notwithstanding the disinclination of the State authorities to officiate in an official capacity, will doubtless be represented by thousands of her people.

The prizes to be awarded the successful competitors in the tournament were to-day placed on exhibition in a large glass case near the music stand in the Main Building. They comprise a pair of pearl-handled, silver-plated Remington revolvers; bronze statuette of a knight; an elaborately ornamented centre piece, the bowl being of crystal, and the pedestal of silver; initial ring, gold, the silver ornamented to match, and the goblets of chased silver with gold medallions; a double-barrelled shot-gun, with ammunition and case complete; a silver-plated, gilt and enamelled fruit dish, and a tea set (twelve pieces.) In the evening the successful knight will be crowned in the Judges' Hall by the Queen of Love and Beauty, the name of this lady being kept a secret until after the coronation.

An address on Arkansas, her resources, industries, and progress, was delivered by Hon. Daniel Walker, of that State, this morning, in the Judges' Hall.

The preparations for the brilliant pyrotechnic display on Wednesday evening, are being prosecuted by the workmen of Brock & Co., of London, on the site of the former display, on George's Hill. The illumination of the grounds will be on a more extensive scale than upon the evening of Pennsylvania day, 400 colored lights being used throughout the illuminated area.

The Admission Bureau report the attendance at the Main Exhibition Building to-day, at fifty cents, 73,903, at twenty-five cents, 120, and at the five stock exhibition, 666.

STRIKE OF LABORERS AVERTED.

NASHUA, Oct. 16.—The apprehended trouble with the discharged laborers on the Keene and Nashua Railroad has been averted. The towns along the route have cashed their due bills at a discount often per cent., and most of the men left this evening.

EXPLOSION OF A GASOLINE TANK.

WORCESTER, Oct. 16.—To-night at the Highland Military Academy the vapor from a gasoline tank, used for making gas for the Academy buildings, ignited, and an explosion followed. C. B. Metcalf, proprietor and principal of the academy; Edwin Morse, a carpenter, and John Morse, a laborer, were standing over the tank at the time, and all of them were thrown into the air and quite seriously burned. Mr. Metcalf being the most severely injured. The earth around the tank was thrown up, but none of the buildings were injured, and only the three persons named were affected by the explosion. Mr. Metcalf and his assistants were examining the tank for a leak, and the vapor was ignited by their lantern.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

THE CABINET—THE CENTENNIAL ADDRESS OF THE IRISH MEMBERS OF THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT—NAVY MATTERS—THE MCPHERSON MONUMENT — THE SAFE BURGLARY CASE.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—There was a special Cabinet meeting to-day of two hours' duration, at which all departments except the War Department were represented. The Interior and State Departments were represented by Assistant Secretaries Gorham and Cadwallader respectively. The meeting was for the purpose of attending to a mass of miscellaneous business that had accumulated during the Summer. The subject of Gov. Chamberlain's request for the assistance of the General Government in preserving the public peace in South Carolina was not considered, but will be at the regular session to-morrow, at which Secretary Cameron will be in attendance.

The President will receive the Centennial address of congratulation from the people of Ireland to-morrow. The address will be presented by Mr. O'Connor Power and Mr. Parnell, Irish members of Parliament, and will be read in the President's office in the White House at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The following balances were in the United States Treasury at the closing hour to-day: Currency, $13,322,971; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $38,390,000; coin, (including $30,745,000 in coin certificates,) $68,530,504; outstanding legal tenders, $368,494,740.

The President has recognized Samuel E. Spring as Vice Consul of Uruguay, at Portland, Me., and Arthur Carroll, Vice Consul for Uruguay for Boston and Salem.

Paymaster Francis J. Swan is ordered to the Boston Navy-yard, relieving Paymaster W. W. Woodhull, detached and ordered to settle his accounts. Ensign Nathan Sargent is ordered to examination for promotion.

The Navy Department is advised of the arrival at Valparaiso, Chili, on the 4th of September, of the United States flag-ship Richmond. The Richmond expected to be at Montevideo about the 15th of October.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $724,816 29, and from Customs $371,608 89.

Theodore B. Potter was to-day appointed Internal Revenue Storekeeper for the First District of Connecticut.

Quartermaster General Tyner will leave Washington to-night for New-York City on official business, and will stop in Philadelphia for two days on his return trip. Second Assistant Postmaster General Grady returned to-day from Indiana and resumed his official duties.

The President to-day appointed Walde Burns Postmaster at Sherman, Texas, vice Frederick W. Sumner deceased.

The programme of exercises for the Society of the Army of the Tennessee and the unveiling of Gen. McPherson's statue is complete. There will be a civic and military display here on the 18th inst., and the departments will be closed after 12 o'clock in order to allow their employes to join in the exercises. The District Militia and Marine Corps will serve as a military escort, and the band from Fort McHenry, Baltimore Harbor, is ordered here for the occasion. Gen. David Hunter, of the United States Army, will act as Grand Marshal. It is expected that the display will surpass anything of a like character which has been witnessed here since President Grant's inauguration.

The bond given at Wilmington, Del., by Richard Harrington, for his appearance at the present term of the Criminal Court of the District of Columbia, to answer the charges of conspiracy against him in connection with the safe burglary case, has been received by the Clerk of that court. The amount of the bond is $10,000, and the sureties are S. M. Harrington, of Wilmington, and Henry Ridgely, of Dover.

TROTTING AT MYSTIC PARK.

SMUGGLER DISTANCED BY GREAT EASTERN—THE FREE TO ALL WON BY COMEE.

BOSTON, Oct. 16.—Three thousand people visited Mystic Park this afternoon to witness the first of the three races which have been arranged for between Smuggler and Great Eastern, the winner to receive the gate money. The pools sold at $40 to $20 on Smuggler, who behaved badly, however, and was distanced in the second heat. The following is a summary:

Great Eastern	2	1
Smuggler	1	dis.

Time—2:23, 2:24½.

Following this a free to all race took place for a purse of $500; $250 to the first horse, $125 to the second, $75 to the third, and $50 to the fourth, of which the following is a summary:

Comee	1	1	1
Bella	2	2	2
Annie Collins	3	4	4
Bonner	4	3	5
Maybird	6	6	3
Hannah D	5	5	6

Time—2:26, 2:26½, 2:23¾.

BY MAIL AND TELEGRAPH.

The Pacific Mail steamer Granada sailed from San Francisco, for Panama, yesterday.

B. F. Nourse, of Boston, has declined to serve on the Silver Commission, owing to business engagements.

The total number of interments at Savannah on Sunday was fifteen, of which eight were yellow fever victims.

The Democrats of the First District of Orange County have nominated Nathaniel B. Woodhull for the Assembly.

The Ross-Brayley scull race at St. John, N. B., was postponed yesterday on account of unfavorable weather.

The Republicans of the Twenty-fourth District of Pennsylvania have nominated Dr. W. S. Shallenberger, of Beaver, for Congress.

John Jefferson, night watchman, of Hamilton, Ontario, who was shot some days ago by an American named Alden, died last night. Alden has been arrested.

Four more illicit distillers have been taken to St. Louis from South-eastern Missouri by United States Marshal Wheeler, and, in default of bail, committed to jail.

Frank Landors, who was arrested on suspicion of being the murderer of the Trim family at Bucksport, Me., has been discharged. The evidence is very strong against E. M. Smith, who is now in custody.

The body of Miss Harriet D. Williams, who was formerly a teacher in Boston, was found in Charles River near Cambridge Bridge, Boston, yesterday afternoon with a flat-iron tied to the neck. It is an undoubted case of suicide.

Robert Brydges, a brakeman on the Grand Trunk freight train bound westward, fell from the engine-tender, at Ailsa Craig, Ontario, while trying to reach the top of a freight car on Sunday morning, and had his head severed from his body.

The report of the Board of Health of the District of Columbia shows that during the month of September there were 349 deaths—7 less than in September of last year. As usual, consumption leads the list of causes of death, 37 persons having died of that disease; diarrhœa and cholera infantum each caused 19 deaths; 124 deaths were from zymotic diseases, which are caused by decomposing wood pavements, bad sewerage, imperfect drainage, &c.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

Last evening at 8 o'clock a fire was discovered in a barn adjoining the house of Samuel Forbes, in East Haven, Conn., just across Tomlinson's bridge, which destroyed two dwelling houses occupied by Samuel Forbes, Millett Johnson, and Charles Andie, three large barns, cattle sheds, and outbuildings, seventy tons of hay, 400 bushels of corn in the car, a fine bull and a calf, several cords of wood, and several tons of coal. All these were owned by Samuel Forbes, whose loss is $15,000; insured for $9,000. The next house, known as the "Old Stone House," built in 1767, was saved with great difficulty. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

A fire on Sunday at Mendota, Ill., destroyed a number of buildings, causing a loss of about $22,000, which is nearly covered by insurance. D. Black, a dry goods and clothing dealer, is the heaviest loser.

A block of three-story buildings on Front street, Everett, Mass., was burned on Sunday. Mr. Wood, a manufacturer of sewer-pipe, lost considerable. The total loss is $8,000; partially insured.

The house, barn, shed, and other outbuildings of E. T. Nichols were burned yesterday at Corinna, Me., together with furniture, hay, and farm implements. The loss is unknown and not insured.

Senator BLAINE addressed a very large audience last evening with excellent effect. His speech was chiefly devoted to an explanation and exposure of the doings of the House of Representatives at its last session, showing the overwhelming influence exerted by the ex-Confederates in that body, and the strenuous efforts made to secure the repeal of the Federal law for the protection of the suffrage. He was accorded a most enthusiastic reception, and spoke with all his accustomed vigor.

That the system of terrorism which the Southern Democrats are employing to build up a "solid South" is not confined to one State, or applied only to one race, private letters received by mercantile houses from their agents and correspondents clearly prove. Politicians are often led unconsciously into exaggeration; newspaper correspondents may be accused of partisan bias; but the testimony of resident merchants, and of business men traveling through the South, with none but business objects in view, is surely trustworthy so far as it deals with positive knowledge. We have recently seen with what fury testimony of this nature is resented by the Charleston Democrats, who threaten to drive from the city any merchant or mechanic who transmits to the North evidence of the proscription which prevails. Extracts from private letters are sent to us continually, all telling of the vigilance with which Northern business men are watched, and of the ruin and danger that would attend the authorship of these exposures if discovered. The traveling representative of a Cincinnati firm reveals a similar condition of affairs in Mississippi, where the Northern man who dares to avow himself a Republican is exposed to perils scarcely less than those which prevailed when the slave-power was supreme. The proscriptive spirit is also quite as bad in Texas and other parts of the South. The battle to be fought out in the South is, therefore, not simply a battle between white and black, or, as the Democrats choose to state the case, between intelligence and ignorance. It is a conflict between a brutal despotism and the common rights of American citizenship, and it extends to the social and business relations of every-day life as well as to the exercise of political privileges.

The speech delivered by Mr. STOUGHTON at Albany last night is, like his recent letter, full of hard hits at the record of Mr. TILDEN and his party, at the dishonesty of their canvass, and at the policy which their elevation to power would inaugurate. Mr. TILDEN'S connection with the election frauds in this City in 1868 is presented truly, and as part of the evidence which identifies him with the Tammany Ring in the hey-day of its power. His double-faced and cowardly conduct in reference to the rebellion is exposed as a natural preliminary to the disingenuous tactics he is employing in this campaign, and to the ulterior purposes of the Southern section of his party, with which he is in close fellowship, and whose disturbing plans would have in him an abettor and a friend. The duty of the Government to protect Southern citizens of either race in the exercise of their rights and privileges is placed by Mr. STOUGHTON on impregnable ground, and the Democratic outcry which the prospect of a performance of this duty has called forth is used adroitly, but with perfect fairness, to indicate the ill-concealed hostility of the Southern leaders to Federal authority, and the troubles which might be expected to follow their success.

Senator KERNAN, addressing a Democratic meeting at Rochester, adopted the canting strain which is in vogue among Democratic speakers when allusion is made to Mr. TILDEN and the accusations preferred against him. It was terrible, he thought, that a man should be "defamed" the moment he became a candidate for office; but the underlying question—whether a party of "reform" should nominate for high office a man who needs to be reformed—he entirely ignored. If Mr. TILDEN can be satisfied with this sort of apology we have no reason to complain. In a criminal court, character is an element which jurors take into account when evidence conflicts, or of which the Judge takes cognizance in passing sentence. It is valueless as against conclusive proofs of guilt. We beg to remind Mr. KERNAN, therefore, that instead of shedding crocodile's tears over his dead friend TILDEN, and bewailing the "demoralization of the press" because it arraigns that functionary at the bar of public opinion, he should declare plainly whether a perjurer and cheat is fit to be even a Democratic President. Professions of sympathy and confidence are, in a case like this, of no avail. We want to know what Mr. KERNAN thinks of Mr. TILDEN'S false oaths, of his withholding taxes due the Government, of his abuse of trust in railroad matters, of the Brady's Bend swindle, and of the various other transactions which should enter into every candid man's mind in judging of Mr. TILDEN'S pretensions as a reformer. When Mr. KERNAN declares himself on these points we shall be ready to discuss with him the functions and the moral responsibility of the press.

A nice regard for public financial obligations is not a characteristic of the Southern States or municipalities. They have no objection to the maintenance of credit when the burdens entailed are not inconvenient; but they have a chronic habit of leaving public creditors in the lurch when repudiation carries with it some temporary advantage. In several of the States, the Democrats signalized their restoration to power by allowing State indebtedness to run into default and then compelling the holders of securities to submit to a scaling process, with total repudiation as the alternative. We have seen this in Alabama, where the total wiping out of a portion of the outstanding indebtedness, and a partial confiscation of the remainder, is hailed as a measure of relief; in Georgia, where one Legislature summarily repudiated obligations incurred under the authority of a previous Legislature; in Tennessee, where default was made long ago, and where the demagogues bid against each other in favor of the reduction of taxation to a point that would render the payment of interest or principal impossible; in Virginia, where holders of bonds were fleeced under the guise of funding, where contributions to the sinking fund have been suspended, and the debt generally is in the worst possible condition this side of repudiation. Now comes that zealous Tildenite sheet, the Mobile Register, with a proposal to apply to local improvements money set aside for the city's creditors, and a bold declaration of the principle that in the disposal of the proceeds of taxes the tax-payer alone is entitled to consideration, and the creditors must patiently await his pleasure. These are suggestive illustrations of the way in which the nation's faith would be protected if the Democrats were once more absolute in Washington.

We are requested to call the attention of our New-Jersey readers to the fact that the Election law of that State requires a registration of voters in every city having a population of ten thousand or more. To-day is the first day for registry. We trust that there will be no neglect in this important matter by Republicans. A registration law, properly enforced, is a decided protection to honest suffrage, and it should be seen to that all our voters comply with it, and that the opportunity it presents for preventing illegal voting is fully and fairly used.

The Tilden "Bureau" is engaged in proving how just is the ancient adage, "a guilty conscience needs no accuser." It has sent editorials as far west as Indiana, and as far south as New-Orleans, warning the faithful to look out for disgraceful revelations by TWEED concerning TILDEN. It is to make these that TWEED has been obtained from Spain. "The great criminal," declares one of these editorials, "was amenable only to the State of New-York. But it was the United States which, only since the St. Louis Convention, undertook the enterprise of his recapture." "The Administration was in a situation, by condoning [sic] outrages on American citizens, to bargain with Spain, behind TILDEN'S back for the surrender of TWEED without treaty." The Bureau editorial then goes on to say that the arrangement is for TWEED to "squeal" on TILDEN, and receive a pardon from Gov. MORGAN in case the latter is elected. "For this," adds the Bureau, "an old man in TWEED'S situation, moral and material, cannot be supposed to hesitate out of scruples of conscience, any more than a hound hesitates when he sees a rabbit." Mr. TILDEN, we suppose, is the rabbit; the comparison is not bad. The Bureau concludes in this mysterious manner: "He may have gotten religion, but if not, most men would say he would be a great fool not to do it, as it would not blacken him much to speak of." Which of the two great Democrats this refers to we do not know, but it is true of either. Meanwhile we accept the Bureau's warning: "Be not surprised, therefore, at what you may hear." We shall not be, nor, apparently, will the Bureau, however bad the news may be.

A VERY SIMPLE QUESTION.

If there be one issue in the pending campaign as to which the good faith of the two parties is more important than as to any other, it is the financial issue. In this matter good faith is the absolute essential for successful treatment. Unfortunately, the Republican Party is not entirely blameless with reference to it. Its record is not perfectly clean. It furnished a certain number of advocates to the wild sheme for "paying" the bonds in legal-tender notes, which was simply a form of repudiation, because an interest-bearing bond cannot be "paid" with a non-interest-bearing note. The Republican Party has also contributed a certain number of votes to the various inflation measures proposed since the close of the war, and these measures also have been from first to last, only badly-concealed devices for repudiation. It was a Republican Administration, moreover, which tolerated the pernicious notion that legal tenders once paid were still a "reserve" and capable of being legally reissued, and it was a Republican Congress which formally ratified and condoned the application of this fatal error in the crisis of 1873.

But a party must be judged by what a majority of its members think and do, and not by what a minority may sustain, and by this perfectly simple and just test the Republican Party is shown to be trustworthy, and the Democratic Party utterly unreliable, on the financial issue. If a minority of the Republican Party was led away by the delusion of paying the bonds in legal tenders, a majority so strong as to control the party heartily condemned that mischievous idea, and stamped it out in the elections of 1868—the most important in some regards that the United States have ever held. If, again, a minority of Republican Representatives has been found from time to time supporting the various inflation projects, a majority has almost invariably been on the other side, while the President of their choice has stood like a rock against all the assaults of the inflationists and repudiators. Gen. GRANT, whom it is fashionable just now to decry, has won many laurels of which his country will be proud long after he has passed away, but none of them were earned by more honorable service than that which he rendered the country when he interposed his veto to save it from the disaster and disgrace of inflation. That act, too, let it be remembered, awoke a hearty and general response in the Republican Party, and revealed to its own leaders the substantial strength of sound financial principles in the ranks of their followers. Since its performance there has been no doubt of the position of the party and there can be none henceforward.

What, on the other hand, is the history of the Democratic Party on this question? It is the exact reverse of that of the Republican Party. It is the history of a minority strong in desire, but weak in numbers and purpose, to force sound doctrines upon a majority which rejected and despised them. In the momentous struggle of 1868, to which we have referred, the Democratic Party was squarely arrayed on the side of repudiation, and had it not been for the firmness of the mass of Republicans, would have plunged the country into an abyss of discredit from which only long years of suffering could have rescued it. The measures of inflation, to which, also, we have made reference, and which received the support of a Republican minority only, in nearly every instance, were sustained almost uniformly by the majority of Democrats, and it is particularly noteworthy that while the Republican organization has steadily passed more and more into the hands of friends of sound money, the Democratic organization has gone more and more completely into the hands of the extremest and most fanatical advocates of irredeemable paper currency. As we have frankly conceded the errors of a portion of the Republicans, and the dangers with which these have threatened the party in the past, so we as frankly recognize the sincere devotion of a portion of the Democrats to sound financial principles. But the fact, which no one can ignore, is that the sound-money Democrats have for a long time been losing their hold on their party, and their position is incalculably weaker to-day than it ever was before. They have lacked both the courage and the support in their own party to enable them to carry out their views. When Senator FESSENDEN greeted the proposition to pay the bonds in legal tenders with the ringing cry, "Repudiate the repudiators," his party rallied to the summons and carried out the policy so bravely announced. But if the hard-money men in the Democratic Party had undertaken to really repudiate the repudiators, they would have been driven out of the camp. All that they could do was to temporize with the opponents of their ideas, and seek to make the party professions appear to be what the party convictions would not justify.

It is this policy, never so conspicuous as to-day, that stamps the Democratic attitude toward the finances with bad faith. The declarations of fidelity to sound money to be found in their platforms are ambiguous, insincere, and inconsistent with the actual course and purpose of the party. If they were not unmeaning, they could not be in the platforms. The party would not tolerate explicit and reliable declarations, because it has no intention of carrying them out. The choice of the hard-money men lay between a dubious and worthless financial plank and one that should reflect the undoubted inflation views of the party. They preferred the former, and even then were obliged to place on their national ticket one of the most offensive and irrational inflationists, and to allow Mr. TILDEN to concede the repudiation of the Redemption act. What could be more complete proof of the absence of good faith in the party, and of its entire incapacity to maintain the national honor, or bring the country to the resumption of specie payments? The financial question lies in a nutshell. It is as simple as the question of the maintenance of business credit by a merchant. The point at issue is, will the Government redeem its promises. There is no doubt of its ability to do so by processes that involve no shock to business and no undue strain on the resources of the country. But it can no more be done by the Democratic Party, whose masses are recklessly bent on the opposite course, than the business obligations of a house could be met by a firm, the majority of whose members were determined to cheat their creditors.

NEW-YORK AND THE RAILWAY WAR.

There has long been a tendency among New-York merchants to regard the contests between the trunk lines from the sea-board to the grain-growing West as something in which they have no local interest. The word "local" seems to most New-Yorkers a small word, which they do not like to use in connection with a city so great as ours. They are inclined to look with amused indifference upon the attachment of the citizens of Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore to the places of their residence and business, and to consider as "provincial" the schemes which the people of these cities enter into so heartily to draw business from this port. This feeling is natural, and, to a certain extent, proper; but it may be carried too far. There is no fact better established in our recent commercial history than that the three principal ports on the Atlantic coast other than New-York have made greater relative progress in trade than New-York has made, and that this progress has been, to a very considerable extent, at the expense of New-York. It is equally well established that this fact is due to a spirit of co-operation between the business men of those ports and the railways which bring them the products of the West—a spirit which has had practical expression in many ways, and especially in the energetic moral support given to these railway companies in their struggle with the trunk line which ends in this City. This is particularly true of Philadelphia and Baltimore.

In a recent address of President GARRETT, of the Baltimore and Ohio line—a gentleman who combines the plausibility of a politician with the astuteness of a railway manager—particular stress was laid on the golden fruit which his city and Philadelphia were drawing, and would continue to draw, from a vigorous opposition to the schedule of rates proposed by the New-York Central Railroad Company. These rates, as we understand, are simply those that are charged by the other lines. In other words, the Central managers decline to make concessions to Baltimore and Philadelphia because they are nearer the West, or to Boston because it is more distant. They insist that New-York is entitled to all the advantage which can be derived from the superior facilities—the four track road, the excellent equipment, the complete system, and the command of capital—supplied by the Central. In doing so we do not for a moment suppose that these managers are actuated solely by public spirit. On the contrary, they are inspired by a conviction of their own interests; but their conception of those interests is an intelligent one. They believe that they can serve both themselves and New-York by the policy which they are pursuing. Wherein are they incorrect? If they have brought their road to such a stage of efficiency that it is no longer a mere question of distance; if they are able to carry freight over longer distances for less money than other roads, why is it not for the interest of New-York City that they should do so? On the other hand, it would be absurd for the New-York Central Company to claim that the merchants of New-York should approve their course out of a feeling of affection or gratitude toward it. Sentimentalism has no place in business. All that the Central Company can fairly ask is that the merchants of New-York shall consider its policy candidly, and give it support so far as it clearly serves the best interests of the City. To such support, it seems to us, the company is fairly entitled.

Mr. GARRETT is of the opinion that the contest now going on will help Baltimore the more the longer it lasts, and that his own line can maintain it indefinitely and continue its ten per cent. dividends to the last. If that be the case, we cannot see that he need to berate the New-York Central for its course. Indeed, the policy of the Central appears to be to the Baltimore and Ohio a blessing in very thin disguise. If the trade of Baltimore steadily increases, and the dividends of the Baltimore and Ohio Road are safe, then Mr. GARRETT is guilty of gross inconsistency in blaming the Central for refusing his demands. The duty of all the roads involved is clear enough. No one of them has a right in a fight of this kind to inflict serious and lasting injury on its stockholders; but within that limit each road has a right to get all the traffic it can, and the more it gets the better for the city it feeds. Mr. Vice President VANDERBILT has recently declared officially that the dividends of his road are being paid, and will continue to be paid, out of its net earnings. That being the case—and the shareholders, who are the chief parties in interest, show no disposition to doubt it—it is clearly for the interest of New-York City that the Central shall control all the business it can.

Whether the policy of the Central is one that can be maintained indefinitely is a question which we cannot undertake to determine. If it can carry freight at a rate which leaves no margin of working profit for its competitors, it will win. That margin need not cover interest and dividends on the debt and stock of the present competing corporations. It may be that the contest should ruin these corporations, and that their successors, with a smaller demand for profits, might continue the struggle. But this is too large and too remote a question to be discussed here and now. What it is pertinent to remember is that the City of New-York has everything to gain and nothing to lose from the success of the Central so long as that road does not cripple itself in the fight. That such a misfortune shall be avoided is a care for the shareholders. In the meantime the moral support of the merchants of the City is certainly due to the road.

THE TRANSVAAL REPUBLIC.

The belief may have gained acceptance, of late years, from the tone the English press occasionally assumes toward the older dependencies and from the comparative infrequency of wars with barbarous nations, that Great Britain, as Joshua Fullalove might say, is "cool on colonies." But that omnivorous power has discovered a process of accretion less noisy than invasion and conquest and quite as successful in gratifying the national appetite for territory. She seems to have taken a leaf from our book, and "annexation" is now her favorite mode of picking up "unconsidered trifles" in the way of islands and fragments of continents. The intervals in the announcements from Asia of Khanates and other subdivisions annexed to the territories of the Empress of India, have been filled with similar information from Oceanica and Africa, with a regularity apparently designed to divide attention. One or two morsels of South Africa have for many years been much coveted, and the pretexts under which possession of them has been sought are suspiciously tainted with the logic of the wolf in his negotiations with the lamb in the fable. The small but proud republics of the Boers—the Orange Free State and the Transvaal Republic—have had more than one controversy with England for the maintenance of independent existence. These have generally terminated in the triumph of the strong power, and the removal of the main body of the Boers from the absorbed territory to new soil, where they have chosen to begin national life anew, with all the vicissitudes of pioneer existence among savage and warlike tribes, rather than be reduced to the state of mere colonies. It is not half a century since they were plainly told by Gen. NAPIER that independent republics would not be tolerated so near the British provinces. It seems probable, in the light of the recent advices from South Africa, that one, at least, of the republics of the "emigrant Boers" may be compelled to relinquish the cherished idea of autonomy.

It is urged with some degree of justice by the British authorities that there exists between the Republics of the Boers and the colonies a community of interests, as opposed to the fierce and warlike native tribes, which is ignored while no danger threatens, but is assumed to be fully operative when the perils of war are present. This sentiment of common advantage and common danger has been made the basis for proposing a confederation of all the states and colonies of South Africa, with a view to the establishment of a uniform policy in the treatment of the natives. This scheme of Lord Carnarvon has not been wholly acceptable to the colonies, themselves, whose local jealousies during the long peace they have enjoyed have overridden the fears in which the project, to some extent, was conceived. The Transvaal Republic refused emphatically to entertain the proposition when submitted; but her temper seems to have undergone a radical change since, if the recent advices are to be believed. From these it appears that not only was British assistance solicited, but that hitherto much-suspected power was invited to "take over" the Republic bodily.

The events which have brought the Republic into this humiliating position can be briefly stated. The Government of the Republic not long ago laid claim to territory lying beyond their eastern boundary, between them and the coast, and occupied by three powerful Kaffir tribes, the Zulus, the Amazwazies, and the tribe of SECOCONI, who bar the route of the Boers to the sea. The Zulu King, CETEWAYO, exercises a kind of suzerainty over the others. The Boers formed an alliance with the Amazwazies in an invasion of the territory of SECOCONI, the ambitious Amazwazies hoping in turn to secure the aid of the Republic in throwing off the yoke of CETEWAYO. The annexation of territory by the Boers means the virtual expulsion of the natives. Although adopting a republican form of government for themselves, the Boers have been very niggardly of privileges to the Kaffirs living within their borders. No Kaffir is permitted to carry arms, to exercise constitutional rights, or to own land in the Transvaal, and the consequence is that the natives have forsaken every fresh district appropriated by the Republic and withdrawn beyond her frontiers. The pretension, therefore, to the territory of SECOCONI was opposed with vigor. The invasion was successful in the early stage, and several strongholds were captured, it would seem, mainly through the valor of the Amazwazi allies, who were also animated by an old feud between their Chief and SECOCONI. The Amazwazies grew weary of doing all the fighting, while the Boers secured all the plunder, and they withdrew from the alliance, but were afterward prevailed on to rejoin the Boers. The indications now are, however, that they again withdrew, and the Boers, left to themselves, suffered ignominious defeat at the hands of SECOCONI. Their position is rendered still more perilous in the last advices from South Africa, for the Zulu King is said to threaten their existence with an army of forty thousand warriors. This is not an improbable force, for CETEWAYO is extremely popular throughout the Kaffir tribes, who regard him as the champion of native rights as against European encroachment.

The English authorities were keenly alive to the danger of a general Kaffir war, and warned President BURGERS, of the Transvaal Republic, of the peril in which he placed the entire white population by his aggressive policy. The colonies were not free from apprehension of such a result, for the signs of discontent were visible in the sudden withdrawal of natives and half-breeds employed as servants and laborers by farmers and others, some with the avowed intention of rejoining their tribes for war. The frankness of these admissions was usually proportionate to the attachment for the employer or the stage of advancement in civilization of the native. Already naval reinforcements have been sent to the Cape of Good Hope, but whether with the view to intervention between the Boers and the natives or merely to protect the colonies, does not yet appear. While there is much grumbling in England over the prospect of "taking over" a lively Kaffir war as well as the Republic, the sentiment is not unfavorable to intervention and assistance, for it is now assumed that the Boers are not in a position to reject any conditions that may be attached to the service to be rendered. There is even a feeling of resentment manifested towards these people who have so long resisted both the hostile and friendly approaches of British diplomacy, and it is plainly intimated in some of the English journals that the first and chief condition of assistance will be that the independent existence of the Transvaal Republic shall be surrendered and the colonial condition assumed.

A MYSTERY.

Next Sunday morning Mr. TALMAGE'S congregation will listen in vain for the familiar pounding of the pulpit wherewith their powerful Pastor is accustomed to call them to witness the weekly whirlwind of his eloquent arms and legs. On that day Mr. TALMAGE will rest his muscles by abstaining from active preaching. Whether he has sprained his ankle or dislocated a wrist, or suffered some other injury that interferes with the easy performance of his sermons, we are not told. All the information he has given us is the simple announcement that he will not perform a sermon next Sunday, and that his place at the comic desk will be taken by Mr. TUPPER, who will read his poem on the "Immortality of the Soul." Lovers of athletic sports will therefore have to do without TALMAGE for one day. Of course, any man can stand on his head in his own house next Sunday morning, and read one of TALMAGE'S sermons aloud, while an assistant beats a large tin pan. By pursuing this plan, a devoted follower of TALMAGE can obtain almost as much pleasure and profit as can be obtained by attending TALMAGE'S personal preaching; but it requires practice as well as an unusual degree of muscular devotion.

When we attempt to conjecture TALMAGE'S probable motive in substituting Mr. TUPPER'S mild poem for one of his own resonant sermons, a vast field is open to us. Most people would imagine that if TALMAGE desired to obtain a day's relief from duty at the Tabernacle, he would ask one of Mr. BARNUM'S acrobats to exchange trapezes with him, or would induce an "end man" in some popular minstrel company, to sound the warning tamborine or to rattle the cheerful bones for the edification of the Tabernacle congregation. But instead of so doing, he deliberately invites Mr. TUPPER, who, being not only a gentleman, but also the least muscular poet in the language, is in these respects the direct opposite of TALMAGE, to feed his flock with the milk of proverbial philosophy. Had BRADLAUGH invited Mrs. VAN COTT to preside in his stead over a meeting of an atheistical society, he would not have done a more unaccountable thing than that which TALMAGE has just done. He must know that when his moral hearers find his pulpit occupied by a gentleman, they may possibly make comparisons unfavorable to TALMAGE, and may discover that they prefer decorous proverbs to vulgar and boisterous idiocy. It is clear that TALMAGE would not run this risk without a powerful motive, but what this motive can be is as yet hidden from us.

Every one is, of course, familiar with the celebrated poem which Mr. TUPPER proposes to read next Sunday. The beauty of its opening lines has rarely been surpassed:

"The soul is immortal, but the body is liable to a variety of fatal disorders.
The onion dies and is eaten, but the soul lives, and is never used as an article of diet.
Why is the soul immortal? Chiefly, because it never dies.

Profound truths like these, couched in language of wonderful lucidity and beauty, are surely unfitted for ears that have been attuned to the wild bray of TALMAGE. It is possible that, were Mr. TUPPER to deliver them with one leg thrown over the pulpit, to intersperse them with occasional war-whoops, and to add to the end of every fourth line the popular chorus, "Whack, fal lal," he might be accepted as a partial substitute for TALMAGE. But will Mr. TUPPER consent to imitate TALMAGE'S oratorical method? He is not as full of lungs as is the windy interior of TALMAGE, and hence he could not yell as loudly as the latter, no matter how axious he might be to please his audience. He is not a tall man, and it is doubtful if he could succeed in throwing a leg over a pulpit built entirely with reference to the length of TALMAGE'S legs. Moreover, he is not a gymnast, and were he to try TALMAGE'S favorite feat of balancing himself on his abdomen in order to clutch hypothetical sinners from an imaginary abyss in front of the pulpit, he would very likely topple over, and crush an astonished deacon in his fall. Even if Mr. TUPPER was physically able to emulate TALMAGE'S style of eloquence, he would doubtless refuse to do it. He may not have a gigantic intellect, but he certainly is neither an acrobat nor a buffoon, and we may safely assume that he will deliver his poem with the placidity which is appropriate to it, and he will refuse to mingle it with either vulgarity or blasphemy.

In spite of TALMAGE'S announcement, he may yet change his mind and refuse to risk Mr. TUPPER in his pulpit. If his arms and legs are capable of the intellectual process termed reflection, he must perceive that he has been somewhat hasty. If his people do not like Mr. TUPPER, they may feel that TALMAGE has played an unfair trick upon them by thrusting a gentleman into the pulpit; while if they happen to like him, they may dismiss TALMAGE with the advice to go and howl on the back fence, while they permanently install Mr. TUPPER in his place. In either case, TALMAGE would be a loser, while in no event will he be benefited by using Mr. TUPPER as his temporary substitute. If he is too ill to preach next Sunday, he can at least lie on the sofa in the end of the pulpit and occasionally wave his legs in the sight of the congregation. To do this would be far wiser than to put his trust in TUPPER, and to subsequently find that he had prepared the way for his own downfall.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

Hayes, says the Toledo Blade, defeated the rebels; Tilden defeated the tax-collector.

A prominent Indiana Republican adds as a postscript to a letter. "We are going at 'em again."

The Cincinnati Times calls for a Registry law in Ohio, to include not only cities of the "first class," but of the second also.

The persistence of Hon. H. W. Hilliard as an independent Democratic candidate for Congress in Georgia is as gall and wormwood to the Tildenites in that State.

The Indianapolis Journal speaks warmly in praise of the effectiveness of Judge A. B. Sloanaker, of Louisiana, on the stump in Indiana during the late canvass. He is coming to this State.

The Republicans of the Third District of Alabama have nominated Col. William H. Betts for Congress. In the Fifth District of the same State Hon. D. B. Booth is the Republican candidate.

The Poughkeepsie Eagle says that the Dutchess County Democratic Conventions were conspicuous for the absence of Hon. John O. Whitehouse, Hon. Jacob B. Carpenter, and Hon. Charles Wheaton.

Judge John Critcher has withdrawn as an independent Democratic candidate for Congress in the First District of Virginia, two straight party candidates, Republican and Democratic, having entered the field.

Ex-Senator H. V. M. Miller, of Georgia, has troubled the Democrats by writing a letter approving the action of Dr. Felton in running as an independent candidate for Congress in the Seventh District of that State.

Mr. William M. Tweed at least may be interested in the vote of Vigo County, Ind. It was: Republican, 3,425; Democratic, 3,673; Greenback, 1,923. Democratic plurality, 248. Judging from the vote Tweed would find more friends there than in the Vigo across the sea.

The Montgomery Journal says that the Republicans of the First District of Alabama have nominated Col. W. W. D. Turner of Mobile for Congress. Last week it was reported that the convention indorsed the candidacy of Mr. F. M. Bromberg, who is running as an independent Democrat.

The Parkersburg (West Va.) Times, a Greenback paper, but formerly Republican, is grieved at heart by the dishonesty of the Democratic wing of the Greenback Party in that State. The Republican recruits, it says, voted the Greenback ticket honestly at the late election, but the old Democrats proved to be incurable, and it was found that no pledges of theirs could be relied upon.

Col. R. W. Flournoy, of Mississippi, has written a letter to deny that he has gone over to Tilden. He says: "Of all men, not excepting Buchanan and Van Buren, I look upon Tilden as the most exceptional, unworthy, and dangerous man that has ever been presented for the office of President, a man who escapes an indictment for perjury simply by the statute of limitations."

Hon. Thomas Fitch was announced to speak in a Nevada town the other day, and this is the way a local paper heralded him: "Fitch's talk is like champagne, very pleasant to take and just heady enough to make everybody feel good, and whoever gets full of it never gets over it. His flow is perpetual, and the more one gets of it the more he wants. At times there comes a burst of eloquence like the pop of a new bottle, and every listener is sure to fill up.

The New-Haven Journal brings the gratifying assurance that reports from all parts of Connecticut indicate a greater amount of enthusiasm among the Republicans than was ever known before, surpassing even that witnessed in the Lincoln campaigns. The honest and loyal people of the State are thoroughly aroused, and are determined to do everything in their power to redeem Connecticut and place her six electoral votes to the credit of Hayes, besides electing their candidates for State and Congressional offices.

AMUSEMENTS.

MR. THOMAS' CONCERTS.

The programme at Steinway Hall, last evening, was divided into two parts, the first consisting of miscellaneous music and the second including the compositions interpreted at the opening of the Exhibition in Philadelphia. The feature of special interest of the first part was an admirable orchestral performance of LISZT'S "Préludes." This work is unquestionably one of the composer's finest achievements, because melodious, vivid in color, and, relatively, exceedingly simple as an illustrative tone-poem. It was splendidly rendered, yesterday, by Mr. THOMAS' men, and was so thoroughly enjoyed that any inquiry as to the expediency of repeating the whole of it would unquestionably have had an affirmative answer from the audience. The soloists of the concert were Mr. TIMM and Mr. WHITNEY. Mr. TIMM'S appearance on the platform seems to be a pleasant spectacle for many local dilettanti, for every now and then the gentleman asserts his existence, and is welcomed back to modern art life with real cordiality. Quite thirty years have gone by since Mr. TIMM came to America, and his return to the concert-room carries, no doubt, many of his hearers back to a period which it is not unpleasant to occasionally recall to their memories. We cannot supply any other reason for Mr. TIMM'S greeting, as his execution of CHOPIN would be scarcely less emotional and impressive if he were to count aloud while playing the compositions of the least formal and of one of the freshest and most tender of modern writers. The second part of the programme, of which, as we observed some months ago, Mr. BACH'S cantata is still the most conspicuous element, introduced Mr. THOMAS' chorus. This body, of which a great deal is expected, did not strike us as particularly well-balanced, the grave voices quite outnumbering the others. As for spirit and nicety of shading, these qualities may be looked for later; at present, the chorus sings—as all choral bodies do not—both in time and tune. The inauguration programme, we may here note, will be repeated to-morrow, and, in the first part of the entertainment, Mr. George Werrenrath—a new tenor—and Mr. Franz Remmerts will be heard. A "Swedish programme" is in reserve for Friday's performance.

MRS. POMEROY'S DEBUT.

Mrs. Louise M. Pomeroy last evening effected her début as an actress on the stage of the Lyceum Theatre. She appeared as Juliet, and awakened and sustained interest in the representation by a performance in which intelligence, taste, and culture were throughout discernible. It would be idle to say that Mrs. Pomeroy's Juliet ranks with the personations of three or four well-known artists, nor can it be admitted, either, that yesterday's effort revealed the lady's possession of the divine spark which no study can kindle and no ambition strike. Mrs. Pomeroy lacks depth of sentiment and power; her face is but mildly expressive of the stronger passions, and her voice utterly unequal to the illustration of their influence. Yet her work pleased her hearers, and sometimes impressed them. It was clear that Mrs. Pomeroy understood the rôle, that she felt the emotions of the personage, and that she had fixed upon definite methods by which to portray them. She had undoubtedly been taught the "business" of Juliet, but it had been practiced so assiduously that its transaction was accomplished without effort or gaucherie. The attempt, therefore, was a reverent one, and it having been preceded by judicious preparation, it was entitled to and it commanded general respect. Unlike the disagreeable débutantes who are now remembered chiefly by their painted ears and their liberal vituperation of writers insensible to their charms, Mrs. Pomeroy's Juliet, while it was often feeble and colorless, was never once ridiculous. The result of the début may therefore be summed up in a decision favorable to the lady's hopes. Juliet is beyond her reach, but there are numerous characters to which it will be easy for her to adapt herself. Mrs. Pomeroy is still young; she is a rather prepossessing blonde, with a mobile face, a sang froid which is happily not akin to boldness of manner, and, we should opine, exceptional perseverance. A lady with such gifts and qualities is not out of place in the profession she has chosen, and if Mrs. Pomeroy's aspirations do not repeatedly overleap themselves, she will have no cause to regret her début. Her support, last night, was passable, Mr. M. V. Lingham portraying Romeo with commendable earnestness. "Romeo and Juliet" will be given this evening and to-morrow, and, on Tuesday, "The Lady of Lyons" will be acted. We would advise that, during these representations, the theatre be heated; the temperature, yesterday, suggested an unexpected discovery of the north-west passage in the immediate vicinity of Fourteenth street and Sixth avenue.

BRIEF MENTION.

Mr. Max Strakosch departs for Canada to-day, preparatory to giving a week of opera in Toronto.

A matinée performance will be given at Chickering Hall, to-day, by M. Casseneuve, for the especial delectation of resident members of the dramatic profession.

"The Lottery of Life," with its animated story and highly-illustrative incidents, was brought out at Wood's Museum, last evening.

The Eagle Theatre, the Theatre Comique, and the Olympic last evening infused new life into their liberal and varied programmes.

Mr. Eben Plympton will support Miss Neilson during her approaching tour, and Mr. Edwin F. De Nyse will act as the lady's business manager.

COTTON CROP PROSPECTS.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—The reports to the Department of Agriculture indicate a reduction of the condition of cotton during the past month in the ten principal cotton States from an average of 92.3 to 82.7. The October average of these States was 88 in 1875 and 71.4 in 1874. The decline for September is slight in Georgia, Florida, and Mississippi, greater in Louisiana and Arkansas, and greatest in Alabama and Tennessee. There is a small advance in Texas. The figures for the condition of States are as follows: North Carolina, 84; South Carolina, 80; Georgia, 85; Florida, 80; Alabama, 60; Mississippi, 83; Louisiana, 82; Texas, 91; Arkansas, 88; Tennessee, 91. The impairment of the crop prospect has been caused by the equinoctial storm in North Carolina, drought and rust in Georgia, the caterpillar in Florida and Alabama, the boll-worm in Arkansas, and rust in Tennessee. The caterpillar is confined to the southerly portion of the Gulf States. Its depredations are most severe in Alabama. In most of the infested districts its reproduction was too late to destroy more than the top crops.

THE FAST MAIL SERVICE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 16.—At a meeting of the Board of Trade to-night the Committee on Inland Transportation presented a report relative to the Fast Mail service. The board sent questions to the merchants of the city, to which replies stating that the Fast Mail service was desirable were received. The committee recommend the board to urge upon the special committee appointed to investigate this subject the propriety of establishing the Fast Mail service, if the arrivals and departures can be arranged at hours to suit the wants of the community

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

TURKEY'S CONCILIATORY NOTE.

COMMENTS OF LEADING EUROPEAN JOURNALS THEREON — PRINCE GORTSCHAKOFF'S CIRCULAR—RUSSIA DISPOSED TO INSIST ON AN ARMISTICE—SERVIA WILLING TO ACCEPT—ENGLAND'S POSITION.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The Times to-day publishes the full text of the note in which Turkey offered the six months' armistice, all the details of which have already been telegraphed to the United States. The Paris correspondent of that paper commenting thereon, says: "The note is conciliatory, submissive, and almost humble." The Times, in a leading editorial article says: "Turkey could not possibly have been more conciliatory. The note judiciously abstains from denouncing the foreign volunteers as Russians. There is nothing in it at which Russia or any other power could reasonably take offense." The Times further says: "The fact of Russia's having reverted to the demands originally made by England, would be encouraging if we could regard with confidence the animus which prompted this course."

A Paris dispatch says that the Temps publishes a summary, which it believes to be accurate, of Prince Gortschakoff's circular to the Russian representatives abroad, in reply to Turkey's offer of the six months' armistice. Prince Gortschakoff points out that no durable peace could proceed from the Turkish proposal. Servia and Montenegro could not be expected to remain so long in a critical position. He concludes with the statement that Russia is disposed to insist upon an armistice of a month or six weeks, which might be extended if the progress of negotiations rendered it necessary.

The Times' Paris correspondent points to the fact that this is the first time that Russia has clearly accepted solidarity with Servia and Montenegro. In advising them to reject the Turkish propositions, she has accepted the responsibility of such refusal.

A Times dispatch from Berlin, dated Sunday evening, announces that the Russian objections to Turkey's proposal are stated in a calm and argumentative tone, indicating a desire for negotiation. There seems to be no danger of an immediate collision.

The Pesther Lloyd (newspaper) reports that M. Ristics, the Servian Prime Minister, has informed the English Consul at Belgrade that Servia would consent to an armistice till Dec. 31.

The Daily News has a special from Belgrade which says: "Servia is willing to accept the status quo, provided the Turks give guarantees for the proper government of Bosnia, but Servia will not consent to any armistice longer than Dec. 31. If that is refused now she does not bind herself to accept it at any future time. The prospect of an armistice or peace is not flattering."

A dispatch from Vienna says the semi-official Montagu Revue, commenting on the Porte's proposal of the six months' armistice says: "The armistice is evidently too extended, but the greater Russian loan of 300,000,000 roubles has been resolved upon at Livadia.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The Standard's dispatch from Constantinople says: "There is great uneasiness here and little hope of averting war. Popular feeling against Russia is very bitter. Some warlike demonstration is expected on the occasion of the Bairam, which is the great annual Turkish festival beginning this week. The Turks now talk calmly of their determination to fight Russia single-handed. They claim that they will have all the money necessary to carry on the campaign."

LONDON, Oct. 17.—The Times' Berlin special says after spending 20,000,000 roubles in the last three months in attempting to maintain the nominal value of the paper currency the St. Petersburg National Bank has avowed its inability to proceed with the operations, and declares the bills will no longer be paid in gold. It is believed that the Russian Government is trying to obtain a loan in Holland.

THE BRITISH GRAIN MARKETS.

WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE MARK LANE EXPRESS.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—The Mark Lane Express, in its review of the British corn trade during the past week, says harvesting is still unfinished in the north, and the unsecured crops are suffering both in grain and straw. There has been a slight improvement in the quantity of grain marketed by farmers during the week, but the bulk offered is still in an unsatisfactory condition. Only dry samples have met with any attention and these have been rather higher, presumably because of the demand for flue grain for sowing purposes. Values do not appear to have been raised by the prospect of war.

Our return of granary stocks on the 1st of October compared with that of July 1 shows that the quantity of maize in granary is quadrupled. Wheat is increased by rather over half. Flour is somewhat diminished. These stocks, though certainly large, ought not, considering the recent and prospective large diminution of imports and the deficient home growth, to depress trade. They show only a moderate increase upon the corresponding period of last year. The large imports then arriving were accumulating week by week, whereas at present the draft is rather out of than into granary. All things considered, the condition of trade is healthy, although the large stocks and the difficulty of warehousing grain exercise an influence adverse to holders. On the other hand, no decline seems possible while shipments from abroad continue on the present moderate scale, and any political event of moment might cause some excitement, the countries concerned being important grain producers. The local trade remains about the same as last week, the only increase being a demand for Indian wheat, which millers bought freely. The floating cargo trade ruled very firm, with only moderate arrivals off the coast. Rather more attention has been paid to floating cargoes. Ghirka wheat has been held at full prices.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

DISTRESS IN INDIA—FAILURE OF AN ENGLISH CORPORATION.

LONDON, Oct. 16.—A special dispatch to the Times from Calcutta reports that distress prevails in the Deccan and Southern Mahratta because of the failure of the crops. The Government have opened relief works. Scarcity is also expected in Khandeish and Nassick.

The Alexandra Palace Company has filed a petition in bankruptcy. The Alexandra Palace is a well-known place of amusement situated on Muswell Hill.

Reuter's telegram from Madrid states that the Bishop of Minorca has issued a new circular enjoining masters of primary schools not to admit the sons of Protestants and other dissenters.

RIOTING IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

CONFLICT BETWEEN WHITES AND BLACKS AT CAINHOY, NEAR CHARLESTON—TWO WHITES KILLED AND FOURTEEN WOUNDED—A BAND FROM CHARLESTON TO "RECOVER THE BODIES."

CHARLESTON, Oct. 16.—The joint canvass of Charleston County by the Democrats and Republicans which has been in progress for some days, has resulted in a serious collision at Cainhoy, about nine miles from here. It had been agreed that both whites and blacks should attend the meeting without arms. During the speaking an altercation arose between two individuals of opposite parties. A shot having been fired by one of them, the negroes belonging to the State Militia, and comprising the majority of the meeting, secured their muskets, which were secreted near by, and simultaneously a volley was fired into the unarmed whites from bushes skirting a neighboring ravine. The whites being few in number and altogether unprepared to fight, retreated to the steamer that had brought them from the city, but not before two of their number had been killed, and fourteen wounded. The dead were left on the ground, in possession of the negroes. About eighty armed whites left the city this evening for Cainhoy, to recover the bodies, and to afford protection to the whites of that vicinity, who are in dread of being attacked or burned out.

OPERATIC MANAGERS SUED.

MISS CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG AND C. D. HESS IN TROUBLE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 16.—Miss Clara Louise Kellogg and C. D. Hess, traveling as the English Opera Company, had a Sheriff's summons served upon them while engaged in the performance of "Lucia di Lammermoor" at the Academy of Music this evening. This is notice of a suit to be brought by some twenty-five persons who aver that they were engaged as the chorus of the opera Company, and were summarily discharged. It seems that about the 17th of August last one Arthur Thamms came here as the agent of Mr. C. D. Hess, and engaged about sixty persons to act as chorus singers for the operas for the season of 1876-7. Written contracts were had, and in some cases individual contracts were made, but the majority of the singers signed a paper binding themselves to sing with no other troupe. On last Saturday, it is alleged, Mr. Thamms gave notice to all but eight or ten persons that their services would not be needed making as an excuse that it was not thought the season would be good enough to warrant them in having such a large chorus. The contracts guaranteed to the choristers pay for at least four nights in a week, at the rate of $4 per night, the season to commence this evening. As a result of this sudden termination of their engagements many of the chorus are left without money and deeply in debt. One young lady resigned her position in the Church of the Immaculate Conception, on the strength of the engagement; several gentlemen came from distant parts of the country in August and have paid their board here since, forsaking their business, and all attended rehearsal three times a day, each paying for their own music and their pro rata share of expenses for the rent of the hall at Sixth and Arch streets, where they practiced. It is alleged that Mr. Thamms kept them together under the most profuse promises, and even last week would not hear of any of the company going elsewhere. After being disposed of in this manner the members of the chorus engaged Hon. John G. Orth as counsel, and suit will be commenced at once. It will not interfere with the company's engagements, as Miss Kellogg and Mr. Hess are provided with bail for all the suits.

THE CHEESMAN CASE.

BOSTON, Oct. 16.—The Herald to-night says that further investigation of the antecedents of Mrs. Cheesman discloses the fact that she is the same person who called herself Cora Heywood, and was formerly a publicly known clairvoyant. The Blanchards, of Lynn, say that her only connection with them was of a business character, they having boarded her child while she was in Boston.

FORGED LETTER OF CREDIT AND DRAFTS.

HEAVY ROBBERY IN MONTREAL.

MONTREAL, Oct. 16.—Lazarus' pawn-broker shop, on Notre Dame street, was entered by burglars last night. Jewelry and diamonds to the value of $20,000 were stolen. No clue has been obtained as to the robbers or the booty.

BRUTAL MURDER BY A SHERIFF'S SON.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 16.—A Jefferson City special to the Evening Dispatch says James Myers, son of Sheriff Myers, of this county, shot and killed George Bacckus, a feeble old German living in the southern part of the city, about ten o'clock this morning. It is said young Myers had been too intimate with the daughter of Bacckus and was forbidden the house. This morning Myers called on Bacckus and an altercation ensued. Shortly afterward Myers shot the old man in his own yard, fourteen buckshot entering his body. Myers was arrested.

THE HOSTILE INDIANS.

THE BLACK HILLS TREATY SIGNED BY THE INDIANS AT STANDING ROCK—THE EXPEDITION FROM FORT LARAMIE.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 16.—The Pioneer-Press special from Bismarck, says the Indians at Standing Rock signed the treaty relinquishing the Black Hills on Wednesday. The treaty was so far modified as not to insist on their removal to the Indian Territory. The troops intended for the expedition go into camp to-morrow, and will probably leave about Wednesday. Gen. Sturges is on the way to join his regiment, and will probably command the expedition unless Gen. Terry goes in person.

THE SNOW IN THE SOUTH.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16.—Yesterday was the coldest day of the season. There was a slight fall of snow in the morning, and ice formed last night. It has moderated a little to-day, but a cold wind is blowing.

RICHMOND, Oct. 16.—There was an hour's snowstorm at Norfolk yesterday, and also in this neighborhood. The weather is extremely cold. The thermometer here yesterday and at sunrise to-day registered 31°. It is feared the heavy gales which have prevailed off the Capes have been disastrous to vessels.

STEINWAY'S VICTORY AND LAURELS.

The following official report of the Judges of Awards shows conclusively that the HIGHEST HONORS in the gift of the Centennial authorities were unanimously awarded to Steinway & Sons. The report speaks for itself, and an attentive perusal and a critical comparison with other published reports is respectfully solicited.

THE ALL-IMPORTANT JUDGE'S REPORT.

The undersigned, having examined the Grand, Square, and Upright Pianos exhibited by STEINWAY & SONS, respectfully recommend the same to the United States Centennial Commission for award, for the following reasons, viz.:

For greatest concert capacity in Grand Pianos, as also highest degree of excellence in all their styles of pianos, viz.: largest volume, purity and duration of tone, and extraordinary carrying capacity, with precision and durability of mechanism; also, novel disposition of the strings and construction, and bracing of the metal frame.

I. A DISPOSITION OF THE STRINGS IN THE FORM OF A FAN, placing the bass string across the steel strings, and materially elongating the sound-board bridges by moving them nearer to the centre of the sound-board itself, thus setting greater portions of the latter into vibratory action, and so producing a greatly increased volume of sound.

II. A DUPLEX SCALE, patented in 1872, brings into action those portions of the strings which heretofore lay dormant and inactive, thereby increasing the richness, pliability, and singing quality, as well as the carrying capacity of the tone, especially of the upper notes.

III. A CUPOLA METAL FRAME, patented in 1872 and 1875, with its new system of a crossbar and bracings, giving absolute safety against the pull of the strings, and increasing the capacity to stand in tune. The space gained by the use of the Capo d'Astro bar permits the use of more heavily felted hammers, whereby a pure, rich quality of tone is retained much longer than heretofore.

IV. A CONSTRUCTION OF THE SOUND-BOARD, with its system of compression, (as shown in the patents of 1866, 1869, and 1872,) preventing that relaxation of the sound-board which is the natural result of its constant concussion, caused by the strokes of the hammers against the strings, and by atmospheric influences.

V. A METALLIC TUBULAR FRAME ACTION (patented in 1868 and 1875,) being entirely impervious to atmospheric influences, in conjunction with the new system of escapement, resulting in unerring precision, power and delicacy of touch, and durability.

VI. A TONE-SUSTAINING PEDAL (patented 1874) extends the capacity of the piano for the production of new musical effects, by enabling the performer, at pleasure, to prolong the sound of a single note or group of notes, leaving both hands free to strike other notes; is of simple construction, not liable to get out of order, and its use easily acquired.

Steinway & Sons exhibit in "Machinery Hall" samples of METAL PARTS and HARDWARE, and FULL METAL FRAMES of Grand, Square, and Upright Pianos; also samples of their PATENT METALLIC TUBULAR FRAME ACTIONS, all produced at their foundry and metal works at Astoria, Long Island.

These articles of composite metal show the highest perfection of finish and workmanship and the greatest firmness and uniformity of metal structure, a steel-like and sounding quality with a tensile strength exceeding 5,000 pounds per square centimetre, as demonstrated by actual tests. The full metal frames of cupola shape, possess an unequal'd degree of resistance, permitting a vastly increased tension of strings without the slightest danger of break or crack in said metal frames, thereby consid.erably increasing the vibratory power, and augmenting the lasting qualities of their instruments.

Signature of the Judge: H. K. OLIVER.

Approval of Group Judges:

HERRING'S SAFES PRE-EMINENT.

CENTENNIAL GROUNDS, PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 16.—The Judges' report accompanying the medals awarded Herring's shows conclusively why these safes are justly ranked as the best in the world. One clause says: We consider Herring's safes secure from all modes of attack by burglars, and award them medals for their special claims, as follows: For their high and low steel welded when used with the patent franklinite iron, rubber packing, tongue and groove, detached bolt, secured by their combination locks, with their other improvements, render them secure from burglars. The Herring's patent fire-proof safes are first-class, as well in beauty as in workmanship.—Dispatch to the Evening Mail.

HUGGED TO DEATH!

A young man called upon his intended wife last evening and surprised her by producing from his pocket a copy of the New-York Weekly containing the opening part of the great story "How She Loved Him." She was so delighted that she almost hugged him to death. Any young man who likes to be hugged should present to his affianced wife the New-York Weekly containing the story "How She Loved Him." Then if he hugs her until he faints he will know "how she loves him."—Exchange.

POND'S EXTRACT.—Experience has heralded its virtues for all kinds of pains, aches, and injuries. It is a specific for bleeding from any cause.—Advertisement.

THE PRESENT CENTURY has been noted for its progress in the useful arts. The elements of nature have been utilized and combined in an unparalleled degree, but we know of few finer exhibitions of this than is H. T. SABBITT'S BABY SOAP. This new invention for toilet and bath is the highest of possible results for purity, delicacy, and cleansing power. It is certain to supersede all others.—Advertisement.

Parker's Ginger Tonic.

Why suffer with DYSPEPSIA or HEADACHE when they may be speedily cured by PARKER'S GINGER TONIC? A dose before meals strengthens the appetite and enables the stomach to easily digest its food. This pleasant remedy promptly checks DIARRHŒA without CONSTIPATING the bowels. CONSUMPTIVES find welcome relief, and steadily gain strength from its invigorating properties. It is the best remedy for COUGHS and COLDS, and the AGED and those too feeble to bear the COLD of Winter find a comforting strength in its vitalizing warmth. CRAMPS, COLIC, DYSENTERY, FLATULENCE and CHOLERA INFANTUM quickly yield to this remedy, and it overcomes RHEUMATISM and GOUT by correcting acidity of the stomach and promoting healthy secretions.

Sold by all druggists.

Doctor, it Feels Like a Ball of Fire!!

So speaks oftentimes the sufferer from dyspepsia. After eating it seems as if there was a veritable ball of fire running up and down through his stomach. If he eats much he feels it; if he don't eat much he feels it. It destroys his enjoyment of life. If the doctor be really desirous of curing his patient he should not experiment with the sufferer, he should recommend him to use PERUVIAN SYRUP, whose merits have been tested so long and always satisfactorily. Balls of fire in the stomach and PERUVIAN SYRUP can't dwell together. Send to your druggist, he keeps it always ready, and cry it. It will work like a charm.

For Coughs and Throat Disorders, use BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES, having proved their efficiency by a test of many years. Lozenges (called Troches) sold by the ounce or pound, are but a worthless imitation, and do not possess the curative properties of BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES.

should be in every family for cleaning and polishing the silver-ware and household utensils. It is free from any injurious chemicals or grit. It saves labor and keeps the ware as brilliant as new. Sold by druggists, house-furnishers, jewellers, and grocers.

Active service cannot wear out the teeth that are brushed daily with SOZODONT. If it were in universal use the dentist would have little to do, for it is a positive preventive of dental disease. The teeth of persons who use it cannot decay or turn yellow.

Don't Lose Your Hair. Chevalier's Life FOR THE HAIR restores gray hair perfectly, stops its falling out at once, increases its growth rapidly, and makes the hair beautiful. Sold by all druggists.

LAW REPORTS.

THE SEIZURE OF THE COLON.

ONE OF THE PACIFIC MAIL STEAM-SHIP COMPANY'S VESSELS LEVIED ON FOR NON-PAYMENT OF TAXES—ARGUMENT ON A MOTION FOR AN INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN THE COLLECTION OF THE TAXES.

The steamer Colon, of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, was seized at her wharf by Marshal Hayes yesterday, on a warrant of the Receiver of Taxes, issued because of the non-payment of City taxes by the company on its vessels in 1874. Later in the day the matter was brought before Judge Barrett in Supreme Court, Chambers, on an application by the company for an injunction to restrain the City from collecting the taxes, which amount to about one hundred and forty thousand dollars, pending an appeal now before the Supreme Court of the United States. The Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments of this City, it appears, first rated the Pacific Mail Company's property at $20,000,000, that being the full par value of the capital stock. Objection was raised to this, and after further consideration the valuation was reduced in June, 1874, to $5,740,513. The company was still dissatisfied, and brought up the matter by certiorari in the Supreme Court, the General Term of which reduced the valuation by $144,950. The valuation as so reduced, was affirmed by the Court of Appeals. The company claims that its vessels on the Pacific Ocean, amounting in value to $2,344,268, which were included in the assessed property, and the unfinished vessels should not have been taxed in this City. After the decision of the Court of Appeals in the suit, a writ of error was obtained from the Federal courts, and a bond of $350,000 given on behalf of the company for all damages which might be sustained by the City. No stay of proceedings was granted, however, and the Corporation Counsel therefore gave notice to the company that, notwithstanding the appeal taken by the latter to the United States Supreme Court, he would proceed to collect the tax. In accordance with this notice the Colon was seized. These facts were presented to Judge Barrett in an affidavit and a letter from Andrew Boardman, the latter being the counsel and one of the Directors of the company. Mr. Boardman, in his letter, stated that they still believed all proceedings had been stayed by the writ of error, especially since the filing of the bond as security. Even if this were not the case he thought it would be well to deal liberally on at least considerately with the line. The damage caused by the detention of the Colon would be about $1,000 per day. James C. Carter, who appeared for the City, said the company had resisted the taxation by the State of California of its vessels plying on the Pacific, and that the United States Supreme Court had sustained the company because the vessels were registered in this State, from which, also, the corporation derived its powers. The company now sought to evade the payment of taxes altogether on this portion of its property. The writ of certiorari, the counsel argued, did not stay proceedings in the matter, since this matter was not a court proceeding but simply the action of the Receiver of Taxes. Michael H. Cardozo, who appeared for the company, argued in opposition, and Judge Barrett took the papers, intimating, however, that he did not see what power he had to restrain the collection of the tax.

DECISIONS.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Judge Barrett.

Godfrey vs. Moser.—Taxation affirmed and order granted.

Hollander vs. Herzberg.—Motion denied, with $10 costs.

National Photographers' Chemical Company vs. Knight.—Motion to change place of trial granted, with $10 costs.

National Photographers' Chemical Company vs. Knight.—Same decision.

Hunstent vs. Rohef.—Motion to vacate order of arrest denied, with $10 costs.

Joseph, &c., vs. United States Trust Company, &c.—Motion carefully considered. I am unwilling to confirm the report or to grant the decree asked; under the peculiar circumstances of the case, however, I am willing to permit the Trust Company to deliver up sufficient of the securities to enable the purchase to be completed.

Frees vs. O'Keefe.—Motion denied, with $10 costs.

Merkle vs. Irving National Bank.—Motion to continue injunction denied, and temporary injunction dissolved, with $10 costs.

Hollowagey vs. Hollowagen.—Motion for extra allowance denied, without costs.

Robins, Jr., vs. Gould.—I have no doubt that this case was a difficult and extraordinary one within the meaning of the code. It the issues, however, all dimitar to those in Taylor against the defendants (former motion in the remote months since) the questions of law and fact were numerous, delicate, and complicated. It certainly was not an ordinary action for breach of contract. The plaintiff on the proofs contained in Mr. Sherman's affidavit is fairly entitled to a moderate allowance, and I think that, considering the amount involved, the labor and expense stated, $500 would be but reasonable.

Rice vs. ——.—Motion to vacate order of Aug. 22, 1876, or to reopen the proceedings denied, with $10 costs. The stay of plaintiff's proceedings contained in said order is reinstated, and the stay of defendant's proceedings contained in the order to show cause, upon which this motion is made, is vacated.

Log vs vs. Walker.—Motion granted.

Ogden vs. Keller.—The substantial averments as to the grounds are stated upon information and belief; as to these, there must be proof.

Huntoon vs. Huntoon.—Referred to Charles H. Hudnets, Esq., to take proof as to defendant's property, income, and earnings, and to report with his opinion as to what would be a proper sum to be allowed for counsel fees and alimony, pendente lite. Motion to be brought up again on two days' notice upon the coming in of the report.

Goodenough vs. De Groot.—Motion granted, report confirmed, and an extra allowance of $50 awarded to defendant.

Gulliver vs. Junes.—Motion granted and cause referred to Philo T. Ruggles, Esq., to hear and determine.

Ocean National Bank vs. Walbridge.—Motion granted upon payment of $10 costs.

Perritt vs. Pickhardt.—I am satisfied that the securities must justify before a Justice of the court in the county in which the action is pending, or a County Judge of such county, and I see no way of helping the plaintiff in the motion. The motion must be granted, with $10 costs.

Kidd vs. Packard.—Case and amendments settled; the case is settled in accordance with the stenographer's notes; the amendments are disallowed.

James vs. Simonson.—Referred to Charles H. Hildreth, Esq., to take proof of the facts stated in the conflicting affidavits, and to report with his opinion. The motion can be brought upon two days' notice upon the coming in of the report.

Guedenaga vs. Koenig.—The ex-parte order extending time was irregular after such time had been fixed by the court on motion. Further time could only be obtained on motion, and not by an ex-parte Judge's order out of court. Motion granted, without costs, so far as to vacate the order extending the time.

Bentley vs. Schulhof.—Referred to Philo T. Ruggles, Esq., to take proof of the facts stated in the papers on both sides, and to report with his opinion. The motion can be brought on on two days' notice upon the coming in of such report.

Prior vs. Arent.—I see no reason why Mr. Thompson should be deprived of his costs. He was forced to defend, and no outside arrangement nor payment of interest on his mortgage affected his position in this suit. He was justified in bringing the cause on as the costs were not tendered. That was the only way of forcing payment to which he was entitled. Motion denied, with $10 costs.

Tuthill vs. Getty.—Order settled.

Asey vs. Irving National Bank.—Motion to continue injunction denied, and temporary injunction dissolved, with $13 costs.

Grassmuck vs. Richards.—The third person claiming an off et substantially denied a part of the defendant; under section 299 such debt can only be reached by action by a receiver. The plaintiff is entitled to an injunction until a sufficient opportunity is given to the receiver to commence an action. The other question discussed can also be better determined on such an action.

Erhardt vs. Sanborn.—This is not to be treated as an ordinary default, but as a judgment in an action on an award. The defendant executed the submission, and as represented before the arbitration. If the extent of the award were the result of an inadequate presentation of his case, he must look to his attorney as between himself and the plaintiff. The award is binding; were it a matter of discretion, however, I must say that the defendant's affidavit leaves overwhelmingly disproved the most important statements, and that the opposing affidavits place the defendant before the court in a most unfavorable light. The motion must be denied, with $10 costs.

Jaegers vs. Walstein.—The injunction must be continued until the cause can be properly tried at the Special Term, $10 costs to abide the event.

Smith vs. Benton.—Extra allowance of $500 to plaintiff's attorney, and a like sum to Messrs. Pulsford, Coates & Smith.

In the matter of Machado, &c.—Mr. Elliot F. Shepard is appointed Trustee. The order will contain the special provision such as is suggested by Mr. Shaw, but its form as to security, &c., may be settled in one day's notice.

Sarratt vs. Crawford.—The confession is bad. It is not stated that the board was furnished at defendant's request. The remainder is incoherent. It does not appear how much is due or how much contingent, nor to whom the notes were really given; yet about it is stated that the debt is justly due. As to amending, the party has not taken the trouble thus to file an affidavit. Motion granted, with $10 costs.

SUPREME COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Judge Lawrence.

Seringer vs. Schaefer.—Allowance of $1,000 granted the defendant.

Lofond et al. vs. Deems et al.—Memorandum for counsel.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART III.

Ochs vs. Ochs.—Reference ordered.

Wyckoff vs. O'Connor.—Order granting leave to reply.

COMMON PLEAS—EQUITY TERM.

By Judge Robinson.

Dillehar vs. Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company.—Motion granted. See memorandum.

MARINE COURT—CHAMBERS.

By Chief Justice Shea.

Motions Granted.—Ellis vs. Cook; Knapp vs. O'Donoghue; Chase vs. O'Donoghue.

Orders Granted.—Goetchius vs. Bears; Baeder vs. Mitzseherling, Zincke vs. Uizheimer; The Real Estate Trust Company vs. Kaster; Phillip vs. Gallagher; National Bank Vergennes vs. Wallbridge; Murray Hill Bank vs. Voorhis; Hardy vs. Hornby; Giles vs. Buckley; Schuilich vs. Zimmerman; Crowley vs. The Knickerbocker Life Insurance Company vs. Turner vs. Dakin; Todde vs. Fiske; Scott vs. Beardsley; Billman vs. Finbr.

Williams vs. Duryee.—The taxation as made is correct.

Hoyt vs. Goff.—Motion denied; no costs.

Motions Denied.—Frank vs. Orenstein; Hyatt vs. Miller; Marder vs. Lachman.

By Judge McAdam.

Klein vs. Schumberg.—The motion to vacate the order of arrest will be denied upon conditions that plaintiff serves his complaint this day, the defendant to serve his answer on the 17th, and case be tried on the 18th inst. (first case,) in Part I., without notice of trial, &c.

COURT NOTES.

Chief Justice Daly, of the Court of Common Pleas, is confined to his house by sickness, and Part I. of that Court was yesterday adjourned in consequence of his illness.

In the "Black Friday" suit of Thomas Robbins, Jr., and others against Jay Gould and others, which was recently discontinued, Judge Barrett yesterday awarded an extra allowance of $500 to the defendants.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, denied the motion made by John D. Sanborn to open a judgment obtained by default against him for $5,000 by Joel B. Erhardt. The grounds of the denial are given under the legal decisions.

Jenny Morris, a concert-saloon waiter, who stole $7 from an English visitor named William Watson, in a Broadway saloon, was sentenced by Judge Gildersleeve, in the Court of General Sessions yesterday, to one year in the Penitentiary.

The Society for the Reformation of Juvenile Delinquents obtained an injunction from Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, restraining the giving of theatrical performances in the Third Avenue Theatre until the proprietor of the latter has paid the requisite license fee.

John Burke, a youth of nineteen, living at No. 329 East Thirty-first street, who snatched a pocket-book from Mrs. Mary E. Pray, of No. 36 West Twenty-third street, on the 6th inst., was tried by Assistant District Attorney Russell yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. The jury convicted Burke, and Judge Gildersleeve sent him to the State Prison for three years and six months.

John R. Smith and John Willams, the two burglars who were caught by Capt. Caffrey in H. B. Claffin's work-rooms, on the second floor of the building at the corner of West Broadway and Leonard street, in the act of packing up silks and velvets valued at $5,000, which they had taken from a cabinet, the full particulars of which appeared in THE TIMES, were brought before Judge Cowing yesterday and committed in default of $2,000 bail each.

A number of proceedings have been begun by various religious and charitable institutions in this City to set aside assessments levied on their property. Nearly fifty of such proceedings are now on the calendar of the Supreme Court. This has been caused by the recent decision of the Court of Appeals, which affirmed the decision of Judge Lawrence holding that property used for religious or charitable purposes cannot be made the subject of assessment for local improvements.

On April 14 last George Keys, of No. 10 Spring street, borrowed $15 from McKenna & Duffy, No. 222 Third avenue, on a check for $50 signed by G. R. Hodgett, which he said was genuine. The check was subsequently found to be worthless, and Keys was arrested. In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday Assistant District Attorney Russell secured the conviction of Keys, and he was sentenced by Judge Gildersleeve to three years in the State Prison.

G. W. Dunham, of No. 293 West Fourteenth street, who was employed as a driver during the past Summer by the Commonwealth Ice Company, was arraigned before Justice Kasmire, at the Washington Place Police Court yesterday, on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses. It is alleged that he had collected a bill of $20 35 from Michaelis & Kastle, No. 635 Broadway, without the authority of his employers, and had applied the money to his own use. He was held in $2,000 bail to answer at the General Sessions.

The trial of the case of Catherine Davis against the German Savings Bank of Morrisiana was begun before Judge Joseph F. Daly and a jury in Part III. of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The plaintiff sues as President of the St. Matthews Sick Aid Society of Morrisiana, which had $700 on deposit with the bank. The former President of the society died in 1873, and then there came a division into factions. The pass-book came into the hands of one Doretta Helen, who claimed to be President, and she was paid the money. The present action is to recover the amount from the bank.

The case of William Herries against Norvell and others was brought up before Judge Van Vorst, in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday, on demurrer, but a young man who appeared in the place of the defendants' attorneys not being able to state the grounds of the demurrer the case was adjourned for a few days. The action is brought by the plaintiff for himself and other employes of the Republic to recover unpaid salaries. Judgment was recovered against the corporation which published the Republic, but the execution issued was returned unsatisfied, there being no property. The present proceeding is against the stockholders individually.

A MOTHER SEEKING HER CHILD.

A rather remarkable series of allegations were made to Judge Barrett in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday on the application by Kate Palen for the custody of her child. According to her story she gave birth to a female child in July last while an inmate of the New-York Infirmary for Women and Children. When the child was four days old a strange woman came to her bedside at the Infirmary and told her she wanted to obtain possession of the child. The woman in question said she had adopted a male infant and also wanted a female one. The mother refused to part with the little one, however, and the woman went away. The latter returned about three weeks afterward, and then the nurse took the child away from its mother and gave it to the woman. Kate Palen then took out a writ of habeas corpus to regain possession of the child. A return to the writ was made by the officers of the Infirmary, stating that they had never had possession of the little girl, and that the mother herself had given her away. This, however, the mother denied and a reference was ordered.

SUIT AGAINST DUNCAN, SHERMAN & CO.

The suit of David Watts and others against Duncan, Sherman & Co. and others was argued on demurrer before Judge Van Vorst in the Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday. The plaintiffs, it appears, had money on deposit with the firm of Ducan, Sherman & Co., and on the day preceding the failure of the firm obtained their check drawn against the firm. This plaintiffs deposited in their own bank, and it was next day presented through the Clearing-house to the National Bank of the State of New York. It was not paid. The plaintiffs in their complaint allege that said bank securities for such checks as Duncan, Sherman & Co. might draw, and that the Assignee of this latter on the morning of the failure withdrew these securities. The complaint was demurred to by the defendants on various grounds, and after argument by counsel, Judge Van Vorst reserved his decision.

THE CITY LIABLE FOR UNSAFE AWNINGS.

The case of William H. Hume against the Mayor, &c., argued on appeal before the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, is a rather peculiar one in some aspects. The plaintiff sued to recover $25,000 as damages on account of injuries received in consequence of the falling upon him of a wooden awning, at Fourth avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street. The awning projected over the sidewalk, and fell on Feb. 22, 1867, on account of its being overburdened with snow. The plaintiff claimed that it was the City's duty to see that the awning was secure. The jury gave a verdict in the plaintiff's favor for $18,385. The City now appeals, claiming that the defect was a latent and not a patent one; that its duty was ended by the passing of suitable ordinances regarding unsafe projections on buildings, and it could not be held responsible for accidents of that character. Decision was reserved. Edmund Randolph Robinson appeared for the plaintiff, and ex-Judge A. J. Requier for the defendants.

A WEST SIDE HOMICIDE CASE.

Assistant District Attorney Rollins commenced the trial of his fifth homicide case during the past week before Judge Sutherland yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. The prisoner is a man named Daniel Bourne, living at No. 70 Gansevoort street, and he is charged with murder in the second degree, in having, on the night of Sept. 14, struck a woman named Margaret Seaboung on the head with a club, inflicting injuries from which she died almost immediately. It appears that the deceased, who was related to the prisoner's wife, was in the habit of drinking continually with the latter. This was a source of annoyance to Bourne, who, as alleged, on the night in question vented his wrath on the woman, with the result stated. The further hearing of the case will be continued to-day.

ITALIAN SWINDLERS SENTENCED.

A very interesting case was tried by Assistant District Attorney Russell yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. The prisoners were two Italians, named Lorenzo Mazzin and Viraldi Michel, and their offense was grand larceny by trick and device, better known as a confidence game. It appeared that on Sept. 20, an Italian barber named Michael Mona, who had saved some $500 out West, came to this City to take passage for Europe and was met on the Battery by Michel, who speedily ingratiated himself into the confidence of the stranger. Michel said that he was the servant of a good priest with whom he was going to Europe, and advised Mona to meet his master, who would procure him a ticket for Europe cheap. Mona fell into the trap, and accompanied Michel to Washington Square, where Mazzin, the good priest," in full ecclesiastical garb, was waiting. His reverence immediately took a deep interest in the barber's affairs, and conversed with him freely on spiritual matters. The bogus priest also showed Mona a valise filled with what he said were gold coins, which he was taking with him to Europe, and pictured the good time all three would have on the voyage. At the solicitation of Michel, Mona was induced to give all his savings—consisting of United States money amounting to $460, and $50 in French coin—to the pretended priest for safe keeping, the "servant" of his reverence stating that this course would insure special favors from Providence. The swindlers then sent Mona to purchase cigars for the party, and during his absence disappeared. On the description furnished the police, Mazzin and Michel were arrested and identified by Mona as the men who had swindled him. Six of the twenty dollar gold pieces were found in the possession of Mazzin, and he was recognized by the police as a notorious swindler. Mr. Russell secured the conviction of both swindlers, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the fraudulent priest and his "servant" to five years each in the State Prison.

THE WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION.

THE DEMOCRATIC VOTE NOT UNUSUALLY LARGE, AND THE RESULT ONLY WHAT WAS TO HAVE BEEN EXPECTED.

From the Wheeling Intelligencer, Oct. 13.

There is no reason to doubt that the Democracy have carried the State by a large majority. It is pretty near the old and well-known case of the Dutch taking Holland for the Democracy to carry West Virginia. The highest vote ever polled by the Republicans was in 1872, at which time they cast 32,315 votes for Gen. Grant. This was their utmost strength in the State; in fact, it was rather over than under their strength. We see no reason thus far to suppose that their vote has fallen off in the late election. It has most likely increased considerably. The vote was decidedly increased in this county. We presume it was also elsewhere. The Republicans have not votes enough—nor have they had since 1868—to carry West Virginia. The Democracy showed in 1872 that they could poll 40,305 straight-out votes in West Virginia, and yet have plenty to spare among those who voted for Gov. Jacob and Gen. Grant, and many of the Republicans friends were united in the recent election with the 40,305 men who voted against him in 1872. So that the way to approximate the relative strength of the Republican and Democratic Parties in West Virginia is to subtract Gen. Grant's vote in 1872 from the combined vote of Jacob and Camden last year. This combined vote was 83,193, and the Republican vote for Grant was 32,315. Subtracting the latter from the former, and we have as a remainder a Democratic majority of 18,563. This majority is to some extent fictitious, for the reason that in 1872 the vote cast was be yond the voting ratio that well-settled statistics have prescribed to population. The per cent. of voters was so large that ever since that time a suspicion has been entertained that votes are bogus. But discounting even 5 000 votes as illegitimate, and still we have over 13,000 Democratic majority in West Virginia on the basis of subtraction that we have assumed in Grant's vote of 1872. If we are correct in this calculation, no one need be surprised if it should turn out that West Virginia has now given all the Democratic majority that the Democrats claim. As we have said, it is simply the old case of the Dutch taking Holland.

NOT DRAWN TO THE DEMOCRATS.

Dr. E. J. Bonine, of Niles, Mich., who was a Representative in the State Legislature four years, and Surgeon of the Second Michigan Infantry during the war, denies a report in circulation that he had gone over to the Democratic Party, and had written a long letter "in support of the conglomerated mass of rebels, Democrats, and fag ends, whose principal leaders are Southern traitors and Northern copperheads." The Doctor says that when he loses his senses so that he cannot see in his dreams those emaciated human forms coming forth from Belle Isle and Andersonville he may be induced to vote for the Greek-Democratic ticket. As the battle of the Wilderness is fought over again by the human mind to the field to look after the wounded, and witnessed some most horrid butcheries of Union soldiers. During the long, dark night he had to listen to the groans and cries for help, and when the morning came, instead of being allowed to help the sick and wounded soldiers, he was surrounded by rebels and compelled to look on while his comrades were shown like dogs. Hundreds of Union men were shot after they had surrendered on that morning, under his immediate observation, and no colored man was spared, to say nothing of the white soldiers who were most cruelly assassinated. Col. Frank Graves, of Niles, as brave a man as ever went into battle, was murdered on that morning because he refused to put off his boots and give them to a gang of rebel soldiers. In Dr. Bonine's letter, embodying these facts, he says: "After having seen all this and more too, it is hard to be accused of going over to the Democratic Party, while it is in full fellowship with those vile murderers of Col. Frank Graves and so many others of our brave union soldiers."

GEN. BARTLETT'S ILLNESS.

Speaking of Gen. W. F. Bartlett, the Boston Journal of Monday says: "During the past week encouraging advices have been received from Pittsfield which lead his friends to hope that a change may take place and enable him to regain his strength. Last week Gen. Bartlett was so low that it was feared he could not recover, and while he is yet a very sick man, there are slight improvements in his condition, which make his friends hope for the best. The prec

THE REAL ESTATE MARKET.

A. H. Muller & Son, by order of the Supreme Court, in foreclosure, Thomas D. Cottman, Esq., Referee, sold a brick stable, with lot 25 by 100, on West 40th st., north side, 325 feet east of 8th av., for $8,050, to George A. Sadler.

R. V. Harnett, under a Supreme Court foreclosure order, J. M. Levy, Esq., Referee, sold a stone church, with plot of land 75.5 by 100 on Madison av., north-east corner of 47th st., for $34,000, to W. REAL ESTATE AT AUCTION.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE UNITED States for the District of New-Jersey.—In the matter of EDWARD J. WATSON and HENRY CUNNINGHAM, bankrupts.—In pursuance of an order made and filed herein, bearing date the 5th day of September, 1876, I will expose and sell at public auction at the Pavilion Hotel, in the city of Paterson, New-Jersey, on the 25th day of October, 1876, at 11 o'clock A. M., the following described premises to wit: All that certain indenture of lease made by the Danforth Locomotive and Machine Company to one Edward S. Jaffray, dated May 1, 1869, and duly recorded in the Clerk's office of Passaic County, in the State of New-Jersey, in Book R. 3 of Deeds for said county, p. 447, &c., of the following described premises: Beginning at the south edge of the tail of the present middle canal at a point one hundred and three feet westerly from the north-west corner of the lot formerly occupied by Caleb M. Godwin; thence running westerly along said ninety-seven feet to the north-east corner of the lot sold by the society for Establishing Useful Manufactures to P. Lorillard, Esq., thence southerly along the line of his lot about one hundred and seventy feet to the line of Congress street; thence easterly along the line of Congress street ninety-seven feet, and thence northerly about one hundred and seventy feet to the place of beginning, it being the western half of the lot leased by the said society to one James Shepard by indenture of lease, dated the thirtieth day of January, 1827, which lease is recorded in Clerk's office of the County of Essex in Book V., 2 of Deeds, page 249, &c., together with the right and privilege of taking and using upon the said lot from the present middle canal of the said society, one foot square of water, equal to one hundred and forty-four square inches of water, to be taken and used under certain conditions, restrictions, and limitations mentioned in the aforesaid indenture of lease, and in said indentures of lease therein mentioned and thereby renewed, particularly specified, and the unexpired term of years therein mentioned, and all the water rights and privileges thereby granted, and all the right, title, and interest of the said Watson & Cunningham in and to said lease and the unexpired term of years, water rights and privileges and lot of land and of, in, and to all the agreements, covenants, and provisions of the said leases, and all the right, title, and interest of said Watson & Cunningham of, in, and to the original leases in said lease mentioned, subject, however, to all the agreements, covenants, and conditions in said renewal of lease and said original leases therein obligatory upon or to be observed, kept, and performed by and lessees therein named, or by their assigns. And also all the leasehold interests of lease made by the Society for Establishing Useful Manufactures to one Edward S. Jaffray, dated May 1, 1869, and duly recorded in the Clerk's Office of Passaic County, in Book R. 3 of Deeds for said county, p. 441, &c., of the following described premises, viz.: The privilege of taking and drawing from said middle canal in the rear of said lot two hundred and eighty-eight square inches of water, at such measure, to be used on said lot under certain conditions, restrictions, and limitations, and in the manner as is in said indenture of lease, and in said indentures of lease therein mentioned and thereby renewed, particularly specified, and the unexpired term of years therein mentioned, and all the water rights and privileges thereby granted, and all the right, title, and interest of said Watson and Cunningham of, in, and to said lease, unexpired term of years, water rights and privileges, and of, in, and to all the covenants and provisions of the said lease. And also all their right, title, and interest of in, and to the original lease in said lease above mentioned, subject, however, to all the agreements, covenants, and provisions of the said lease, and to all their right, title, and interest of, in, and to the original lease in said lease above mentioned, subject, however, to all the agreements, covenants, and provisions in said renewal of lease and said original lease therein obligatory upon or to be observed, kept, and performed by the said lessees therein named or by their assigns. Also all the buildings, water-wheels, and upright shafting upon the premises described in the first above mentioned indenture of lease, made by and between the Danforth Locomotive and Machine Company of the first part, and the said Edward S. Jaffray of the second part.—Dated September 29, 1876.

THE STATE CAMPAIGN.

REPUBLICAN ACTIVITY IN THE SOUTHERN COUNTIES.

A THOROUGH CANVASS BEING MADE IN BROOME COUNTY—A MAJORITY OF 1,300 PREDICTED—THE CONTEST FOR THE CONGRESSIONAL NOMINATION — THE DEMOCRATS RESORTING TO FALSEHOOD AND CORRUPTION.

From Our Special Correspondent.

BINGHAMTON, Saturday, Oct. 14, 1876.

It was a fortunate thing for the Republican Party of New-York that the October elections did not all go in their favor. Had Indiana and Ohio both gone Republican, the same apathy that has hitherto characterized the canvass of that party in this State would have continued, and there would have been some danger that Tilden's "still hunters" would have caught them napping on the day of election. As it is, they are now satisfied that they have got work to do in this campaign and they are going to do it. The result in Ohio and Indiana, although highly favorable to the Republicans in both States so far as national issues were concerned, gaining, as they have, ten Congressmen, is regarded by the party here as a transfer of the battle-ground to this State, and has shown the necessity of every man rallying to his standard and carrying on the campaign with vigor from now till the day of election. If this is done and the full strength of the party is brought out at the polls, I have not yet seen a Republican who doubts that we will carry the State by at least thirty thousand majority. The Republicans of Broome County appreciate the situation, and are determined to poll a full vote of the party on the 7th of November. A thorough canvass is now being made in every township and school district under the direction of Mr. C. E. Martin, the Chairman of the County Committee, and, thus far, the result is most encouraging. No defection is found in the ranks—only one Republican in the whole county having been discovered who has a leaning for "Tilden and Reform"—and the Liberals, who in 1872 and 1874 were very numerous here about, are now more than ninety per cent. of them, for Hayes and Wheeler. The lowest estimate that any Republican makes of the majority in this county in November is 1,000, and the general opinion is that it will reach 1,300. Two years ago, when Tilden ran for Governor, it was 535. The party is thoroughly united and harmonious. The slight disaffection in this city with regard to the Congressional nomination in this district has all passed off, and the men who threatened a bolt are now taking the stump nightly for the ticket. The district comprises the Counties of Broome, Tioga, Tompkins, and Schuyler, and usually polls from 1,500 to 2,000 Republican majority. Hon. Jeremiah W. Dwight, the Republican candidate, is a retired merchant living in Dryden. Tompkins County, and will receive the full vote of his party and probably more. His Democratic opponent is Gen. Edward F. Jones, of this city, who ran against Mr. Platt two years ago and was defeated by about seven hundred votes. He was formerly a Republican, afterward a Liberal, and finally was captured and held fast in the Democratic Party by a Congressional nomination. When he ran two years ago he went around among all his acquaintances in this county and asked them as a particular favor to vote for him merely as a compliment, saying that he did not, of course, expect to be elected, but he was anxious to have a flattering complimentary vote, which might give him strength in the Democratic Party, and, perhaps, enable him, some time or other, to get a nomination on their State ticket. Under these representations, coupled with the fact that Jones is a "good fellow" socially, some three or four hundred Republicans voted for him. To their astonishment, they woke up the next morning after election and found that Jones and his friends were claiming a victory. Fuller returns showed that Jones had not been awarded a seat in Congress, but he made such a close run as to produce a "scare" among his good-natured Republican friends, and they don't propose to vote for Jones out of "compliment" any more. This "complimenting Jones" has been found to be a risky business, and he will not get a single Republican vote this Fall. The Republican nominee for Assemblyman from this county is Edwin C. Moody. The Democrats have nominated Jerome De Witt. Both are young lawyers of this city, and both are respectable nominations. Moody's election, however, is conceded by both parties. Last year the Democrats elected their candidate, [Mr. Ford,] because they put up their strongest man, while the Republicans nominated a very weak one. Mr. Ford declined a re-nomination this year, and, if he had not, he could not be elected against Mr. Moody. The county nominees of the Republican Party this year are all satisfactory, and there is nothing to cause a split or to prevent a full party vote. The Republicans are holding from three to five meetings each night in this county, and expect to increase the number from now till election. Mr. Martin, the Chairman of the County Committee, is an indefatigable as well as a very shrewd worker, and if a single Republican in the county stays away from the polls this Fall it will not be his fault. He has arranged to have a public meeting in every school district in the county between now and election, and there are 229 districts outside of this city. He also intends to have as many as four out-door mass-meetings, at different points, at which he hopes to be able to secure speakers of national reputation. He says that he never has known a time when meetings were better attended or more enthusiastic than now, although at first the people were very apathetic and did not care about having any meetings. He thinks if Chauncey Depew, or District Attorney Tenney, of Brooklyn, would come up here and make one or two speeches it would accomplish a vast deal of good. He is also very anxious to have Speaker Blaine or "Bob" Ingersoll here once during the campaign, and promises to have an audience that may be measured by the acre. Thus far the Republicans of Broome County have had to depend almost entirely on local speakers. Among those who are out addressing the people almost nightly are: Hon. O. W. Chapman, late Superintendent of Insurance; P. W. Hopkins, G. F. McDonald, S. C. Millard, Hon. George Sherwood, A. E. Andrews, Frank Stewart, and E. O'Connor, of this city. They all report full audiences and great enthusiasm wherever they go. Mr. O'Connor is a lawyer of this city, and a life-long Democrat, who has become disgusted with Tilden and his fraudulent professions of "Reform," and has made up his mind to support Hayes and Wheeler. He is doing a good work among the Irishmen of this county by showing them how they have been made tools of by demagogues calling themselves Democrats, and are driven like cattle to the polls to vote uniformly and in one solid mass for the Democratic ticket. He urges them to show more independence, like the Americans and Germans, and indicate that they have minds of their own by distributing their votes among parties according as their principles shall deserve their suffrages.

In Broome County, as everywhere else throughout the State, the tracts and handbills issued from the Tilden printing shop in Liberty street are found scattered broadcast. The lying placard crediting Tilden with a reduction of seven or eight millions in the State taxes stares every farmer in the face throughout the county, and is calculated, in the opinion of many Republicans here, to do a good deal of damage, notwithstanding its falsity has been so often exposed in speeches and newspapers. The Chairman of the County Committee here thinks that more effort ought to be made by the State Committee to counteract these handbills, and says that the distribution of a tract published by the Queens County Republican Committee and entitled "Facts for the People," would, in his opinion, do a great deal of good in the rural districts.

The Democrats are holding comparatively few meetings in this section. They do not dare trust their cause to open discussion, but are relying on the falsehoods circulated in the printed tracts that emanate from the "literary bureau," and in corrupt personal influence with the voters. As far as can be ascertained here, they propose to secure a certain number of votes in each school district, whenever it is possible, by bribery, in case they cannot be reached by other means. It is not believed that many Republicans in this county can be captured in this way, but there is no doubt that the "still hunt," which is the distinguishing feature of Tilden's campaign in this State, is intended to cover some kind of rascality, and it is very certain that any man or party that will persist in circulating such a barefaced lie as is contained in Tilden's placard about the State taxes would not stick at bribery if he had a chance.

THE GERMAN REPUBLICANS OF TROY—LARGE MEETING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TROY, Oct, 16.—The German Republican mass-meeting at Apollo Hall to-night was largely attended. Addresses were delivered by Solomon Spitzer, of Williamsburg, N. Y., and Dr. E. H. Makk, editor Buffalo Freie Presse. There was much enthusiasm, and the Germans are thoroughly aroused.

THE GREAT BROOKLYN BARBECUE.

PREPARATIONS FOR A GRAND REPUBLICAN DEMONSTRATION—OUTLINE OF THE PROGRAMME.

The arrangements for the great Republican barbecue, to be held at Myrtle Avenue Park, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Eighteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fifth Wards of that City, are now substantially complete, and the several committees having the affair in charge have issued extensive programmes of the proceedings. Over fifty thousand tickets have been issued, and a vast multitude are expected to respond thereto. Two of the oxen to be roasted will be exhibited in the vicinity of the City Hall, Fifth Avenue Hotel, and in Wall street, this morning, drawn in trucks by horses gayly decorated, and in the afternoon they will be exhibited in Brooklyn, in different parts of the City. The barbecue exercises will open at 11 o'clock on Thursday morning; and during the day and night speeches will be delivered from five stands which have been erected for that purpose. The following-named speakers are expected to address the people: Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks, Geo. Daniel E. Sickles, Hon. A. W. Tenney, John Cochrane, Judge Dittenneufer, Judge E. D. Culver, Rev. Matthew Hale Smith, Gen. James W. Husted, Major Z. K. Pangborn, Hon. Daniel Dougherty, Hon. S. B. Buttenner, Hon. William H. Simmons, Hon. John Oakey, Hon. Richard Busteed, Gen. John W. Mohar, Hon. Henry O'Conner, Capt. James Sanur, Dr. David Bell, Capt. Robert Crowe, John C. Green, Rev. Henry Hyland Garnett, U. E. Brown, A. B. Copes, Joseph Brewer, T. S. Stewart, Rev. W. H. Dixon, C. H. Curtis, Hon. John Q. Allen, Patrick H. Reason, William Rich, of Troy; Peter Guignon, Rev. S. Peterson, and Rev. Jacob Thomas, and music will be furnished by Conterno's full band; and a choir of 100 singers, including the Hatton Glee Club, under the leadership of Profs. Bechter, Robinss, and Erulf, who will open the proceedings by a grand chorus especially arranged for the occasion. The park will be finely decorated and brilliantly illuminated in the evening by calcium lights, Chinese lanterns, and fire-works. Salutes will also be fired during the day and evening from Brooklyn Heights, Washington, and Myrtle Avenue Parks, and in the evening there will be a grand torch-light parade of the Boys in Blue, Minute Men, and other uniformed organizations of New-York, Brooklyn, and other cities. The attendance of many prominent speakers, in addition to those mentioned above, has been promised, including Hon. James G. Blaine, Hon. Robert G. Ingersoll, Hon. Carl Schurz, Gen. John A. Dix, Hon. Edwin D. Morgan, and Hon. William A. Wheeler. The following named gentlemen will have charge of the various stands erected for the speakers: Stand No. 1—Charles W. Godard, Chairman; stand No. 2—Darwin R. James, Chairman; stand No. 3—Irish-American, William H. Grace; stand No. 4—German-American, Salomon Spitzer; stand No. 5—Colored, Dr. P. W. Ray, Chairman. It is confidently expected that this will be one of the grandest demonstrations of the kind ever witnessed in this State. Mr. Charles W. Godard is President of the Committee on Organization, assisted by Darwin R. James as Vice-President and Alvin Tenney as Secretary.

HOME WORK.

To-morrow, Wednesday, is the second day for registration of voters. Don't fail to register early.

The citizens of the First Ward will meet this evening at No. 36 Greenwich street, to organize a Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club.

Gen. Sharpe and Gen. John A. Dix will speak in the Morgan Wigwam, corner of Classon and Putnam avenues, Brooklyn, to-morrow evening.

A meeting of the Republican Club will be held at No. 152 Franklin street to-morrow evening, when a number of good campaign speeches may be expected.

A ballot taken on Saturday last on the 2 P. M. Lehigh Valley train, between Mauch Chunk and Philadelphia, resulted in 193 votes for Hayes, 40 for Tilden, and 2 for Cooper.

The Boys in Blue of the First Assembly District held a meeting at No. 154 Franklin street last evening, and organized their third company, with the following officers: John Glynn, Captain; Patrick J. Hickey, First Lieutenant, and George Hanley, Second Lieutenant.

Active preparations are in progress for the grand monster Republican mass-meeting which is to be held at Sing Sing to-morrow. By special arrangement the Hudson River Railroad will run trains at half fare from the Fourtieth street depot, and from the up-river stations.

The Boys in Blue of the Ninth Assembly District will parade this evening, and after marching through the principal streets of the district, they will proceed up town, passing the residence of Gen. Dix and the Fifth Avenue Hotel. The organization is fully uniformed and thoroughly drilled.

Gen. E. B. Fowler has issued a general order commanding a grand parade of the Brooklyn Boys in Blue, to take place on Thursday, the day on which the great Republican barbecue is to be held. Over five thousand of the Boys in Blue from this City will be in line. They are to be joined in the parade by the New-York regiments.

A largely-attended meeting of Republicans was held on Saturday night at Arcbbold's Hall, Newcastle. Edward B. Lane, of Newcastle, presided. The Young American Boys in Blue of Sing Sing, an organization numbering 100 members, were present, having marched from the village mentioned. Stirring addresses were delivered by Col. Lambert, of New-York; Major Willard Bullard, and Jacob M. Patterson, Jr.

A correspondent, writing from Schuyler County, says that the Republicans are all alive. They are holding numerous and spirited meetings. The sentiment in favor of Hayes and Wheeler and against Tilden is growing rapidly. Hundreds of life-long Democrats avow their intention to vote the Republican ticket. Schuyler County promises to give one of her rousing old war-time Republican majorities. Among the most efficient workers in Schuyler and Steuben Counties is Mr. George Becker. He is speaking day and night with excellent effect.

The Boys in Blue of the Ninth Assembly District, numbering 350 members, will parade through the principal streets of the district to-night, after which they will visit the residence of Major Gen. Dix, passing the Fifth Avenue Hotel. A pioneer corps has been formed in connection with this organization, which will parade with them. The mounted corps will also join in the march. Col. E. M. H. Enters is the commander, who is ably assisted by many ex-army officers. The organization in this district was mustered and trained by Major William A. Corsa. The Republicans of the Ninth District will make a good show in November.

REPUBLICAN DEMONSTRATION IN PATERSON.

The various Hayes and Wheeler Clubs of Paterson, N. J., had a large torch-light parade last evening, and notwithstanding the decided coolness of the weather the streets were lined with people. About two thousand men appeared in line, and with their handsome uniforms, illuminated by torches, fire-works and calcium lights, presented a magnificent spectacle. Many houses along the route were handsomely illuminated, and at various points the procession was greeted with enthusiastic cheers. The line of march was formed on Broadway, right resting on Main street, and moved in the following order: Eighth Ward Club, Seventh Ward Club, Texas Rangers, Sixth Ward Club, Mill's Guards, Fifth Ward Club, Hayes and Wheeler Central Club, Fourth Ward "Tiger" Battalion, the Phelps' Guards, Blauvelt Battery, Third Ward "Lion" Battalion, Hobart Guards, Tuttle Continental Guards, First Ward Club. The principal streets were traversed, and the clubs dismissed at a late hour. The demonstration was one of the largest ever seen in the city.

REPUBLICAN PARADE IN JERSEY CITY.

There was a large and imposing Republican parade in Jersey City last night. The main streets of the city were thronged as if on a gala occasion, and the procession was accompanied on its entire route by an immense crowd of people. There must have been 6,000 in line. The most noticeable features in the procession were the Robeson Battery, led by an immense four-horse transparency and followed by a life-boat manned with sailors; the Farrier, Spodone, and Payne Guards, all colored, and numbering about six hundred men; the Toffey Lancers, Mounted Veterans, the Hayes and Wheeler Regiment of Boys in Blue, and the immense number of citizens on horseback, in carriages, and every conceivable vehicle crowded with men. Some of the carriages contained ladies. There were a number of trucks containing representations of different trades, such as blacksmiths, carpenters, and hatchers. One carriage contained the Goddess of Liberty. There was a profusion of fireworks, and the trucks and carriages were almost loaded down with flags. The houses all along the line, and particularly in Jersey avenue, were handsomely illuminated and decorated. In one window was a little girl with the American flag wrapped around her, and waving a tiny flag. She was vociferously cheered. A large number of transparencies were carried in the procession, bearing appropriate mottoes. The Evening Journal had a huge transparency in line.

THE BROOKLYN RING DEMOCRATS.

The Democratic General Committee of Kings County met last evening for the purpose of receiving the credentials of the delegates elected to the various nominating conventions. The "Boss" followers had a very unhappy time of it. The two principal contests were in the Third Assembly District and in the New-Lots District. The delegation from the Third Assembly District in favor of the nomination of John Shanley for Assembly were admitted, but not without a bitter contest. Mr. Edward Toohil, who was a candidate against Shanley, charged excitedly that the grossest frauds were perpetrated at the primary, and that both Shanley and James Dunn, his backer, were guilty of treachery. The backers of Dunn retorted, and some very unpleasant epithets were freely bandied about. It is the opinion of many Democrats that in giving the nomination to Shanley, who was indicted and tried for ballot-box stuffing, that an injury has been worked to the ticket which the best nominations for other positions will fail to counteract. In the New-Lots District the delegation in favor of Bernard Midas for the office of Charity Commissioner was admitted, defeating Mr. Gilman Schenck. Midas, who is now a Charity Commissioner, is perhaps McLaughlin's most fawning follower. Mr. Schenck is one of the most respectable Democrats in the party. It was rumored last night that a change of policy had been agreed on by the "Boss" and his counselors concerning the conventions to be held to-day. On Saturday the purpose was to adjourn the conventions until after the Republicans and Independent Democrats have made their nominations. The "Boss," it was said, had determined to carry things with a high hand, and that the admission of the Shanley and Midas delegations were indications of the policy to be pursued in making all the nominations. A number of prominent Democrats are still in favor of adjourning the conventions until after the Republican nominations. One of these said yesterday that if the conventions were not adjourned the regular Democrats would surely be beaten in November.

THE CITY DEMOCRACY.

A meeting of the Conference Committee appointed by the Tammany County Convention was held yesterday at Tammany Hall, Peter B. Olney in the chair. Communications were received from a number of clubs and organizations recommending the nomination of different candidates, and the committee, without taking any action upon them, adjourned until this afternoon. The Anti-Tammany Conference Committee will meet this evening at Irving Hall. The conventions of the two factions to nominate Assemblymen met in all the districts of the City last evening, and each appointed a Conference Committee. A meeting of the various Conference Committees appointed at the Tammany Congressional, Aldermanic, and Assembly conventions will meet this afternoon at the Fourteenth street wigwam, to agree upon a plan of action. The friends of James O'Brien appear to be very well satisfied with the stand taken by him at the Anti-Tammany Convention, and there will be a mass-meeting in his favor held to-night in the Fifteenth Assembly District, at the corner of Thirty-fourth street and Eighth avenue. If Morrissey should withdraw from the Anti-Tammany organization, it is said that a large number of dissatisfied Democrats who are now in the Tammany ranks, and who are unfriendly to him, will desert Kelly and join the opposition. The two "Johns," it is said, have been in private consultation several times since the nature of the conferences held before the late conventions. The friends of O'Brien charge Morrissey with an attempt to sell out the Anti-Tammany Party in his own interest.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

The Democrats of the Fifth District of Hudson County, N. J., have nominated Hon. Garrett D. Van Reipen for member of Assembly.

Daniel L. Martin has been nominated for Assembly by the Democrats of the Third District of Middlesex County, N. J.

The Republicans of the Fourth Assembly District of Newark, N. J., yesterday decided to make no nomination. There are two Democratic candidates for this district—Clark, regular, and Vegtte, independent.

The Hunterdon County Democrats have nominated James M. Pidcock for State Senator.

REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS.

The Republicans of this State have made nominations as follows:

MONTGOMERY COUNTY.—For Assembly, David W. Shuler; Sheriff, Peter D. Moyer; County Clerk, A. H. Burton; Justice of Sessions, Joseph Noxon.

FOR ASSEMBLY.—Albany County, First District, James Fisher; Second District, Waters W. Braman. Erie County, Third District, Edward Gallagher. Oswego County, Second District, George M. Case.

A SEVERE HIT.

The Lockport Union is a Democratic paper, and has its own way to rap Tildenism over the knuckles. This is what it said on Friday: "The great victory achieved in Indiana, it is conceded, is largely due to the personal influence and discreet counsel of Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks. He was vigilant from the opening to the close of the campaign. He encouraged all Democrats in the work necessary to consummate a triumph. He held up to view the importance of a united party, and would not for a moment tolerate the suspicion that there was in the State a Hendricks party in contradistinction to the universal Democratic Party of the country."

OUR OWN CONTEST.

After speaking encouragingly of the Republican prospects in this State, the Ogdensburg Journal says: "We count little upon discord in the Democratic ranks, although we know Tilden and his intimates and political associates are intensely disliked in all the Democratic strongholds of the State. It is not necessary that Republicans should build their hopes of success upon a split or decay of Tilden's unpopularity with his own party, for the reason that they have only to do their duty energetically and bring their own party strength to the polls to win a glorious victory."

A WHALE IN THE CHESAPEAKE.

The Baltimore Sun of the 12th inst. says; "The officers and several passengers by the steamship Helen, of the Eastern Shore Steam-boat Company, report that on Sunday morning a large black whale grounded on Occohannock bar, Northampton County, Va., about forty miles from the mouth of the Chesapeake, and was killed next day. Occohannock Creek is on the route of the steamer Helen, and Capt. Rayner, her commander, together with his crew, had a fight with the whale. The leviathan grounded about 7 A. M. in six feet water, where he remained all day, and crowds of people came from all sections to get a look at the unusual visitor. The whale at intervals spouted up the water, and made great exertions to get off, but each succeeding effort sent it further into shallow water. On Monday the carcass was to be taken ashore at high tide. The oil will be tried out and sold. Mr. John Addison, a resident of the locality, brought a piece of the tail of the whale to Baltimore. The whale was 37½ feet long, weight about two tons, length of tail 6 feet, mouth 3 feet. It is thought the whale was either driven into the Chesapeake by a south-east gale or followed a vessel, and in attempting to put to sea entered the wrong inlet and was stranded."

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

To-morrow, Wednesday, is the second day for registration of voters. Be sure you register early.

Controller Green paid yesterday the salaries of the public school teachers for the month of September.

John Littlewood, of No. 20 Desbrosses street, died yesterday from a fracture of the base of the skull, caused by a fall on the pavement on Saturday.

The members of the Gold and Silver Commission met yesterday at the Post Office, and transacted routine business. The sessions are held with closed doors.

The Board of Apportionment met yesterday and authorized the Controller to issue City Parks improvement fund stock, amounting to $25,000, for the Park Department.

The tug-boat Louis, with two garbage scows in tow, unexpectedly sank yesterday afternoon off Coney Island, while returning to this City. Assistance has been sent by the Coast Wrecking Company.

The following is the weekly statement of Chamberlain Tappan: Balance in the City Treasury Oct. 7, $1,290,684 77; receipts, $2,383,716 24; payments, $2,388,384 62; balance, Oct. 14, $1,286,016 83.

The Young People's Christian Association of the Sixteenth Baptist Church announce a course of lectures, to be held in the church, Sixteenth street, near Eighth avenue, Wednesday evenings, Oct. 18 and 25, and Nov. 1, 8, and 15.

City Marshal Hayes yesterday seized the steamer Colon, of the Pacific Mail Line, for arrears of personal taxes alleged to be due by the company for 1874, amounting to $180,000. The seizure was made at the company's dock foot of Canal street.

The fourth annual meeting of the choirs of Trinity Parish will take place at Trinity Chapel, West Twenty-fifth street, near Broadway, on Thursday evening next at 8 o'clock. An address will be delivered by Rev. Dr. Dix, and 100 selected voices of the Trinity choir will render the music.

Controller Green presented to the Board of Apportionment at the meeting yesterday a petition of the Trustees of the Nineteenth Ward, asking for an appropriation, to be included in the estimate for 1877, for the erection of a building in said ward for school purposes. The petition was referred to the Controller.

The trial of Capt. Josiah L. Grindle, of the ship St. Mark, charged with cruel and unusual punishment on shipboard, was concluded yesterday afternoon in the United States Circuit Court, before Judge Benedict. The argument of counsel was heard, and Judge Benedict will charge the jury at the opening of court this morning.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of St. Luke's Home for Aged Women will be celebrated on Wednesday, Oct. 18, at the Home, corner of Eighty-ninth street and Madison avenue. The house will be open to visitors from the hour of 11 A. M. The exercises will be held in the Church of the Beloved Disciple, next the Home, at the hour of 2 P. M.

Between the hours of 9 o'clock on Friday night and 6 o'clock on Saturday morning last, the store of Hand E. Merkle, merchant tailor, at No. 640 Sixth avenue, was visited by burglars and robbed of clothing and cloths valued at $732. The burglars unlocked the hall door of the premises and gained access to the store by forcing open a door leading from the hallway.

Ephraim L. Snow and George W. Snow, composing the firm of Snow & Son, iron merchants, of No. 206 Water street and No. 516 East Twentieth street, assigned their property for the benefit of creditors to Ferdinand Stern yesterday. Jacob Floersheim and Nehemiah Floersheim, composing the firm of Floersheim Brothers, made a similar assignment to Reginald Hart yesterday.

Mr. W. S. Ward, naturalist of the New-York Aquarium, will be at the library of the Aquarium this evening for the purpose of conferring with those who desire to avail themselves of the privileges of the library and the laboratory connected therewith. In the consideration of the applications special attention will be paid to the request of those who are engaged in such lines of scientific inquiry as relate to the anatomy of fish and marine animals.

At the meeting of the Board of Police yesterday the following transfers were made: Sergt. Stephen Keating, Fourth to Twenty-ninth Precinct; Sergt. J. J. Taylor, Twenty-ninth to Fourth; Roundsmen Ernest Schrott and John T. Kelly, from the Twenty-ninth to the Thirteenth and Twenty-first Precincts, respectively; Patrolman John O'Mahoney, Fifth to Twenty-third Precinct; Michael Flynn, Twenty-first to Nineteenth Sub; and James Curry, from Nineteenth Sub to Twenty-first Precinct.

BROOKLYN.

The primaries of the Slocum Democrats were held last night in Brooklyn, and passed off quietly.

Oliver Cotter detected ten liquor-dealers violating the Excise law on Sunday, and has preferred charges against all of them.

Last Wednesday Patrick Ennis, of Maspeth, Long Island, came to this City to give testimony in a suit pending before Mr. P. Barnard as Referee. Since that time he has not been seen or heard of by his friends.

Mrs. Robert Thackenberry was fatally burned while lighting a fire at her residence, No. 196 Smith street, yesterday. Her dress took fire, and before the flames could be extinguished by her husband she was so badly burned that her life is despaired of.

The Commissioners of City Works will today open proposals for stone facing the dam of the Hempstead Reservoir. Kingsley & Keeney sent a protest to the Mayor yesterday denying the right of the Board of City Works to make any new contracts for work on the reservoir covered by their contract. They offer to do any portion of the work if they are allowed.

The Woman's Union Missionary Society will hold a convention for three days, beginning at 10 o'clock this morning, in the Church of the Pilgrims, corner of Remsen and Henry streets. Reports from the home missions will be read and addresses will be made by the ladies present. The evening meetings will be conducted by clergymen, and addresses will be made by Rev. Drs. Storrs and Scudder, Chancellor Crosby, and others.

Rev. Norman Seaver, D. D., for eight years Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, yesterday resigned his pastorate. It is stated that the main incentive to the change is the desire on the part of the Pastor for a larger field of labor. A meeting of the society will be held to-morrow evening to take action upon the resignation, and a meeting of the Presbytery next week will formally sever the relations between Pastor and people.

NEW-JERSEY.

Collector Love, of Jersey City, reports the week's receipts to be $3,764 87.

The official Republican majority at the recent charter election in Newark is 1,792.

The trial of Patrick Carr for the murder of his wife, at Paterson, has been postponed until to-morrow.

The Presbyterian Synod of New-Jersey will assemble in the First Presbyterian Church at Elizabeth to-day.

Robert W. Shannon, aged sixty-two years, fell down stairs at his residence in Tichenor street, Newark, and died Sunday night from his injuries.

Charles Tag, a resident of the Hackensack Plank Road, Union Hill, has been missing for over five weeks, and his friends fear that he has met with foul play.

The Republicans of Union County will hold a grand mass-meeting at Elizabeth to-morrow evening. Hon. H. C. Treat, of Maine, and Prof. J. M. Langston, the well-known colored orator, will speak.

Justice Streng, of Hoboken, yesterday issued a warrant for the arrest of Catherine Rooney, of Eighth street, on a complaint made by Caroline Gulschy, who alleges that Mrs. Rooney set two blood-hounds upon her and threatened to have her torn apart.

Patrick Bagley, residing at No. 125 Washington street, Hoboken, was thrown from his buggy in Ninth street, Jersey City, by his horse taking fright, and striking on the pavement fractured his skull. He was taken to St. Francis Hospital, where he lies in a critical condition.

A sleeping car in a Pennsylvania Railroad train caught fire while running between Newark and Elizabeth Sunday night, and burned fiercely before it was discovered. The passengers were considerably frightened at first, as the doors were locked, but all escaped without injury. The car was seriously damaged.

A tramp, who gave his name as Henry Hoffman, stopped County Clerk James M. Braun on Newark avenue, Jersey City, late on Sunday night, and demanded a sum of money. When Mr. Braun refused to hand over the amount the fellow struck him in the face. Mr. Braun grappled with him and held him until an officer appeared. Yesterday Hoffman was committed for examination.

The coal-heavers employed at the Port Johnson coal docks struck recently, owing to a reduction of their wages. Yesterday morning the coal company put on a new force of two hundred men, and the old hands gathering around it was thought that there would be a riot. Chief Whitney, who was sent for, arrived with a squad of officers and succeeded in getting the old hands to return at the new rates, and at the end of the week if they found that they could not make enough to live on they could state their case to the officers of the company and doubtless get the old standard of wages returned.

A POSTMASTER AS A DISTILLER.

AN ILLICIT STILL DESTROYED IN NEW-JERSEY—THE POSTMASTER OF HOMESTEAD STATION ARRESTED AS THE PROPRIETOR.

Another successful raid on "crooked whisky" was made yesterday afternoon by Deputy Collector P. R. Hawley, of this City—this time in the suburbs of Hoboken, at a quiet place known as Homestead Station. The information received as to the place was very direct, and early yesterday a party consisting of Deputy Collectors Hawley and Ryan, of this City; Revenue Agent A. H. Brooks, of New-Jersey; Deputy Collector Reed, of Jersey City, and Deputy United States Marshal Denbert, and a posse of assistants, proceeded to the place. Passing beyond Union Hill, to the flats on the other side, by the railroad track, an unpretentious coal and wood yard was surrounded, and a still of about one hundred and fifty gallons capacity was found in full operation. There were but two persons at work in the place at the time, one of whom mysteriously escaped. The other rushed to the second floor of the building and jumped from the window. He ran into the woods adjoining, but was soon caught and brought back.

While the officers were taking an inventory of the place they were approached by Jacob Stoffer, who represented himself as the owner of the premises, and inquired their authority for trespassing upon them. Upon being informed, he stated that though he owned and carried on the coal business there; though he lived in the same building, a portion of which was used as the Post Office of the place, he had no knowledge whatever of the business just discovered by the officers. He was also taken into custody, and at this time his anxiety in regard to an approaching train disclosed the fact that he was the Postmaster, a position he has held for three years past. Seizure was made of the entire premises, valued probably at $15,000, and then began the destruction of the still and appurtenances. In a short time all semblance of the former prosperity was lost, and still, worms, and connections were piled in the yard. The contents of four large mash-tubs, containing about one thousand gallons of mash and two barrels of molasses, were then run into the sewer, and the two barrels of rum kept as evidence. Quite a large crowd collected before this work was concluded, and among all there was a seeming astonishment that such a business could have been carried on in their immediate vicinity without their knowledge.

The building seized is a two-story frame, the front portion, facing the road leading to the railroad station, being occupied as the Post Office, and also as the business office of the coal yard. Adjoining, in the rear, is a stable, and connecting with this the still in question. Appearances would indicate that the wood and coal business was not a very extensive one, judging from the stock on hand. Postmaster Stoffer and the other man arrested, giving the name of Michael Day, were brought to Jersey City and held in $5,000 bail each, before United States Commissioner Muirhead, for examination, on charges of owning and running an illicit still. The property seized, including two fine horses and wagons, were turned over to United States Marshal Bailey, of Jersey City.

A BOATMAN DROWNED.

The body of Thomas Tanner, a canal boatman, was found floating in the Morris Canal, at Paterson, about 10 o'clock yesterday morning. Deceased, who was Captain of a boat, was last seen about 7:30 o'clock, Saturday evening, when the boat was going through the canal near the Stony Road Bridge. At that time he called out to the boy who was driving the horses, to look out for the rocks. A short distance further on the boat ran on the bank, and then the boy discovered that the Captain was missing. The case is a mysterious one, as Tanner was an ablebodied, vigorous man, a good swimmer, and there were no marks of violence upon the body. He resided at Washington, N. J., where he leaves a wife and two children. An inquest will be held.

INSPECTORS OF ELECTION ON TRIAL.

Messrs. Anthony C. D'Ozeville, Charles S. Jones, Charles W. Seerbeck, and De Witt Clinton Judah, comprising the full Board of Registry in the Eleventh Election District of the Fifth Assembly District, were arraigned before the Board of Police yesterday for trial, charged with having failed to leave the public copy of the registry in the polling-place, as required by law. The facts in the complaint were admitted by the accused, who had no valid excuse to offer. The matter was referred to the board for decision.

THE TERROR IN THE SOUTH.

THE CAINHOY, S. C., ENCOUNTER.

VIOLATION OF THE AGREEMENT FOR A JOINT DISCUSSION BY THE DEMOCRATS AFTER THEIR MAN HAD SPOKEN—AN OLD NEGRO SHOT DEAD BY THEM AT THE OUTSET—COOLNESS AND DETERMINATION OF THE COLORED MEN—PROMPT AND ENERGETIC ACTION OF GOV. CHAMBERLAIN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 17.—The fight which took place between the whites and blacks at the political meeting at Cainhoy yesterday, and which resulted in the killing of at least three men and the wounding of many others, was clearly the result of the "shot-gun policy" inaugurated by the white rifle clubs at Hamburg and Ellenton. The immediate and direct cause of the unfortunate affair will never be definitely ascertained, for, as is usual in such cases, both sides vehemently protest that their opponents were in the wrong. It will be noticed that now, for the first time in the history of the race conflicts of the South, the negroes were victorious. They "drove" off the whites with but slight loss to themselves. From this fact it may be argued not only that they are losing their constitutional fear of white men, but that the recent outrages upon men of their race in the upper part of this State have imparted to them some of the desperate courage of the stag at bay. That they are desperate there can be no doubt, for they have been persecuted beyond human endurance. As I have already intimated, the reports of the causes of the riot are various and conflicting. The following account is from an impartial and credible eye witness, and may be relied upon as substantially correct.

The steamer Pocasin left Charleston at 9 o'clock yesterday morning to convey a number of Democratic and Republican speakers and their friends to a joint discussion, or divided-time meeting, which had been announced to take place at Cainboy, about twenty miles from the city. Fearing that trouble might occur, it was arranged between Sheriff Bowen and the Democratic leaders that neither party should bring arms on the boat. The Democratic speakers, Messrs. Jervey and Zuker, and Mr. O'Connor, the Democratic candidate for Congress, were accompanied by about two hundred members of the Butler Guard and other white men, who carried no rifles, but were well supplied with pistols. Sheriff Bowen, W. J. McKinley, and C. Gaillard, the Republican speakers, had just fifteen of their friends with them. No trouble occurred during the trip on the river, and the steamer reached Cainboy at noon. Here the Charleston party was met by a number of negroes, and proceeded quietly to the place of meeting, where they found three or four hundred colored men assembled. They had come from all parts of the parish, many of them from wild and remote districts, and most of them were armed with old shot-guns and muskets. These they placed upon the ground or against trees. A large number of them they laid in the corner of an old building near the speaker's stand. This they did with no purpose of secreting their weapons, as has been claimed, but that they could easily lay their hands on them when the meeting closed. The guns and muskets were all the private property of the freedmen. There were no Militia rifles among them, and the statement that there was a Militia company on the ground is not true. The meeting was opened with the understanding that each party should be allowed two hours for speeches. Before the regular proceedings, Sheriff Bowen earnestly requested the people to listen to the speakers and to be orderly and quiet. Mr. St. Julien Jervey, a well-known Democrat of Charleston, was then introduced and spoke for nearly an hour without interruption or disturbance of any kind. He was followed by Mr. J. W. McKinley, for the Republicans, who had only spoken a few words when he was startled by a number of the negroes crying: "Look out, dar; look out, dar!" McKinley looked around in the direction indicated by the blacks, and then in a very excited tone exclaimed, pointing to a number of white men who were approaching the arms in the old house: "Those men have got the guns. They are going to shoot me and the rest of you." He then jumped from the stand. The colored men, greatly alarmed by his words, ran from the meeting place in all directions, taking their arms with them. Ten or a dozen of the whites secured a number of the guns in the old house, and pointed them toward the negroes. Sheriff Bowen, seeing this demonstration, called on Mr. O'Connor to keep his men quiet. O'Connor tried to do so, asking the white men to lay down their arms. Instead of doing this, however, they went to the other end of the building and formed a line, and then, without a moment's warning, one of these white men discharged his gun, and a decrepid old negro fell dead. Upon this the blacks fled behind the trees and bushes and opened a running fire upon the whites, thirteen or fourteen of whom fell wounded. Two of them afterward died, and one other is missing, and probably dead.

The blacks displayed the most remarkable coolness, and took up a favorable position instead of running wildly and aimlessly about, as they did at the Vicksburg, New-Gascony, and Hamburg massacres. It was this coolness that saved them from slaughter. The whites finding that they intended to fight gave up the contest, and retreated rapidly to the village. The negroes then dispersed in all directions, taking their wounded with them. On this account it will be impossible to report their loss. It is not doubted, however, that a number of them were more or less dangerously wounded. Upon reaching the village a number of the whites who were members of the rifle club and could secure arms stationed themselves in a large out-house, and made preparations to meet any attack which might be made upon them. None was made, however.

In the evening the boat returned to Charleston and reported what had occurred. There was a great deal of excitement in the city, and a company of the Palmetto Guard, numbering eighty men, well armed with breech-loading rifles, left for the scene of the disturbance. They went with the avowed intention of protecting the whites of Cainhoy, but there is no doubt that their real desire was to avenge their wounded friends. It is not expected that there will be any further organized disturbance, for the negroes have dispersed and many of them will doubtless seek safety in the woods and swamps. But the whites swear that somebody will have to suffer for yesterday's work, and as a gentleman of this City expressed it, "by this time next week there will be at least half a dozen niggers less in the Parish of St. Thomas." If prompt action is not taken by the authorities and by the United States troops this prediction will doubtless prove correct. Gen. Ruger has been informed of the affair, however, and will do everything in his power to prevent further trouble. Gov. Chamberlain has also gone to work promptly. This morning he sent the following dispatch to Sheriff Bowen from Columbia:

C. C. Bowen, Charleston:

I have no details of the Cainboy affair, but whatever they are you must arrest and bring to justice at once every man engaged in the killing and riot, without regard to race or party. See that Trial Justices do their duty or report them to me. Warrants must be issued immediately. Call on any eye-witness or person having knowledge to make affidavits. D. H. CHAMBERLAIN, Governor.

There is no doubt that Sheriff Bowen, who has the reputation of being a determined and fearless man, will do all he can to obey the instructions of the Governor. He may prevent another conflict in Charleston County, where the negroes are very largely in the majority; but the whites in the up-country are greatly incensed at the Cainboy affair, and it is feared that the negroes of Edgefield and Aiken will be made to suffer for the act of their brethren in St. Thomas.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION.

THE PEACE OF THE COUNTRY DISTURBED—THE PURITY OF THE BALLOT-BOX IMPERILED BY RIFLE-RAIDING LAW-BREAKERS—FREE CITIZENS TO BE PROTECTED—THE MILITARY FORCE ORDERED OUT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 17.—The President's proclamation of to-day was determined upon in Cabinet this afternoon. The preamble fully states the reasons for the proclamation, and leaves no necessity for explanation. The Government is determined to use every power under the Constitution and the laws to protect the peace of South Carolina. The Democratic press will no doubt immediately fill the air with a clamor that the President intends to carry the State for Hayes by the force of Federal power," but every body knows that with a free and peaceable election South Carolina is as certain to vote for the Republican candidate as Vermont or Iowa. If, therefore, the Administration has that wicked design of securing Republican success in the election there, it can be executed best not by intimidating Democratic voters, but by preventing Democrats from murdering and intimidating Republicans. This is the sole ground of complaint by the Democrats. It may be questionable whether the power of the Federal Government is not so restrained that it cannot afford sufficient protection, but the need and duty of protection are undoubted. If American citizens were to receive such treatment in England or France as they are subjected to in South Carolina, there would be immediate war. The plans for the execution of the purpose disclosed by the proclamation are not revealed, but it is believed the ridings and raidings of the rifle clubs will lead to speedy arrests and indictments, and measures have undoubtedly been taken to secure evidence. The military will aid the civil authorities in making arrests when the civil power needs such reinforcement. Whatever measures may be efficient and lawful will be promptly taken, and it is quite probable important orders have already been forwarded to the South.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

At the Cabinet meeting to-day every department of the Government was represented. There was a full and earnest discussion of the condition of affairs in South Carolina, as represented to the Government by the chief executive officer of that State. The views of the Cabinet, acting upon information officially rendered the Government, were that prompt action was necessary for the purpose of dispersing the rifle clubs and other armed bodies organized, as alleged, against the peace of the State and the rights of voters, and to this end the Attorney General began the immediate preparation of the following proclamation, which was issued to-night:

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, It has been satisfactorily shown to me that insurrection and domestic violence exist in several counties of the State of South Carolina, and that certain combinations of men against law exist in many counties of said State, known as "Rifle Clubs," who ride up and down by day and night, in arms, murdering some peaceable citizens and intimidating others, which combinations, though forbidden by the laws of the State, cannot be controlled or suppressed by the ordinary course of justice; and whereas, it is provided in the Constitution of the United States that the United States shall protect every State in this Union on the application of the Legislature, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence; and whereas, by laws in pursuance of the above, it is proposed (in the laws of the United States) that in all cases of insurrection in any State (or obstruction to the laws thereof) it shall be lawful for the President of the United States on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the Executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call for the Militia of any other State or States, or to employ such part of the land or naval forces as shall be judged necessary for the purpose of suppressing such insurrection, or causing the laws to be duly executed; and, whereas, the Legislature of said State is not now in session, and cannot be convened in time to meet the present emergency, and the Executive of said State, under section 4 of article IV. of the Constitution, and of the laws passed in pursuance thereof, has, therefore, made due application to me in the premises for such part of the military force of the United States as may be necessary and adequate to protect said State and the citizens thereof against domestic violence, and to enforce the due execution of the laws; and whereas, It is required that whenever it may be necessary, in the judgment of the President, to use the military force for the purpose aforesaid, he shall forthwith by proclamation command such insurgents to disperse, and retire peaceably to their respective homes within a limited time; now, therefore,

I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States, do hereby make proclamation and command all persons engaged in said unlawful and insurrectionary proceedings to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within three days from this date, and hereafter abandon said combinations and submit themselves to the laws and constituted authorities of said State, and I invoke the aid and co-operation of all good citizens thereof to uphold the laws and preserve the public peace.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 17th day of October, 1876, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and first.

By the President, U. S. GRANT.

JOHN L. CADWALLADER, Acting Secretary of State.

The following order was issued this evening in pursuance of the action taken at the Cabinet meeting to-day:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
WASHINGTON CITY, Oct. 17, 1876.

Gen. W. T. Sherman, commanding United States Army:

SIR: In view of the existing condition of affairs in South Carolina there is a possibility that the proclamation of the President of this date may be disregarded. To provide against such a contingency you will immediately order all the available force in the military division of the Atlantic to report to Gen. Ruger, commanding at Columbia, South Carolina, and instruct that officer to station his troops in such localities that they may be most speedily and effectually used in case of resistance to the authority of the United States.

It is hoped that a collision may thus be avoided, but you will instruct Gen. Ruger to let it be known that it is the fixed purpose of the Government to carry out the spirit of the proclamation, and to sustain it by the military force of the General Government, supplemented, if necessary, by the Militia of the various States. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, G. D. CAMERON, Secretary of War.

THE ENGLISH COTTON SPINNERS.

THE CONTROVERSY WITH THE OPERATIVES—A LOCK-OUT TO TAKE PLACE NOV. 23.

MANCHESTER, Oct. 17.—At a meeting of the Cotton Spinners and Manufacturers' Association of Northern and North-eastern Lancashire yesterday it was resolved that the operative cotton spinners having given no ice that they will be bound no longer by the arrangement by which their wages have hitherto been regulated—action which would give that body control of the position of wages in the district—therefore the mill-owners refuse to continue work under the proposed conditions, and decide to give a month's notice that they will close their mills on Nov. 23. A resolution was also adopted declaring that the masters are ready to discuss the present standard with the operatives and arrange for the removal of any irregularities, but refuse any adjustment which would practically advance wages. The lock-out, if it should take place, will throw 80,000 operatives out of employment.

PANIC AND DECLINE IN FOREIGN STOCKS IN LONDON—SPAIN RELAPSING IN BIGOTRY—THE LIBERALS OPPRESSED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

LONDON, Oct. 17.—There has been a panic on the Stock Exchange in some of the foreign bonds this afternoon, principally in Russian, which have been largely offered at a decline of 2½ to 5. Hungarian were also very heavy, and declined 2; Turkish declined ½ to 1; Egyptian, Portuguese, Uruguay, and Austrian, ½ to ¾; Peruvian, ¾ to 1¼, and French ½.

A special dispatch to the Times from Barcelona states that the Liberal organ, La Tribuna, has been sentenced to six months' suspension, and consequently ruin, for publishing an article written by Señor Castelar. Throughout Spain the Liberals are now oppressed by the Government, which daily becomes narrower in tone and moderado in sympathies. The arrogance of the priesthood increases daily.

ROME, Oct. 17.—The Pope yesterday received ten thousand Spanish pilgrims in the Basilica. The pilgrims were enthusiastic, and the ceremony lasted over an hour.

THE YELLOW FEVER SUFFERERS.

NO FURTHER AID NEEDED—A GRATEFUL LETTER FROM THE MAYOR OF SAVANNAH.

The subjoined letter from the Mayor of Savannah and the acting President of the Benevolent Association announces that further aid is not needed:

CITY OF SAVANNAH,
MAYOR'S OFFICE, Oct. 17, 1876.

To our benefactors throughout the Union:

It is impossible to express adequately the deep sense of gratitude felt by the people of Savannah for the generous benevolence which has been extended to us from all parts of the United States, in this our supreme hour of distress and destitution. It has so shed many a dying pillow and relieved many an aching heart. Such deeds do more to bind the inhabitants of this land in sympathy together as citizens of a common country than all the political theories that were ever advanced. All that we can now return to our benefactors are our heartfelt thanks and sincere prayers that the Almighty may bless and preserve in their own homes the noble people who have so readily come to our rescue, and long shield them from the pestilence that walketh in darkness and the destruction that wasteth at noonday. Justice and candor require us to announce at this time, that by reason of the large liberality of subscriptions in money and supplies already afforded to us, we are no longer in immediate need, and we therefore ask our friends everywhere to cease for the present their charitable contributions. If the necessity for assistance shall again arise among us, we will frankly and unhesitatingly appeal to them for relief.

EDWARD C. ANDERSON, Mayor of Savannah.
JOHN F. WHEATON, Acting President of the Savannah Benevolent Association.

The total number of interments to-day was fifteen, of which six were from yellow fever. Ten of the above were colored persons.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—Mr. Joseph Newman, the exhibitor of California fruit in Agricultural Hall, to-day handed to Mr. Lamoreth, Chief of the Agricultural Bureau, $123 76 for the relief fund of the yellow-fever sufferers. This amount represents the net profits of the sales of California fruit from Oct. 5 to Oct. 14.

TOM OCHILTREE AND TEN BROECK.

THE PROPOSED RACE BETWEEN TWO GREAT HORSES—MR. LORILLARD'S BOLD CHALLENGE NOT ACCEPTED—TELEGRAPHIC CORRESPONDENCE.

LEXINGTON, Oct. 17.—The following telegrams have passed between Gen. James F. Robinson, President of the Kentucky Association, and Mr. George Lorillard, the owner of Tom Ochiltree:

LEXINGTON, Ky.

To George Lorillard, New-York:

The friends of Ten Broeck seeing by the Associated Press dispatches that you desire to match Tom Ochiltree against Ten Broeck in a four-mile dash, to be run in the Spring of 1877, have authorized me to say that such a match can be made if you will run over the Kentucky Association Course, for $10,000 or more, the parties here to allow you $1,000 to cover traveling expenses. The Kentucky Association will add one-half of the gate receipts of that day to the winning horse, and will extend to you a hearty welcome. J. F. ROBINSON.

NEW-YORK.

To Gen. James F. Robinson, President:

I have received your telegram. The Associated Press have mistaken my proposition. I offered, and still offer to match Tom Ochiltree the last day of the Baltimore Races, or the ex ra day of the Jerome Park Races in November, against Ten Broeck in a four-mile dash for $10,000. American Jockey Club Rules and new weights.

Yours truly, G. L. LORILLARD.

Please answer by telegraph.

LEXINGTON, Ky.

To George Lorillard:

The race proposed by you is impossible. Ten Broeck is not in training. Should you desire to accept my proposition, or alter its terms to run over the Kentucky Association Course I shall be pleased to hear from you. J. F. ROBINSON.

BOILER EXPLOSION IN VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND, Oct. 17.—George Smoot, White, and Isaac Howell, colored, were killed, and Ben Ford, colored, fatally injured by the explosion of four boilers to-day at the Carbon Hill Coal Mines, Goochland County, fourteen miles from this city. The cause of the accident was carelessness in allowing the water in the boilers to become exhausted and then turning on cold water. There were thirteen boilers in all about the mines. Several buildings in the vicinity were wrecked. No one in the mines was hurt.

THE FALL RIVER STEAMER.

PROVIDENCE, Oct. 17.—The steamer Providence, from New-York, while entering the harbor of Newport this morning, which was crowded with vessels, endeavored to avoid a collision, and in so doing struck the bottom and wrenched off her rudder. The Providence had 1,200 passengers on board, who were forwarded to Boston by train from Newport.

FALL RIVER, Oct. 17.—The steamer Newport will take the place of the Providence to-night.

A LAKE MICHIGAN STEAMER BURNED.

DETROIT, Oct. 17.—The steamer Daniel Ball, of East Saginaw, Bay City Line, was burned this afternoon while approaching Bay City. Passengers and crew all saved. The vessel was valued at $15,000; insurance about one-half.

THE CONTEST IN NEW-YORK.

THE REPUBLICANS OF TIOGA COUNTY AROUSED.

AN ENERGETIC CANVASS IN PROGRESS—LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC MEETINGS HELD NIGHTLY—A FULL VOTE AND A ROUSING MAJORITY FOR HAYES AND WHEELER PREDICTED.

From Our Special Correspondent.

OWEGO, Monday, Oct. 16, 1876.

The Republicans of Tioga County, like their brethren of Broome, are now thoroughly aroused to the necessity of exerting themselves, and have set about the work before them with energy and determination. They have resolved to bring out the full vote of the party in November, and, by so doing, to secure the old-time Republican majority. Upward of twenty meetings are to be held in the county this week, and they are to be kept up nightly from now till election day. One or more meetings will be held in every school district during the campaign, and several out-door mass-meetings have been arranged at the more important centres of population. A thorough canvass of the whole county is now in progress, and the result, thus far, is more favorable than was anticipated.

Mr. E. F. Jones, the Chairman of the County Committee; Hon. T. C. Platt, Chairman of the Congressional Committee and member of the National Committee, and Mr. Smythe, the member of the State Committee and editor of the Owego Times, are all working in harmony and all agree in predicting a larger Republican majority in this county than has been given for several years past. Among the local speakers who are addressing crowds nightly are W. H. Blair, brother of ex-Gov. Blair, of Michigan; Hon. E. B. Gere, Republican Assemblyman from this county; W. D. Pearne, Hon. O. H. P. Kinney, Lyman Settle, H. Bostwick, Mr. Warner, of Waverly, and A. G. Allen. Among the speakers from abroad who have thus far addressed the Republicans of the county are Hon. A. W. Tenney, of Brooklyn, and Butler G. Noble, of New-York. Mr. Tenney's speech, which was delivered to an audience of 1,500 people, aroused great enthusiasm, and there is a strong desire throughout the county to hear from him again before the campaign closes. Gen. George W. Palmer is to speak in the county every night next week.

It is the unanimous testimony of all who have attended the meetings in this section that more interest and enthusiasm is manifested by Republicans now than at any time since the war. The young Republicans of Owego have formed one of the best glee clubs in the State, which dresses in uniform and travels all over the county, singing at public meetings every night, without pay or remuneration of any kind. All the outward indications point to a full vote of the party this Fall, and a full vote means a victory for Hayes and Wheeler in this State by a majority anywhere from 20,000 to 50,000. In this county the majority will not be less than 500, and is more likely to be 800 and over. There are no Republicans here who have had the boldness to declare for "Tilden and Reform," although there are several Democrats who do not hesitate to declare against it. Ex-Treasurer Wheeler H. Bristol, a "born Democrat," of soft-money tendencies, has been instrumental in organizing a Peter Cooper Club in this village, which affords a safety-valve for those Democrats who can't eat the Tilden crow and yet don't like to stifle all political enthusiasm during the campaign. It comprises thirty members, and is said to contain also a few Republicans of the "Liberal" stripe. Nearly all the Liberals of this county, however, with the exception of those whom the Democrats have nominated for office are openly for Hayes and Wheeler. The Democrats are making great exertions to re-elect the County Clerk, whom they smuggled into office here three years ago, and, as he is the only Democrat who stands any chance in the county, they will trade off anything to elect him. His name is John J. Van Kleeck. He was a "Liberal" in 1872, and claimed to be more of a Republican than a Democrat when he ran; otherwise he would not have been elected. That game cannot be played this year, and Mr. Van Kleeck will probably have to step aside for John C. Gray, of Tioga, the Republican nominee. All the other county officers are sure to be Republican, including the Assemblyman, Hon. E. B. Gere, who has been re-nominated.

The Democrats are not holding very many meetings in this county, but they are hard at work "on the sly" and pretend that they are going to receive large accessions from the Republican ranks on election day. Your correspondent has been told a dozen times by Democrats, when inquiring whether there were any Republicans going to vote for Tilden? "Oh, yes, lots of them; I can name more than fifty right around here." But they never name the fifty, nor even one, and Republicans say there are no men of the kind in existence. They admit, however, that the Democrats are making desperate efforts to accomplish something this Fall, and that their "still hunt" canvass may be fraught with danger unless the Republicans are equally vigilant. There is no "tidal wave" in favor of the Democracy this year, nor even a ripple in that direction, and if Tilden gets any Republican votes in this section they will be from men who are ashamed to announce the fact in advance.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HUDSON, Oct. 17.—The most ardent Republican would have been well satisfied with the numbers and enthusiasm of the audience which crowded City Hall this evening to listen to Col. Clark E. Carr, of Illinois, present his views of the campaign. Dr. A. P. Cook, of this city, presided and introduced the speaker, who delivered a calm, clear, and dispassionate address which carried conviction with it. His vindication of the Republican Party was very effective, as was likewise his arraignment of the Democracy on their war record and the work of the Confederate Congress last Winter. The boasted economy of the latter he showed to have been merely parsimony, and proved that it resulted solely in embarrassing the public service. His arraignment of Tilden was scathing, but truthful. He depicted him as the scheming railroad wrecker rather than the saintlike reformer. His tribute to Hon. John H. Ketcham, the Republican Congressional candidate in this district, was a warm one, and met with responsive plaudits from the audience. The speaker was rapturously applauded throughout his address, which was full of facts, logical arguments, and information. The address was one of the most effective heard here during the campaign.

A STRONG COUNTY TICKET NOMINATED BY THE COLUMBIA COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HUDSON, Oct. 17.—Every town was fully represented to-day in the Republican County Convention, which met in this city, and placed the following admirable ticket in nomination: Sheriff, George H. Power; County Clerk, George M. Bullock; County Treasurer, Charles W. Hinsdale; Superintendent of the Poor, Thomas Berridge; Justice of Sessions, John Busby; Coroners, Dr. W. C. Bailey and Dr. Benedict A. Wicks. The unanimity of the convention and the conceded strength of the ticket has very much discouraged the leaders of the opposition. The campaign promises to be waged with unceasing activity in this locality from this time forward to the election.

IRISH OPPOSITION TO MR. ADAMS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 17.—The opposition to the candidacy of Charles Francis Adams by certain Irish societies and other organizations in Eastern Massachusetts has taken political shape in the formation of political anti-Adams clubs. They are to be found in this city, Worcester, Wakefield, and elsewhere. These disaffected elements are not in favor of Mr. Rice, but are simply opposed to Mr. Adams, and having no candidate to support will paste Gaston's name over that of Adams. They are the same men who a year ago went around swearing against Gaston because he would not review the Irish procession on St. Patrick's Day. They helped to defeat him then and think they can materially aid now in continuing Mr. Adams in his privacy. One of the Worcester men said to-day, "We haven't attached a great deal of importance to the public meetings of the club, although it has a decided influence. More reliance is placed upon a certain secret society which has members all over this State, and which indeed extends over the entire country, from Maine to California." The gentleman said that he couldn't give the name of the mysterious organization. "But," said he, "it is an Irish nationalist society, and its members must, on principle, object to voting for a man like Mr. Adams, who neglected the interests of naturalized Irish citizens. Personally we say nothing against him. Doubtless he is a man of ability and entitled to some respect, but his conduct toward Irishmen is the one thing which the members of this society can never, under any pressure, be brought to condone."

"You have concluded, then, to give up those public meetings and rely wholly on the influence of this society?" "Not at all," was the reply. The club is doing a good work, and exactly what the Irish voters need. There has long been too much subserviency to party dictation, and this nomination of Adams has emboldened many to come out and make a protest. It is true enough that the club is not large in membership.

The Democratic politicians have used every effort to smash the men concerned in the public movement. The opponents of Mr. Adams seem to be very sanguine that there will be a heavy vote against him by Irish Democrats next November. "As to Worcester," said one man, we count on at least 500 votes. The club represents 100 voters, and two other organizations, which are secret in character, will roll up 500 anti-Adams votes, and at least 100 other Irishmen will be ready to join this force on the day of election. We expect to have 600 votes on our side in Boston. There has been no public club in opposition to Adams, but the secret element is very strong. Indeed all through the State, wherever Irishmen are found there will be votes cast against Mr. Adams." Said a politician: "The head and front of the movement is credited to the Clanna-Gael Society. Only a few of its members are voters, and only the most rabid of them will come out openly and bolt Adams. Why, look at the way the campaign has been carried on. No Democratic orator has failed to speak of Charles Francis Adams, and the name has always been received with the heartiest enthusiasm. Go to any Irish Democrat of any standing in the Fifth Ward, and he will tell you that in the very stronghold of Irish Democracy in Worcester this anti-Adams objection is a very thin affair. I don't deny that there was a little feeling regarding Mr. Adams before his nomination, but its all gone now. When the Irish leaders all over the State came out and showed what Adams' record really is, the opposition was sent out of sight." This is hardly consistent with the claim made by some of the anti-Adams men, that 5,000 anti-Adams men in Boston would be found to scratch the name of the Sage of Quincy in November. In Boston very little has been said to indicate the existence of a society which cannot consistently support him.

NEW-JERSEY DEMOCRATS SUBDUED.

LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC REPUBLICAN MEETING IN NEW-BRUNSWICK—GEN. KILPATRICK INSULTED BY DEMOCRATIC ROUGHS—HOW THEY WERE COMPELLED TO REMAIN QUIET.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEW-BRUNSWICK, Oct. 16.—The largest meeting ever held in this city convened to-night to hear Gen. Kilpatrick and Prof. Langston. Two or three hundred Democratic roughs, determined to break up the meeting, also put in an appearance. Every time Gen. Kilpatrick mentioned Tilden's name they would cheer and yell. The General stood it as long as he could, and then said, "I will not say another word till those men are silenced. Thank God, we are not in South Carolina. Republicans, shut the doors; don't let a man escape, and if I am insulted again choke the ruffians till they are black in the face." The old soldiers present responded with a will, and from that moment quiet reigned. For two hours the General spoke as never before. Never have our people been so moved. If this meeting has not gained us votes by the hundred then no meeting ever did. Prof. Langston is still speaking, and the house is packed.

PARADE OF BOYS IN BLUE.

A parade of the Boys in Blue of the Fifth and Ninth Assembly Districts took place last night. It was a very imposing demonstration, and the night being bright and not too cold, the turnout of spectators all along the route was immense. A preliminary muster took place at Bleecker Hall. The different companies formed into line in Abingdon square a few minutes after 8 o'clock, under the following commanders: Col. Ellis, commanding; A. D. Piles, Aide de Camp; Lieut. Col. Meeks, Major Edwards, and Adjt. Clarke. Company A was under the command of Capt. Finlay; Company B, Capt. Brennan; Company C, Capt. Diller; Company D, Capt. Souder; Company E, Capt. Ward; Company F, Capt. May. A company of Pioneers was under the command of Capt. Millian, and a company of cavalry was commanded by Capt. Jacobus. The total muster numbered over one thousand men. Preceded by the Cavalry Division and the band playing patriotic airs, the Boys marched from Abingdon square through the following streets: Bleecker, Barrow, Hudson, Spring, Greenwich, Greene, Houston, South Fifth avenue, Fifth avenue, arriving at the Fifth Avenue Hotel a little after 10 o'clock. They did not halt here, as was expected, a great crowd having gathered to greet them, but marched down Twenty-third street to Sixth avenue, and then to Head-quarters, where, after great cheering, they were disbanded.

NON-PAYMENT OF RAILROAD RENT.

ST. ALBANS, Oct. 16.—This morning the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain Railroad Company seized their road from the Central Vermont Company for non-payment of rent. William J. Averill, of Ogdensburg, was appointed by the Supreme Court of New-York Receiver of the property, and he appointed John C. Pratt, the President of the old company, General Manager. The Central Vermont officers have notified their employes to obey the Receiver at present, and until some other arrangement is made will transfer passengers, luggage, and freight at Rouse's Point.

HOME WORK.

Gen. Daniel Ullmann will pass this week in Delaware County, speaking every day.

A grand Republican rally was held at Parepa Hall, Yorkville, last night, when speeches were made by Col. Carter, of Louisiana, and Gen. Thomas M. Conway.

Hon. Dorman B. Eaton addressed a well attended meeting of Republicans at Irvington on Monday evening.

The Republican Association of the Twenty-first Assembly District met at Lincoln Hall, Harlem, last evening, when eloquent addresses were made by W. T. B. Milliken and R. A. Adams.

A vote taken on the train leaving New-York at 8:30 P. M. Thursday, on the New-York Central Road, between Syracuse and Rochester, resulted as follows: Hayes, 100; Tilden, 63; Cooper, 4; Smith, 4.

The Republicans of Kings County met in the several wards and county towns last night, and elected delegates to the County, City, Congressional, and Assembly Conventions, all of which are to be held during the present week.

The Republicans of the Fourth Congressional District, New-Jersey, have declined to make any Congressional nomination, as they could not elect their nominee, and they have determined to support Hon. R. Vechte, the Independent candidate.

Yesterday a vote on the Presidential candidates was taken on a train on the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad between Sing Sing and New-York with the following result: Hayes and Wheeler, 96; Tilden and Hendricks, 34; Cooper and Carv, 3.

A First Ward Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club was organized at No. 36 Greenwich street last night by the election of the following officers: Dr. Merrill, President; John McIntyre, Sr., and Michael Halpin, Vice Presidents, and Edward P. Collins and T. F. McCabe, Secretaries.

Gen. Joshua T. Owen, having been elected Major General of the Boys in Blue of New-York City, has issued an order assuming command of the First and Second Brigades. The command will be known as the "New-York Division of the Boys in Blue." Lieut. Col. J. C. Reed has been detailed to act as Assistant Adjutant General of the Division.

A number of citizens of the Fifteenth Ward met last night at No. 223 Greene street, and formed an organization to be known as "The Fifteenth Ward Republican Club." Several speeches were made, indorsing the national and State Republican nominations, and the meeting adjourned to meet this evening, when an election of officers will be held.

The grand open-air mass-meeting at Sing Sing to-day will not be held on the State Farm near that place, as intended, but will take place in the village square. Special trains will be run by the New-York, Central and Hudson River Railroad to and from New-York. Delegations from several counties are expected to be present, and among the speakers who will address the meeting are Gen. N. P. Banks, Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, Hon. Elliot C. Cowdin, Gen. Clark E. Carr, and Gen. James W. Husted.

The Republican Central Committee met last evening at Republican Hall, corner of Broadway and Thirty-fourth street, Mr. Jacob M. Patterson in the chair. Col. Spencer reported from the Executive Committee that that body was actively at work, and that the Naturalization Committee was making progress. He then moved that as all the important business at present pressing upon the organization had been transacted at the recent special meeting of the committee, an adjournment take place. The motion was carried, and the committee adjourned.

LARGE FIRE AT LOUISVILLE.

SEVERAL HOUSES BURNED—LOSS, $600,000—PARTIAL LIST OF INSURANCE.

The most destructive fire which has visited Louisville in many years occurred early yesterday morning. The flames were discovered in Hecht & Harris' clothing house, thence communicating to Davis & Haden's liquor store, Carson, David & Co.'s grocery, and A. Levy's clothing house. All these establishments represent large wholesale firms, and were in one block, owned by Messrs. Thorner & Co., of Cincinnati. The flames spread across the street to another block, damaging the Alexander Hotel, George W. Wicks & Co.'s tobacco and cotton house, and C. G. Seviers' hardware store. The Falls City furniture factory and other houses were also damaged. The loss will exceed six hundred thousand dollars, with very heavy insurances. Among the losses are: The Thorner Block, owned and built by Samuel Thorner, of Cincinnati, valued at $150 000; insured for $50,000—$15,000 in the Western Company, of Louisville, and $35,000 in the London, Liverpool, and Globe. George W. Wicks' loss is small and covered by $25,000 insurance in the Williamsburg, Westchester, Germania, of Louisville, and Western Assurance, of Toronto. The Alexander Hotel, valued at $60,000; insurance $20,000, as follows: Kentucky and Louisville Mutual, $10,000; North British, $5,000; Springfield, Massachusetts, $5,000. A. Levy & Co., clothiers; stock, $100,000; insurance, $35,000. Carson, David & Co., grocers; stock, $40,000; insurance, $25,000; Davis & Haden, liquor dealers; stock, $55,000; insurance, $47,000. Brandeis, Saunders & Co., cotton dealers; loss, $5,000; insurance, $5,000, in the Royal. Sevier & Co., loss small; insurance, $5,000, in the Royal. Hecht & Harris, clothing dealers; loss, $60 000; insurance, $35,000. John Sims' estate, furniture factory, loss, $20,000. insured, $10,000; Davis & Hadek, of furniture, $25,000, insurance, $20,000; J. J. Hare, elevator maker, $1,000, insured in full; J. B. Alexander, proprietor of the Alexander Hotel, also lost in furniture and stock $20,000, insurance, $10,000. The damage sustained by George W. Wicks, C. G. Sevier & Co., and Brauders, Saunders & Co., is very light, and will not interfere with the continuance of their business.

OTHER FIRES.

The village of Jordan, Onondaga County, N. Y., was devastated by fire on Monday last. The Munroe block, owned by R. S. Sperry, and occupied by business firms, together with the adjacent buildings, being the entire business portion of the place, were consumed. The loss is $61,600; insured for about $30,000.

The store of Absalom N. Gardiner, in North Kingston, was entered and robbed early yesterday morning, and then set on fire. The store, a barn, and an unoccupied dwelling-house were destroyed. None of the goods were saved. The loss is estimated at $3,000.

The barn and outhouses of William Conover, at Dayton, N. J., were destroyed by fire late on Monday night, and three valuable horses perished in the flames. The loss is $6,500.

The sash and planing mill at Chester, Penn., owned by J. Morgan Baker, was destroyed by fire early yesterday morning. The loss is estimated at $20,000; insurance, $11,000.

Draper's foundry, at Norwood, Mass., was partially consumed by fire Monday. The loss is about eight thousand dollars; partially insured.

The residence of James Murphy, at Newton, Mass., was destroyed by fire. The loss is $2,000; insured for $1,500.

VI.

Officers have been arranged in the foregoing order to the companies and batteries to which they have succeeded in the natural course of promotion or appointment, or to which they have been assigned by competent authority.

VII.

Acceptance or non-acceptance of appointment, and, in case of acceptance, the birth-place of the officer appointed, his age and residence when appointed, and his full names correctly written, will in all cases be promptly reported to the Adjutant General.

VIII.

In case of the death of an officer, it is hereby made the duty of his immediate commanding officer to report the fact at once direct to this office, stating the cause, date, and place. When an officer away from his command dies in hospital or under treatment, the medical officer in charge will forward the report as above required; if not under treatment by an army medical officer, the report will be made by any officer having cognizance of the fact.

By command of Gen. Sherman.

THOMAS M. VINCENT,
Assistant Adjutant General.

By direction of the Secretary of War Major J. G. Chandler, Quartermaster, after having reported to the Quartermaster General, will report in person to the commanding officer of the Department of the South, to relieve Lieut. Col. James A. Ekin, Deputy Quartermaster General, of his duties as Chief Quartermaster of that department. Lieut. Col. Ekin will continue to act under the orders of the Quartermaster General, as in command of the Quartermaster's Department at Jeffersonville, Ind., and in the investigation of claims referred to him by the Quartermaster General, and as Disbursing Agent at Louisville, Ky.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE ART AWARDS AT PHILADELPHIA.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I have read in THE NEW-YORK TIMES (Oct. 1) which you so ably direct, an article about awards of medals in the Art Department of the International Exhibition. As my name is there mentioned, I ought to declare that neither the German judge nor myself "refused with indignation to take hand to increase the number of medals." What we both wrote and signed was as follows:

"We wished to express ourselves in sympathy with the opinion of those members of the committee there present who thought the number of medals proposed far too small, yet in view of the fact that we were members of the subcommittee (for oil paintings) which adjudged these awards, and which have voted that their labors were definitively closed, and the members of the committee being then absent, excepting ourselves, we did not feel at liberty to join in the recommendations of any further awards."

Trusting in your acknowledged impartiality, I beg of you the kindness to publish this correction.

COUNT OF DONADIO.

PHILADELPHIA, Wednesday, Oct. 11, 1876.

NORTH RIVER SAVINGS BANK—CARD FROM EX-PRESIDENT HOOPER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The proceedings of the majority of the Trustees of the North River Savings Bank relative to me ingeniously cover the real motive of their action. It is but just that the public should know the facts in order that a correct conclusion may be drawn. Jan. 10, 1876, was the regular meeting of the Trustees for the annual election of President of the bank; up to that evening I did not know there was to be any opposition to me. Five minutes before the meeting of the board I was informed by one of the Trustees, Mr. C. Y. Wemple, that a majority of them were going to vote against me for President. I told him that it was a surprise to me, as I had heard no complaints, and that it was the first information I had of it, but if that was their determination all I had to do was to submit.

About an hour after the conversation the election took place and I was chosen by two majority, one of the opposition being absent. At this election nothing was said objectionable to my management, nor was there any complaint of the want of attention to the duties of the office. A few days after this election Dr. H. D. Ranney, the first Vice President, sent me a note requesting me to meet him at his residence. On calling there he demanded my resignation; whereupon I asked him if there was any special reason for it. He answered none, except it was desirable to have a financial man for President better known to the public. Presuming that he wanted the position himself, and that the bank would not be greatly benefited by the change, I declined to comply with the request. Thereupon he declared that the Trustees who voted against me at the last election would "war upon me to the knife." Notwithstanding on the evening of the election there was no complaint or protest against the report of the tellers who counted the votes, nor any objection by any of the Trustees as to its correctness or legality, this faction, after the death of a friendly Trustee, made an effort to refer the report back again to the tellers, apparently for the purpose of breaking up the election, changing the Nominating Committee, and dispossessing me at the same time. This was defeated, if my recollection is correct, by a tie vote. At this election the Nominating Committee was changed, a majority of my friends being elected. This committee met and recommended three gentlemen, supposed to be friends of mine, to fill the vacancies then existing. In the meantime one of my friends, the late Secretary and Trustee James O. Bennett, died, and another had become disaffected, leaving me in the minority. The opposition, thus strengthened, attempted at the meeting of the board, March 12, in violation of the charter, to limit the Trustees to the number then existing, which would effectually prevent the three gentlemen recommended by the Nominating Committee from being elected. I resisted this factious legislation by declaring it informal and not in accordance with the charter. It affords me pleasure to say that I was sustained in my ruling by the Superintendent of the Banking Department, Hon. D. C. Ellis, who, upon learning from me the particulars, replied as follows:

OFFICE OF THE NEW-YORK BANK DEPARTMENT,
ALBANY, March 31, 1876.

John Hooper, President of North River Savings Bank:

DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of yesterday I think you take the right view in regard to amending your by-laws, in order to reduce the number of Trustees. Section 50, of the General act, seems clear and explicit on that point. Very truly yours,

D. C. ELLIS, Superintendent.

Losing all confidence in the men who were resorting to such extraordinary means to get control of the bank, I withdrew my deposits from it July 1, and many of my friends having knowledge of these transactions did the same. Some of the opposition, upon learning these facts, succeeded in getting a committee of three appointed to inquire into damaging rumors made by one or more Trustees concerning the bank. No charge or specification was made against any officer or Trustee in the resolution appointing this committee. It was intended, however, to strike at me, as subsequent events will prove.

This committee was appointed July 11, and held several meetings without inviting me to be present. Sept. 6, the Chairman, Dr. H. D. Ranney, sent me a note requesting me to meet the committee at a private house, without informing me that I was in any way implicated in the proceedings. I declined to meet them there, and suggested the bank was the proper place. Thus, without appearing before them, and without any charge or specifications being made, the committee reported to the board Sept. 10, and recommended that I be removed from the Presidency. Thereupon Mr. John Graham, seconded by Erastus Littlefield, moved that I be displaced. The resolution was laid over to the next meeting, Oct. 9, they not having enough votes to pass it. This radical way of getting rid of an officer legally elected, created consternation and astonishment in the neighborhood, and at length found its way into the papers. In the earlier part of the year my friends in the board moved that these aggressive proceedings be published, and the opposition unanimously voted against it; showing conclusively that they were ashamed of their actions. These facts are mostly corroborated by the minutes of the board, and I challenge contradiction.

On the 9th of October, wishing to allay the excitement which their actions had engendered, and becoming satisfied that my friends and acquaintances understood the motive of the attack to be a determination on the part of a few persons to rule or ruin the bank, I resigned peremptorily and absolutely three hours before the board met, both my position as President and Trustee. Notwithstanding this, these "honorable men," more or less blind with spleen and malignity, without impugning my integrity or moral character, went through the farce of displacing an officer when there was none in existence to remove. Could absurdity go further? I am quite willing to compare records with any of the opposition who were so anxious to oust me from the bank.

At its organization I advanced from my personal funds $2,500 to secure the lease of the present location. I also advanced $500 toward its contingent expenses, stating at the time that I would not become responsible unless I could say that none of the depositors their money had not been used for fitting up the bank. I have attended every meeting of the board, both regular and special, for ten years past except two or three; I can say the same as to committee meetings. I have made all of its investments required of me, and neglected nothing that was necessary for a President to do, without receiving or asking any compensation whatever. I admit that I did not attend the meetings of the board for the months of August and September last, nor have I been at the bank so often since January last, for the reason it was not agreeable to meet scowling and plotting faces. Yet, even since then, I have not objected to do anything that was desired. Gentlemen, what have you done? I don't mean these remarks to apply to all of the opposition, but I do believe, from the groveling disposition of some, and the ambition and greed of others, the deposits have been greatly reduced. Notwithstanding all this, when I left the bank, it could pay its depositors a hundred cents on a dollar, and if it was then in as good a condition as the opposition pretended, the inference is plain to any unprejudiced mind that there was no cause for a change in its management, and that their action toward me was evidently unjust, and deserving of severe criticism.

JOHN HOOPER.

THE TRIAL OF MRS. HOUSE.

TESTIMONY IN THE CASE CONCLUDED

THE ACCUSED TAKES THE WITNESS-STAND AND TELLS THE STORY OF THE SHOOTING—EVIDENCE OF OTHER WITNESSES—THE PROSECUTION CONDUCTED IN A FEEBLE MANNER—AN ACQUITTAL EXPECTED.

The trial of Mrs. Irene A. V. House was continued in the County Court-house at Trenton yesterday. Miss Lucetta House, witness for the prosecution, was recalled for cross-examination, but nothing of importance was elicited. Coroner Bodine was next called and told the story of his investigations, which was reported in THE TIMES at the time of the Coroner's inquest; Ellen Collins testified that she was employed on the House farm at the time of the homicide; she saw Mr. and Mrs. House together just prior to the shooting; Mrs. House told her husband that his father was crying; House then said to his father, "This is the way I have been living with this woman for the last six or seven years;" she said to her husband, "What makes you beat me so?" "Why don't you behave?" he replied, "I try to;" Mr. House then threatened to beat his wife to death; she went into the hall of the house and he followed her; he knocked her down, kicked her, and pounded her head against a trunk; Willie Anderson rushed in and said, "Mr. House don't you kill my mother;" Mrs. House was at that time upon her knees, and her husband was holding her by her wrists; seeing that House contemplated an attack upon her son, she said, "Orson, don't hurt my boy;" all three then went toward the door of Mr. House's sleeping-room, and House pushed her into the room and partly closed the door upon her; Willie tried to enter the room, but was pulled back by House; Mrs. House came out of the room and again begged her husband not to kill her boy; the witness then went to the kitchen and there heard the pistol-shot.

Louisa Thompson, a fellow work-girl of the previous witness, said that she saw the attack upon Mrs. House; her husband struck her squarely in the forehead and knocked her down; after she had fallen, witness saw Mr. House kick her repeatedly.

THE DEFENSE.

Here the prosecution rested and the counsel for the defense was ordered to proceed.

In his opening address for the defense Counsellor Greene gave a brief forecast of the drift of the testimony he was about to introduce. He would show, he said, that the killing of Mr. House was not a premeditated murder, but that the thought to kill was born in a second of time, and was conceived while Mrs. House was in dread of her life, fearing that Mr. House was about to actually perform that which he had often threatened. He would further show that at the time when Mr. House was shot he had his hand in the hip pocket of his trousers, where he carried a pistol. He would convince the jury beyond a doubt that the killing of Mr. House was purely an act of self-defense.

Edward R. Sullday was the first witness for the defense. He testified that he had drawn the map of Mr. House's house and premises exhibited in court. The drawings were made from actual measurement. Witness explained the diagram.

Willie Anderson, son of Mrs. House by a former marriage, testified that he was living with his mother at the time of the homicide. He told the story of his interference and his attempt to rescue his mother from the inhuman treatment she was undergoing at the hands of Mr. House. He found his mother upon the floor of the hallway. Mr. House had her by her hair and was busy pounding her head against the corner of a trunk and hitting her with his fist. Willie said that he rushed up to Mr. House and said, "She is my mother; you can lick me if you want to, but you must not beat her." Mr. House at once turned upon him, and with a blow felled him to the floor. He picked himself up and rushed to the bed-room door a few feet away, believing that his mother was in the room, and fearing that House would kill her. House stopped him as he was entering the door, and catching him between the door and the jam tried to crush him. House then seized witness by the collar and dragged him toward the porch door; suddenly he loosened his grasp, and the next thing witness knew House was shot dead.

Cross-examined—Willie acknowledged that he did not tell the Coroner's jury that he was knocked down by House. He was asked why he did not testify to this fact. He said he did not know exactly what to say before such a tribunal. He was then asked how he came to know that he ought to tell it before the court. He had learned, he said, while listening to the testimony of other witnesses that every word was important.

Austin Matthews said he was laboring on the House farm at the time of the homicide. The principal topic of conversation was that Mr. House's hand in the hip-pocket of his trousers just as he was shot. The question whether or not Mr. House was about to draw a pistol was fought over most strenuously by the opposing counsel. The witness was obliged to point out upon the diagram the exact positions of Mr. and Mrs. House and of himself at the time of the shooting. Attorney General Vanatta, who conducted the cross-examination, made it clearly appear from the answers given by the witness that in order to have seen Mr. House put his hand into his hip-pocket he must have been right through Mr. House's body. Witness was asked if both he and his father looked on while Mr. House was abusing his wife and step-son. He replied that they did. Why didn't you interfere? asked the Attorney General. Why, because Mr. House said he would shoot anybody that interfered with him when he was correcting his wife, and I didn't want to get my head blowed off."

Morris Matthews, father of the preceding witness, was an eye-witness of the whole fight between Mr. and Mrs. House and Willie Anderson. He was standing on the porch in full view of all that transpired in the hall. He said that he saw House knock his wife down, kick her, and throw her by the hair across the room. He made no attempt at interference. He was on the Coroner's jury and signed the verdict, swearing that it was his belief that Mr. House had been wilfully and deliberately murdered. He said he saw Mr. House put his hand in his hip-pocket for his pistol, but he did not cry out and tell Mrs. House and Willie to look out for their lives. He didn't dare interfere in any way, he said. Witness was placed in the same dilemma in which his son had suffered. He gave the positions of the persons substantially as his son, and was asked if it was possible for him to see through Mr. House's body.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. HOUSE.

Mrs. House was then called. The counsel for the defense called out her name in a most impressive manner. The accused rose from her chair, ascended the steps, and took her seat in the witness chair. She told her story glibly in response to the questions of her counsel. I am, said she, the daughter of William Vansant, of this city, and I was the wife of Orson A. House; I was living on the farm known as the Dey farm the 30th of last June; I met my husband on his return from New-York at the corner of the barn; I spoke to him, among other things, about going to New-York; from that point I went out to the porch, and then I went into my room; I saw my husband again when I came to the hall door to get him to pay off the men that night; he refused to go into the room with me; I went back to my room; Willie came to my room and told me father House was crying; I went out and asked old Mr. House what was the matter; he said, "Nothing;" he is old, feeble, and childish; he went toward the lane with Willie, and I followed; I saw Mr. House standing by a pile of lumber; I called to him, "Orson, I want you;" he came up and was very angry; he swore at me and said he would beat me to death; I was frightened, and started to the house; he followed; I turned to speak, and he knocked me down, kicking me as I fell; "Orson," I said, "you are killing me;" he put his hand over my mouth to keep me from speaking; he then took me by the hair and threw me against a trunk; Willie came up to interfere; I told him to go away, he would make matters worse; Mr. House threw Willie from him, and I grasped Mr. House by the wrists and begged him not to hurt our boy; he would not, but came toward us again; once more my husband threw Willie away and then he took me by the hair and threw me into my bedroom; I struck against the bedstead as I fell; I supposed that my husband had put me into the room to continue his beating; I saw a pistol hanging at the head of the bed; I took the pistol and looked into the hall; I thought he was coming after me; I saw Willie being squeezed in the door with Mr. House's hand on his throat; Mr. House was pressing against the door with all his might; he was a very strong man when he was angry; I ran to Willie's assistance; the door opened suddenly, and I went out and stood over Willie and begged Mr. House not to hurt my boy; Mr. House had threatened to kill anybody who interfered with him while he was whipping me; he showed his teeth at me and hissed at me; he took me by the hair and threw me against the trunk; I recovered, and looking up I saw him striking Willie; Willie was lying down; Mr. House was standing over Willie, and I ran toward me; he put his hand into his hip pocket, and I thought he was going to take out his pistol and shoot both Willie and me; I took aim and fired.

Attorney General Vanatta took the witness for cross-examination, and questioned her quietly and politely for a short time. She answered readily enough so long as the questions were of a harmless nature. But soon she became uneasy, and wiggled about nervously at each new interrogatory. Suddenly she rose from her seat, threw up her hands in a tragical manner, and descended from the witness stand, remarking, "If you want my freedom, take it, but don't ask me any more questions." The counsel for the defense rushed to her relief, and conducted her back to the seat. The janitor was sent for a bottle of medicine, a spoonful of which was administered to her. Mrs. House soon recovered, and said she would try to go back to the witness stand and testify. But the prosecution, seeming to think that the whole affair had been worked up for effect upon the jury, and believing that another and perhaps more startling piece of acting would follow a renewal of the examination, declined to ask any more questions.

The testimony being all in at this point, the counsel for the defense addressed the jury, and at the conclusion of his speech the court adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning, when Attorney General Vanatta will make the argument for the prosecution. The case will be given to the jury early in the day, and it is generally believed that a verdict will be given before night. The belief that Mrs. House will be acquitted seems to be almost universal. Even the prosecuting counsel acknowledged in the outset that the acquittal was a foregone conclusion, and this opinion may have had something to do with the feeble manner in which they have pushed their case.

NATURALIZATION FRAUDS.

TWO ARRESTS MADE YESTERDAY—FRAUDS COMMITTED AND COUNTENANCED BY TAMMANY HALL.

Patrick Reilly and Bernhard McDonald were arrested yesterday, by Deputy United States Marshal Crowley, on charges of naturalization frauds, and upon being taken before United States Commissioner Davenport were held in $5,000 bail for examination. Reilly was the applicant in the Court of Common Pleas for naturalization papers, McDonald acting as his witness. The latter at the time of the application swore that he had known Reilly for a number of years, and afterward said that he had only been introduced to him the previous day, and upon this information the arrests were made. Upon Reilly's person was found a ticket from Tammany Hall for his naturalization papers, showing by whom the fraud was countenanced. Reilly presented himself for registration after securing his papers, and they were retained by the Supervisor of the district, and it is said that he has now caused the arrest of the Supervisor for alleged petit larceny, but of this no particulars could be gained.

It is stated in official quarters that the manner of naturalization in the State Courts bids fair to occasion much trouble before the election. It is said that the course pursued in 1868 is in a great measure being followed now, despite the enactments since that time. Officers from the United States Marshal's office have been watching these operations for the past fortnight, and their reports give abundant evidence of fraud, which is mainly perpetrated by those coming from Tammany Hall, and easily carried out through hired witnesses. In the Court of Common Pleas it is understood that close scrutiny is observed, and every requirement of the law followed, while in other State Courts great carelessness has been observed. A large number of fraudulent cases have been reported, and it is stated that unless more caution is taken in the future, arrests will be made from a quarter little expected. It is probable that the arrest of Reilly and McDonald is but the beginning of a number on similar charges.

MR. GREEN AND THE MAYORALTY.

Controller Green was waited upon yesterday by a committee representing the Independent Republican electors of the Eighth Congressional District, consisting of Messrs. Messler, Foster, Cleveland, Michaels, Mitchell, Tompkins, Dewey, Barker, and Drummond, who presented him with the following resolutions:

First—That it is the mature conviction of the Republican masses of the City of New-York and of all intelligent citizens of every party that the highest interests of our City and county will be best served by a strictly non-partisan municipal administration.

Second—That we deplore in the interest of Municipal reform that, owing to political bargains between the machine managers of the dominant political parties for a division of official spoils between them, the proposed amendment to the city charter, providing for a spring election so as to effect a complete separation of Municipal affairs from the issues of State and national politics, failed in our last Legislature, and we hereby pledge our votes and our influence to secure the adoption of such amendment at the next Legislature.

Third—That only men of ability and tried integrity should be selected for official positions in the great municipality of New-York, and we will support for its affairs upon strictly business principles, and in the interest of no clique or party of men.

Fourth—That in a long period of service Controller Andrew H. Green has met this demand fully by the administration of the responsible trust in the Municipality on a strictly non-partisan basis, and in a manner which has met with the highest praise of men of all parties and sections of the country, and in so doing merits the commendation of every citizen and taxpayer in the City of New-York.

Fifth—That, therefore, it is the sense of the Independent Republican electors of the Eighth Congressional District, reiving upon the hearty sympathy and support of the best men of all parties, that the nomination of Controller Andrew H. Green for the highest Municipal office in our gift, the Mayoralty of the City of New-York, ought to be and will be ratified by the people at the ensuing election.

Gen. Foster addressed the Controller, stating that the Independent Republican electors of that district had no sympathy with rings, and that they desired to see the various Municipal offices filled with men whom the people knew not only to be honest, but likewise capable.

The Controller, in reply, said that he highly appreciated the kindness of the committee in calling upon him, and was much obliged for their resolutions. If the people thought well enough of him to elect him to the Chief Magistracy of the City he would try to administer the duties of the office to the entire satisfaction of the public.

A committee, consisting of Messrs. Martin Larkin, John McMakin, Thomas Hogan, and Michael Kiernan, representing a large number of the citizens of the Sixteenth Assembly District, also called to tender their support. The Controller expressed his thanks for their kindly offer, after which the committee withdrew.

COULD NOT SEE THE POINT.

A very funny incident marked the trial of a suit brought by one Admiral Nelson against an insurance company, which was brought before Chief Justice Shea in the Marine Court yesterday. The company put in a counter-claim amounting to more than $1,000, and ex-Judge Joachimsen, who appeared for the plaintiff, demurred to this, as the amount put the case out of the Marine Court's jurisdiction. The counsel for the company, wishing to have his little joke, observed that it did not lie in the mouth of "Admiral" Nelson to demur to anything "Marine." This caused a general smile to overspread the countenances of parties, counsel, and auditors. In fact the witticism was appreciated by every one except the Chief Justice, who remarked dogmatically and seriously that the Marine Court had no jurisdiction of maritime matters.

Mr. Joachimsen explained—Your Honor, the opposite counsel is only attempting a joke on the name of my client, "Admiral" Nelson.

Chief Justice Shea—Ah! I perceive. A joke. Oh! yes.

Several gentlemen were observed to bury their faces in their hats very suddenly at this, and seemed to be moved by some strong internal emotions.

THE VICTIM OF A SCOUNDREL.

Lucy Lawrence, the young woman who was arrested on Saturday last by Detective Titus, of the Central Office, for having stolen a quantity of lace goods from her employers, Kirsch & Simson, No. 27 Greene street, and the young man, Henry Lewis, who disposed of the goods, were yesterday arraigned before Justice Kasmire in the Washington Place Police Court. On examination it was found that Lewis had prevailed upon her to steal the goods in order to support him in idleness. She at last refused to do so any longer, and as he still persisted in persecuting her, had him sent to the Work-house on the Island. Out of revenge Lewis wrote a letter to Messrs. Kirsch & Simson, informing them of the dishonesty of their employe. Justice Kasmire in terse language expressed his great disgust at the actions of Lewis, and committed him to the Tombs in default of $2,000 bail, saying as the prisoner quitted the court-room, that he only regretted it was not in his power to send him to the State Prison. The unfortunate dupe of Lewis' perfidy was also committed in default of $500 bail, to answer at the General Sessions.

THE STATEN ISLAND FERRY LEASE.

Argument was had before Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday in the matter of the application by the New-York and Staten Island Ferry Company to compel the City to award it the lease of the ferry franchise from the foot of Whitehall street to the south shore of Staten Island. The ferry company's bid offered the City ten per cent. of the gross receipts, but John H. Starin put in a bid of fifty per cent. of the gross receipts. The company claims the latter bid is fraudulent and sham, and though it has been accepted for nine months, Starin has run no boats on the ferry.

Assistant Corporation Counsel Andrews claimed that the City was justified in accepting Starin's bid. Starin had run no boats because the company had possession of the dock at the foot of Whitehall street, which it had received by lease from the Department of Docks. A proceeding was now pending, however, to have the company ejected from the premises. Further argument will be had to-day.

A BUTCHER'S AMUSEMENT.

Henry Lesch, a butcher living at the corner of Sixty-third street and Second avenue, was yesterday arraigned before Justice Otterbourg, in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, on a charge of felonious assault with a pistol, preferred by John Sheehan, of No. 338 East Sixty-third street. Sheehan and two other boys climbed over a fence that inclosed a vacant lot belonging to Lesch. This so enraged the prisoner that without any warning whatever he discharged the contents of a large pis ol at the boys. The shot took effect in the thigh and leg of Sheehan, lacerating the flesh in a horrible manner. A physician was at once sent for, who extracted twenty buck-shot from the wounded boy. Sheehan's wounds are pronounced serious, but not mortal. In default of $1,000 bail Justice Otterbourg committed the prisoner to answer at the General Sessions.

LAW REPORTS.

A MATTER OF POLICY.

JOHN MORRISSEY SUED FOR MALFEASANCE AS RECEIVER OF A POLICY BUSINESS—HE SETS UP THE ILLEGAL NATURE OF THE CALLING IN DEFENSE—THE COMPLAINT DISMISSED.

The suit of Henry Colton against John Morrissey, Receiver, &c., was brought to trial before Judge Donohue, in Supreme Court, Circuit, Part I., yesterday. The plaintiff brought the suit, the complaint states, for himself and others who may join him. On Dec. 16, 1869, he says, Mr. Morrissey was appointed the Receiver of the business heretofore carried on by and under the firm name of C. H. Murray & Co., and all grants, charters,

Nothing can be of more service in the few remaining days of the canvass than careful attention to the local organizations. The interest of the public is now thoroughly aroused, and, while the State and National Committees will see that the work of discussion goes on with all necessary vigor, the gathering of the harvest will depend on the neighborhood organizations. The voters still doubtful should be ascertained, and every honorable means used to determine them in the right direction, and especial pains should be taken that those of them who can be secured are got to the polls early on election day. But we need not enumerate the details of the work which will fall upon the local committees. It is sufficiently understood, and there should be no possible mistake as to its being promptly and fully performed. The great benefits which Republicans believe will accrue to the country from the election of Gen. HAYES, and a Congress in sympathy with him, can only be had at the price of steady, careful work in each ward and country town, and in no State is this more essential than in New-York.

Mr. STOUGHTON on Monday evening incidentally suggested a good point against Democrats who affect virtuous indignation in regard to the exposures of Mr. TILDEN'S false pretenses which have been made by THE TIMES and other journals. It is convenient for Mr. TILDEN'S apologists to pretend to be shocked by the publications which fasten upon him the guilt of perjury and fraud and a long course of sharp practice in his financial relations with men who trusted to his "honor" and reputation. Mr. BELMONT holds up his hands in horror at the freedom of the criticism from which Mr. TILDEN suffers, and the over-nice Mr. PARKE GODWIN employs genteel epithets to express his disgust at the slender respect shown toward his favorite candidate for the Presidency. But when did these gentlemen, or any of the crowd of Democratic talkers, act upon the precepts they enjoin in their comments upon President GRANT? With what crimes has he not been charged by the Sun and the World and the rest of the Democratic press? What unjust insinuations have they not leveled at his conduct? What foul aspersions have they not cast upon his character? What base imputations have they not heaped upon his life and associations, his motives and proceedings? There is hardly a sin in the decalogue which they have not attributed to him, or an act unbecoming a President which they have not alleged against him. His splendid career as a soldier has not shielded him from coarse abuse; his personal integrity has not been allowed to moderate the assaults to which he has been subjected. And the men and the papers who, for the sake of partisanship, have thus maligned the actual President, prate of "decency," and "scruples," and "courtesy," when the mask is torn off the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, and his greed and unscrupulousness and hypocrisy are exposed in the full light of day!

The Ring Democrats in Brooklyn have entered the field in a most defiant mood. They yesterday named a county ticket, which was mainly in exact accordance with the programme of "Boss" MCLAUGHLIN. All idea of recognizing the strength or the claims of the reform wing of the party was abandoned, and the nominations were intended as an announcement that the Ring believes itself powerful enough to do what it chooses. That this was the feeling of the "Boss" was to be seen from the course of the Democratic General Committee on Monday evening, when the friends of JOHN SHANLEY were recognized in the Third Assembly District. SHANLEY is a notorious character, who has been indicted for election frauds, and who is thoroughly detested by the people of his district. A like sign was the admission of the supporters of BERNARD MIDAS for Commissioner of Charities. MIDAS is one of the worst of a bad lot in this commission, to which a very large part of the corruption in Kings County for the last five years has been traceable. He was renominated yesterday. Now, if the Republicans make their nominations with proper regard for the requirements of the situation, there is no reason why the county ticket should not stand a fair chance of election. There is certainly a number of Democrats who are disgusted with the management of their party affairs, and who might be enlisted in a well-concerted plan to secure good government for the City.

The remarkable murder trial now going on at Trenton, N. J., bids fair to come to a close to-day. Yesterday the prisoner, Mrs. IRENE HOUSE, was on the stand, as was also her son, the step-son of the murdered man. Their testimony disclosed a revolting state of affairs in the HOUSE family. There seems to be no doubt that at the time of his death the victim was engaged in a general quarrel with his wife and step-son, and was conducting himself in a most brutal fashion. It was sought by the defense to show that Mrs. HOUSE believed, when she shot her husband, that he was drawing a pistol upon her son, and was likely to use it upon her; but the evidence was not conclusive nor free from contradiction. That the woman was in great passion of fear and anger seems pretty well established. How far the jury will think she was justified in killing her husband remains to be seen. Meanwhile, it appears that she has maintained relations of the most friendly character with the brothers of her dead husband, negotiating with one as to a marriage with him, and writing the other letters alternating between unctious piety and light pleasantry. Behind these strange and disgusting revelations lies the question of what shall be done with the property of the murdered man. The whole case reveals a depth of vulgar wickedness on all sides which is not pleasant to contemplate.

A Washington dispatch to a New-York Democratic paper says that "a well-posted Republican" reports from the Pacific States that he "concedes Oregon to the Democrats" and fears that they will also carry California by a decided majority." Nevada, this singular person magnanimously regards as doubtful. On the other hand, a California Rupublican, undoubtedly quite as "well-posted" as the World's fly-gobbler, writes to a New-York correspondent that he considers California absolutely sure for HAYES and WHEELER; that he has strong hopes of Oregon, and that "Nevada has never been uncertain—but certain for HAYES." Ex-Attorney General WILLIAMS, who has just returned from Oregon, says that that State is "as sure for the Republicans as Maine is." Usually all three of the Pacific States are classed as doubtful. And it is certain that any so-called "well-posted Republican" who sends comforting news to a Democratic newspaper is merely a temporary invention of the Tilden "nincompoops."

To-day another opportunity is offered for registration. The Boards of Registry will sit from 8 A. M. to 9 P. M. We trust that our friends will not neglect this important duty. It is not well to postpone it, thinking to attend to it at one of the succeeding meetings. The voter who secures his right to vote to-day will not be exposed to danger of losing it by inability to attend hereafter. When the next registration day comes around, sickness, or absence, or unavoidable business may interfere to disfranchise the man who neglects the present opportunity. Registration is an annoying necessity, but it is absolutely indispensable to an honest vote in New-York, and no good citizen should fail to recognize it as being so.

FEDERAL POWER IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

After long deliberation and a close scrutiny of the representations made to him, the President has decided to issue a proclamation setting forth the condition of affairs in South Carolina, warning armed bodies of men to disperse, and declaring his determination to maintain peace and order in the State. The proclamation is to be followed by the further dispatch of troops to render its terms effectual. The announcement comes not one day too soon. And we mistake the character of the President, if, after satisfying himself that this exercise of authority is just and expedient, he allows it to fall short of the objects to be attained. Any hesitancy, any half-measure, now, would compromise the character of the government and aggravate the evils that should be corrected. The force to be sent must be equal to any emergency, and it must be sent with sufficient promptitude to prove that the Federal power sustains the Executive of the State in his unequal contest with lawless men.

The constitutional authority under which the President acts is clear enough. "The United States," says article 4, section 4, "shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and, on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence." Under the first clause of this section, and under the legislative authority conferred for the enforcement of the fifteenth amendment the United States Marshals have been enjoined to make provision for securing freedom and purity at the polls next month, with the understanding that their right to act in the election extends to meetings, movements, and efforts anterior to the voting but connected with it. To what extent the requisite measures have been taken by Federal officials to give effect to the instructions of the Attorney General, we have no means of ascertaining. We do know that they did not prevent the recent election in Georgia from being a mockery of republican government, and that any check they have imposed upon the Democratic system of intimidation and violence in Mississippi and other parts of the South has been too slight to be appreciable. The 7th of November will tell whether and with what results the Marshals carry out their instructions in Mississippi, Louisiana, and Florida, which in ordinary circumstances would as surely yield Republican majorities as South Carolina. It is evident that more harm than good will have been done if the instructions from Washington, with the law on which they are based, be allowed to remain a dead letter. The Government cannot afford to leave unfinished any work it undertakes. If it asserts its power at all, it must make that power equal to the emergency or itself become contemptible. The practical difficulty lies in the wholesome unwillingness of the National Government to interfere except at the instance of the State Government; and no appeal for intervention is likely to come from Mississippi, where violence and coercion are carried on without so much as an attempt at prevention or punishment by its Democratic rulers.

As regards South Carolina, the only reasonable ground of fault-finding is not the fact of interference, but the tardiness with which it has been resolved upon. The exact condition of things which the Constitution contemplates as one of the causes of interference has existed there many weeks. It would be technically incorrect to say that a large part of the white population of the State, with WADE HAMPTON at their head, are in actual rebellion against the Government. Over their most outrageous proceedings they cast a thin pretense of respect for Federal authority, and certainly in no case have they failed to obey that authority when it has been sustained by military force. Nevertheless, the great mass of the whites have assumed a position with reference to the election of TILDEN and HAMPTON which in any other country than this would have been treated as insurrectionary. They did not affect obedience to local authority—they openly defied it. They did not profess a willingness to abide by the electoral decision of the State, freely expressed—they avowed a purpose to carry the State by organization, threats, and violence, with the full knowledge that in any fair election they would be the minority. They adopted the Mississippi "shot-gun policy," which WADE HAMPTON had studied on the spot, and for two months they have applied themselves to it with as much vigor and method as though they were preparing once more to issue an ordinance of secession. They formed military companies, with the drill and discipline of war time, importing into the State batteries of artillery, tens of thousands of rifles, and small arms to an unlimited extent. These are not the tactics of law-abiding citizens. There is nothing in an election, State or national, that can justify these preparations, which are intelligible only on the supposition that the threats uttered by WADE HAMPTON and his outspoken supporters were to be put in execution. No room was left for doubt upon this point. Simultaneously with organization began intimidation and murder. The intimidation has been directed against white and black alike. Both have been subjected to a terrorism which is without parallel on this continent. The scores of murdered Republicans have been blacks, who have evidenced by martyrdom their attachment to the party which emancipated and enfranchised them; the system of coercion having worked more effectually with the white Republicans in the towns. Had WADE HAMPTON and his followers been in open insurrection, they could not have been more merciless or persistent than they have been in their war against Republican voters. In truth, they have been in revolt against the State Government. They trampled on its laws and dared it to punish them. When Gov. CHAMBERLAIN issued his proclamation setting forth the lawlessness of their organizations and requiring them to disarm and disband, they declared that they would do neither. Then WADE HAMPTON, realizing the imminence of Federal interposition, bade them to disband; and now we are told that they are disbanding in obedience, not to the law, but to the request of their rebel chief.

Such is an outline of the case which yesterday came before the Cabinet at Washington for its decision. With many of the details the country is familiar. Each succeeding day adds to them in number and brutality. The whole story, whenever it is told, will be an indelible blot upon the civilization of the South. It will make foreigners wonder whether the difference between the "chivalrous" murderers and ruffians of South Carolina and the Bashi-Bazouks in Bulgaria is, after all, more than a difference in degree. The Turks cut throats as a pious duty. The South Carolina Democrats have shot and mangled negroes, and hunted them like wild beasts, to rid the State of its Republican majority. The mere stoppage of this condition of things will not be enough. The Governor confesses himself powerless without Federal aid. The President announces to the State that the aid shall be rendered. We accept his word. The reluctance with which he has acted exonerates him from the imputation of partisan motives. Peace and order must be reestablished at whatever cost. This, however, should not be all. The outraged laws need vindication, and we trust that Gov. CHAMBERLAIN, with the Federal power at his back, will take immediate and energetic steps to arrest the guilty parties who are known, and to crush the system of coercion and outrage which has thriven and grown more and more audacious under prolonged impunity. The time has come when the American people should know whether murder and violence are to be recognized features of a political canvass; and the question can be nowhere answered more properly than in South Carolina.

THE DEMOCRATIC IDEA OF REFORM.

We fear that the devotion of the Democratic Party to the cause of civil service reform has not received as much attention as it deserves. The people hear a great deal of vague talk from the Democratic orators and editors about the necessity of reform, but these oracles provokingly forget to say of just what their idea of reform consists. Happily we are able to supply the omission from no less a source than that fountain of pure Democratic doctrine—the St. Louis platform itself. That document sums up the whole Democratic creed on the subject in the declaration that "the first step in reform must be the people's choice of honest men from another party." This is a master stroke. It is worthy of the cunning hand of the great Democratic Reformer himself. It is not sufficient that the people should choose honest men for the public offices—that would not comport with the Democratic idea of reform—but the honest men must be "from another party." As there is only one other party that amounts to much, it follows that in order to have that true "reform" which is declared with such frequent reiteration to be "necessary," we must fill the public offices with Democrats. The choice of honest Republicans will not answer the stern demand of the Democracy for reform. Ordinary reformers would be content simply with what Collector SIMMONS would call "unrestricted" honest men, but these thorough-going reformers have set their hearts on the still more difficult achievement of finding honest Democrats for the public offices. In our mind's eye we can see the Great Reformer going about the Five Points and Mackerelville like a modern DIOGENES, with a lantern in one hand and a bottle of smelling salts in the other, searching for the 80,000 honest Democrats who are to be his aids in the work of reform. The stress laid on the assurance that the new crop of public officers are to be from another party—to wit, the Democratic Party—justifies the fear that this expectation possesses more importance to the average Democratic mind than the demand that they shall be honest. Certainly a shrewder device to gratify the keen longing of the "unterrified" for a nibble at the public crib under the guise of reform could not have been invented. In the first place, the honest men must all be Democrats, which is the essential thing. Then the assumption runs through the whole platform that Democracy is synonymous with honesty, so that a man need only prove his Democracy to establish his honesty. This brings us at length to the naked idea of reform which possesses the breast of the average Democrat, which is, that the miserable Radicals ought to be kicked out and Democrats put in. The platform reaches this result by rather a roundabout road, but nevertheless it conveys the right idea to the Democratic mind.

True, the platform elsewhere declares that the civil service should not be subject to change at every election. This means, of course, when taken in connection with the strenuous demand for a complete upsetting of the civil service at the coming election, that it is only necessary that there should be a change at those elections which result in turning the Black Republicans out and putting Democrats in. The meanest Democratic capacity can comprehend the necessity for a change at such a time. The platform also asserts that the civil service ought not to be "a prize fought for at the ballot-box," but, as it elsewhere urges the Democrats to fight desperately at the ballot-box this Fall for the self-same prize, we can only conclude that, like Rip Van Winkle, it "doesn't count this time."

Gov. TILDEN takes up the strain of reform where the platform leaves off, but there is nothing in his letter to militate against our interpretation of the Democratic creed. He plainly intends that the "usufruct" of reform shall inure to the exclusive benefit of the Democracy. He shows no conception whatever of the true causes of the demoralization of the public service, which existed in much greater degree than now before the Republican Party came into power. He deals with effects only, not with causes. He declares that two evils infest the civil service: the notion that the public service exists for the benefit of the office-holders, and the organization of the official class into a body of political mercenaries. These are not causes, but effects. The true cause of the low tone of the public service is the introduction of partisanship into the rank and file of the service, and the usurpation of the appointing power by Congressmen. Of a comprehension of these fundamental evils Gov. TILDEN gives no evidence. He panders to the Democratic cry for a change, and holds out the delusive notion that the evils of the civil service may be remedied by good resolutions on the part of the Executive. He might as well try to pay the interest on the public debt out of his own income, or to stop a locomotive at full speed with an injunction. He does not see, or does not wish to seem to see, that the first thing necessary to a real reform is a radical change of system. He speaks of a change of system, indeed, but only as something to be done after the whole service shall have been pulled to pieces. Moreover, in order to discourage any "delusive expectations" of real reform, he asserts that the Executive can only be delivered by a constitutional amendment "from the greatest temptation to misuse the power of patronage." If, therefore, he should be elected President, and should do nothing to reform the civil service, but should yield to the temptation to misuse the patronage, the fault would not be his but the Constitution's. The Constitution has been used by the Democracy in times past to "cover a multitude of sins;" but this would be subjecting the covering capacity of that venerable document to a tension that might break it altogether. On the whole, we may conclude that the prospects of a real reform of the civil service under Democratic rule would not be very bright.

A LEGACY OF LAWSUITS.

It is likely that "the great California philanthropist," as the late JAMES LICK is sometimes called, has left a valuable legacy to the lawyers, whatever may have been his intentions toward the human race. The world was all agog with wonder and admiration when it was first announced that Mr. LICK had disposed of several million dollars for various charitable and public purposes. The novel thing about this action was that the donor had designated the objects upon which his great wealth was to be bestowed during his lifetime, and had nominated a number of eminent citizens who should act as trustees of his estate. To be sure, there was a slight feeling of apprehension that bequests for monuments and statues of marble and bronze were a little premature. There was a suggestion that a half million in gold could be better employed in art education than in setting up works which might—probably would—hereafter be regarded as incumbrances of the ground which they covered. Even the millionaire's specification for one of his chief monuments was alarming for the open opportunity which it afforded for mythology, allegory, common-place and disordered fancy to disport themselves in enduring bronze. But American good nature forebore to look a gift horse in the mouth, and LICK was regarded as an admirable example to all rich men who were getting ready to die. Popular enthusiasm received a check when, one fine day, the trustees were served with a notice to quit. Then it came out that Mr. LICK was not at all satisfied with the way things were going, that he thought he might live some years longer, and on the whole he preferred making some changes in his ante-mortem bequests. After a brief resistance, the trustees resigned in some disgust.

Evidently Mr. LICK, who had been, to all practical intent, dead and buried, was preparing for a new lease of life. He insisted that he should have a share in the management of his money, although he had given it away and had appointed his own executors. After some delay he seemed to have once more made up his mind how he wanted his property tied up; he accordingly appointed a new Board of Trustees, with a new chart of sailing directions in a fresh deed of trust. About this time a long-lost and apparently alienated son of the fickle-minded millionaire turned up in the person of JOHN H. LICK. This gentleman was put in the second Board of Trustees, and all went well again; the friend of humanity appeared to have vindicated himself; the philanthropist was once more a model, with a few drawbacks, for all who had more money than they could carry away with them. This satisfaction was of short duration. Mr. LICK ruthlessly dismissed the second Board of Trustees when they had been on office about eighteen months. Singularly enough, the cause of this new ebullition was the junior LICK. The old man had taken offense at something which JOHN had done, or had neglected to do, and he was annoyed because the Trustees had not put his son out of the board without more ado. He annulled the trust and dismissed the Trustees in order to get rid of his son. A third board were appointed and are now in possession, and Mr. LICK is dead.

It may be seen at a glance that the disputatious philanthropist succeeded in leaving a very pretty legal muddle behind him. When the first Trustees were requested to quit, they insisted that the trust vested in them could not be resigned; that for all practical purposes LICK was dead, and that the trust deed was his will, which he could not rise up from the grave and revoke. Eminent legal counsel sustained this view of the case. The reader will not be surprised to learn that equally eminent legal counsel took the opposite view of the case. If this question should now be revived by either of the three several Boards of Trustees, or by persons claiming under them, it is apparent that there would be a long conflict, which would be more profitable to the aforesaid legal counsel than to the prospective recipients of Mr. LICK'S millions. The appearance in California of the junior LICK is another threatening incident. In the first deed he was cut off with a shilling or two; in the second he was given $150,000 as a paternal souvenir, but was finally left out of the board, though his legacy is continued to him. This JOHN LICK, who appears to be a chip of the old block, has thus far kept his own counsel, but there is a dreadful suspicion in California that he is meditating a suit at law for the ousting of all trustees and the securing of the paternal millions.

A grotesque, though somewhat pathetic, feature of this case is the preparation of trustees No. 3 for a suit to set aside the old man's deeds, on the ground that he was not of sound mind. Mr. LICK had been so querulous, changeable, and violent that it was felt that a suspicion of his sanity might not be unnatural. Accordingly, while he was dying, he was carefully inspected, cross-examined, and reported upon by experts. The published accounts of interviews with these pre-ordained witnesses are among the curiosities of newspaper literature. On the whole, people who have not money enough to make their heirs quarrelsome, when they are dead and gone, may properly congratulate themselves. If the Lick bequests are finally set aside, it will be because the testator, in his anxiety to have everything exactly right, boggled and tangled the whole business beyond extrication. Whatever happens, the disposition of this vast estate has lost the charm of novelty, and the dignity with which it was first invested.

CONNECTICUT FOSSILS.

There are certain wavering opponents of the theory of evolution who are ready to admit that the lower animals may be addicted to development, but still stoutly deny that man compromised his manhood in any such way. Just as we calmly concede that some man in whom we take no possible interest may very likely be the descendant of a plumber, while we indignantly repudiate the suggestion that any of our own ancestors ever committed plumbing, so these people are willing to let Prof. HUXLEY defile the graves of the ancestor of the horse or the crocodile, provided he will not graft an ape on their own private family tree. Of course, this is an evidence of weakness and vanity which deserves to be rebuked, and scientific persons who are themselves notoriously quite free from vanity or weakness of any sort, will hail with delight a recent discovery made by two Connecticut farmers, which conclusively proves that man is the result of evolution.

For many years the geologists of the Connecticut Valley have been in the habit of discovering the tracks of fossil chickens of enormous size on sandstone rocks. Quantities of learned pamphlets have been written concerning these bird-tracks, and it is now thoroughly established that at an early geological period certain birds of the general character of chickens, but of a height of, say thirty feet or more, were in the habit of walking over soft sandstone and leaving the prints of their feet to cheer and comfort subsequent geologists. The other day two farmers of North Canton, Conn., while digging a well, laid bare a slab of sandstone bearing the clear impression of a human foot of eleven inches in length. The impression was that of a man's left foot, but, curiously enough, the print of his right foot was not found. The proprietor of the foot evidently did not own another one, and from the fact that accompanying the print of this left foot was the print of a large fossil chicken's claw, the two farmers, and the rest of the inhabitants of North Canton, formed the opinion that the prehistoric man must have hopped through life on one leg, and been on intimate terms with the poultry of the period.

This opinion was, perhaps, excusable in an unscientific farmer, but no true scientific person would dream of adopting it, or of mistaking in any way the real meaning of the sandstone record. If we see on the snow the print of a man's left foot, and at a short distance on the right the print of a man's right foot, we do not imagine that two men, each with a single leg, have been hopping in that precise locality. The meanest intellect would attribute both feet to one and the same man, and would draw the inevitible conclusion that the two footprints proved that a man with the usual supply of legs had recently walked over the snow. It is in precisely this way that the intelligent student of paleontology—than which there is not a nicer word in the whole dictionary—would interpret the North Canton discovery. He would unhesitatingly decide that the same person who left the print of a left foot in the sandstone left also the impression of a chicken's claw. Where two hypotheses are admissible, the simplest should always be chosen, and it is certainly far simpler to suppose that the early Connecticut man had a foot and a claw instead of two regulation feet, than it is to suppose that one-legged men, in company with one-legged birds, once inhabited the Connecticut Valley. Nature is not guilty of such parsimony as this would imply. When she serves out legs, she does it fairly and liberally, and it is grossly improbable that even in Connecticut Nature was ever so economical as to refuse to supply men and birds with more than one leg each.

Let us now, in a spirit of love, inquire what the existence of a prehistoric man equipped with a foot and a claw implies. Obviously, it implies that in the Connecticut sandstone period man was closely allied to the birds. That the modern man differs from his sandstone progenitor is, of course, the result of evolution. If, at an inconceivably remote period, some ambitious birds had determined to evolve man, the process, if successful, would lead to the development of a being half bird and half man, living in a period midway between that of the evolving bird and that of the finally evolved and perfect man. The proof that such a being has existed has now been unearthed by the North Canton well-diggers. Thus we see that the evidence that man has descended by evolution from a bird is precisely the same in quality as that on which the Copernican system of astronomy rests; and scientific persons can only stand amazed at the wonderful flexibility of the intellect which can claim to entertain any doubt of this assertion.

Of course, no candid man can henceforth refuse to believe that man is the result of evolution. At the same time even Prof. HUXLEY will be surprised to find that a bird, and not an ape, is his and our common ancestor. The ape has been so generally accepted by evolutionists as their undoubted progenitor that they will feel as though they had sustained a severe family bereavement, when they are compelled to surrender their ideal ape and to promote some primitive fossil bird to his honored position. However, they will soon forget their sorrow, and will be delighted to find that the truth of evolution is firmly established. Doubtless, other fossils will be found which will show us more clearly the successive steps of man's evolution from the bird. Men with wings must have existed at one period, and there must have been another period when crops gave way to stomachs, and feathers were supplanted by coats. We may feel confident that the rocks will yet yield us the skeletons of fossil men with wings, and crops, and caudal feathers, and thus furnish us with a complete and minute history of the race since the day when the prehistoric owl determined to evolve a scientific person with dress-coat, spectacles, and ingenious theories, all complete.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The Democrats of the Eighteenth District of this State have nominated Wallace W. Hartwell for Congress.

The Democratic vote in Ohio did not come within 20,000 of the expectations of the Democratic State Committee.

The Republicans of the Fifteenth district of this State have nominated Thomas H. Tremper, of Kingston, for Congress.

Gen. McClellan being announced to take the stump again, a Pennsylvania paper inquires if he can do it without calling for reinforcements.

"We would say to Indians, God bless you for the triumph you have given us." Thus did an ex-rebel General conclude a speech at a meeting in Nashville, Tenn.

The Kentucky Republican State Committee has requested Col. T. O. Shackelford to announce himself as a candidate for Congress in the Seventh District of the State.

The Democrats of the Tenth District of Massachusetts have nominated S. O. Lamb, of Greenfield, for Congress, and T. S. Wilson, of Fitchburg, for Presidential elector.

Hon. Martin I. Townsend has declined a proposition from Hon. R. A. Parmenter, his rival for election to Congress, for a joint canvass of the district. Mr. Townsend regards such a plan as impracticable.

Democratic papers in Georgia are compelled to acknowledge the high character of William Markham, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Fifth District of their State, and they evidently dread the issue of the contest.

One of the Democratic candidates for Electors in Georgia, in a speech in Columbus, Saturday night, said: "Our record from Manassas to Appomattox is made, and by that we stand or fall, as to who was right in the war between the States."

The Chattanooga (Tenn.) Commercial says that a Southern Democrat being asked if he did not think Mississippi is a Republican State replied: "Yes, they have 30,000 or 40,000 majority there, but it is not available just at present." It is time it was made available.

A correspondent of the Rochester Democrat asserts that a few months ago Mr. Dorsheimer declared that there were not twenty-five honest Democrats in the County of Monroe. The Lieutenant Governor was too ill to speak in Rochester Friday night, as advertised, but was well enough to pursue his journey Saturday morning.

In a recent letter Col. R. W. Flournoy, of Mississippi, writes: "Constituted as our party is, we are powerless to defend ourselves, and I acknowledge it. But I think the Democrats ought to permit us to vote unmolested. If, however, it is decided anywhere in the State that we shall not, let us return home and appeal to the country for protection."

A Washington telegram says that an examination of the records of the Southern Claims Commission shows that a number of rebel soldiers, who guarded the prison pens at Andersonville, Salisbury, and Libby have claims pending, and that in every instance there is an abundance of manufactured evidence to show that they were always bitterly hostile to secession and loyal to the Union.

A Democratic orator in Georgia put this home question to his auditors: "Scrutinize the reports of the Controller General and see if Georgia ought not to do well on less than $1,977,235 21 per annum. This was the estimate for 1876. Cannot a lower estimate be made for 1877? No prudent business man can doubt it. If we are sincere as to retrenchment and reform, ought we not to begin at home?"

NEWBURG, Oct. 17.—Hon. James G. Graham, of this city, was to-day nominated by the Assembly by the Republicans of the First District of Orange County. Mr. Graham was a member of Assembly from Ulster County in 1849, and again in 1861.

AMUSEMENTS.

PARK THEATRE.

Two pieces new to American audiences were brought out at the Park Theatre last evening. Both are from the pen of W. S. Gilbert, and both, as may be inferred from the name of that writer, have literary merits of no common order. "Sweethearts" is a two-act comedy, and its theme is the separation of two young persons in their youth and their reunion in after years. It is a delicate and almost sentimental work, and its dialogue is written with that delightful grace and finish, which would redeem the play from any accusation of weakness which might be grounded on its slight structure. "Tom Cobb" is a three act farce, in which the author depicts the mishaps of a poor physician, who cannot marry for lack of money, and who ultimately inherits—without particular rhyme or reason—a fortune belonging to an aged miser, who is proved to have been his grandfather. Although yesterday's performance of these pieces was exceedingly smooth and entertaining, we cannot but think that nothing will be lost by a postponement of a detailed notice. Plays of this sort must gain impressiveness by repeated representations, and we therefore propose to defer consideration of the subject for a day or two. Meantime, it is only fair to mention that "Sweethearts" and "Tom Cobb" were received with so much favor that they appear likely to revive the somewhat drooping fortunes of the house. In the comedy, Mr. Cyril Searle and Miss Mary Howard bore off the honors; in "Tom Cobb," Mr. Thomas Whiffin, a comedian who has not acted in this city for some years, personated the hero, and Mr. J. C. Padgett and Miss Annie Edmonson were particularly conspicuous in their respective roles.

THE INDIAN CAMPAIGN.

GEN. WESLEY MERRITT'S EXPEDITION—A PICKED FORCE OF MOUNTED TROOPS—HORSES STOLEN BY INDIANS.

CHICAGO, Oct. 17.—A special dispatch from Camp on Amphibious Creek, Black Hills, Oct. 13, via Fort Laramie 16th, says: Gen. Merritt, with all the best horses of the Fifth Cavalry, left here this morning, taking sixty selected men from the Second and 120 from the Third Cavalry, ten days' rations, and 150 rounds of carbine and twelve of pistol ammunition per man, en route for the fork of the Cheyenne River, where a large band of Indians led by Crazy Horse and and other hostiles are reported in Winter camp. The troops are in three detachments, officered by Capts. Peale, Monahan, and Van Vliet, and by Lieuts. Hall, King, and Smead. No wagons were taken, and rations are carried by pack mules. The four hundred fresh horses which reached here day before yesterday, with recruits for the Fifth, will be used in remounting the old soldiers of this regiment, who will accompany Gen. Merritt's flying columns.

CHEYENNE, Oct. 17.—The body of Private Parker, of K Company, Second Cavalry, was brought into Hunton's Ranche yesterday. It was not mutilated, but was stripped of all clothing. In the fight, McEvaine and McFarlane, of Chimney Rock, each had a horse shot under him, and the latter received a slight flesh-wound in the right shoulder. The Indians were armed with Sharp's improved rifles, calibre forty, the number of the shells being brought in by Sergt. Parker. H. B. Kelly, who came in to-day from the cattle ground, reports twenty head of horses stolen by Indians from Searight's ranche last night, and Ashenteiter, a ranchman, who started from George's ranche yesterday for Searight's, has not arrived, and is supposed he has been killed. A large band of Indians are believed to be in the mountains, toward the head of the Sabille, and more raids are hourly looked for in this direction. A party is now organizing at the Chug to go to the Sabille in search of Ashenfelter. A trail just arrived at the telegraph camp near Cuss or reports seeing Indians between that place and Red Cañon. The line will reach Custer to-morrow night.

A PERMANENT EXHIBITION.

THE PROJECT FOR CONTINUING THE USE OF THE MAIN CENTENNIAL BUILDING WITH ITS EXHIBITS—PHILADELPHIA DELIGHTED WITH THE IDEA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—The idea of retaining the Main Exhibition Building, and setting up there a permanent exhibition, after the style of the Sydenham Palace, London, which has been talked of here for some time past, is now assuming definite shape, and it would seem that it will be an accomplished fact. An important conference was held here to-day between the Park Commissioners, Board of Finance of the Centennial Commission, and a committee of citizens. It was learned at the conference what the true intent of the projectors of the scheme is. They propose to secure as many as possible of the exhibitors now in the Centennial, and have them maintain permanent establishments in the building. Mr. Petrie stated that at least twenty per cent. of those now having exhibits had promised to allow their displays to remain. The agent of the Mexican Government promised that his Government exhibit should remain. The Norwegians are of like mind, and the Germans will do the same, provided the duty is paid on their goods. Messrs. Tiffany & Co., of New-York, the Gorham Company, and the largest jewelry and silver-ware manufacturers in the country have consented to set up exhibits here, renewing them from time to time. The great point of interest to parties residing in other States and cities, who would place exhibits there, is this: That in the event of the success of the scheme they can place goods on exhibition and sell by sample as at present, but no goods to be taken from the cases. This is the same as the rules of the present Centennial Exhibition. There is a feature of some interest at this point in the fact that to sell goods by sample here manufacturers and dealers in New-York, for instance, would be compelled to take out a State license, as is done now for their "drummers." The cost of starting this permanent exhibition will be about six hundred thousand dollars, it is thought, of which half can be raised at once and the remainder in a short time. The great trouble now is in protecting the Main Building, as the Park Commissioners desire the company to take the Machinery Hall, which is not at all adapted to the wants of a permanent show. This will be an advantageous affair for Philadelphia if it can be made successful, and the gentlemen who have the project in charge are of the most respected class of business men. What is now desired is said, from outside the city. The exhibition favor is as wild here that the project meets with greater favor than the Centennial Exhibition itself did.

THE CLOSING OF THE EXHIBITION.

Resolved, That the commission adheres to its determination to close the Exhibition the 10th day of November, and exhibitors will therefore be at liberty to commence the removal of their goods on the morning of the 11th of November, in accordance with the regulations.

Resolved, That in order to permit persons to enter the grounds and buildings to receive articles which were sold to be delivered at the close of the Exhibition, and to afford exhibitors an opportunity to dispose of unsold articles, the grounds shall be kept open and an admission fee of fifty cents be charged during the week following the close of the Exhibition and as long thereafter as the Director General may deem necessary and expedient for the interest of the exhibitors.

UNIVERSAL PEACE CONFERENCE

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17.—There was a conference of various evangelical religious denominations held at the Franklin Institute this morning, representatives from all sections of the country being present. The object of the meeting, according to the call, was to further the interests of universal peace. A letter was read from John Bright, of England, and speeches were delivered by several of the delegates. The following permanent officers were selected: President, Rev. Dr. Howard Malcolm; Vice President, Barnabas Hobbs; Secretary, Hiram Hadley, of Chicago. Another session will be held this evening.

At the afternoon session of the Peace Convention a series of resolutions was adopted approving of the efforts that have been made and are being made to devise and promote other means than war for the settlement of difficulties between nations, and providing for the appointment of a committee to prepare an address to the churches in order to awaken a deeper interest in the subject of peace. At the evening session a resolution approving of the policy inaugurated by President Grant, of intrusting the civil government of the Indians to officers nominated by the Christian missionary societies of the country, was adopted. The Committee on Business Arrangements for to-morrow reported, and the convention adjourned for the day.

ANOTHER TRACE OF TILDEN

INTERESTING TESTIMONY IN COURT.

HIS JOINT INTEREST WITH TRENOR W. PARK,

OF EMMA MINE FAME, IN A $25,000 FUND TO SECURE LEGISLATION IN THE STATE OF WHICH HE IS GOVERNOR—THE NEW-YORK CENTRAL UNDERGROUND RAILWAY COMPANY AND SOME OF ITS DOINGS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Oct. 17.—The following important case came up in the Supreme Court to-day, before Justice Joseph F. Barnard:

Oliver W. Barnes vs. George H. Brown, John S. Schultz, Joseph Seligman, John Q Hoyt, Trenor W. Park, Andrew McKinney, Charles L. Kimball, Grosvenor P. Lowry, Charles J. Canda, and Abia A. Sliever.—The plaintiff alleged that in 1872 he was President of and the owner of the majority of the shares of the New-York Central Underground Railroad Company, and also interested in a contract with one Byrne, for the construction of the road; that defendants Brown and Seligman entered into a contract with him by which they were to acquire the control of the road and Board of Directors, and he was to sell them his stock and his interest in the Byrne contract, and was to receive the sum of $275,000, and in the event of certain amendments passing the Legislature was to have 2,000 shares of fully paid up stock in the company, which was to be given him some time in January, 1873; that in January, 1873, the money was paid, and defendant Brown delivered to him two certificates of stock amounting to 2,000 shares; that afterward plaintiff found out that this stock was not fully paid up, but was issued to persons on pretended claims (as plaintiff claimed) for services and then given to plaintiff; that John Q. Hoyt received 500 shares; Trenor W. Park, 250; Charles J. Canda, 250, and others, all amounting to 2,100 shares, which was given for advances and services, and were fraudulent and worthless. Plaintiff also claimed that after he had received his 2,000 shares the defendants then further combined against him to prevent him from having control of the company, which the 2,000 shares would give him, and issued on pretended claims to themselves 2,400 shares of other stock. Plaintiff claim d damages $250,000.

The first witness examined was Trenor W. Park of Emma Mine notoriety, and his appearance on the witness stand excited much interest. He testified that he resides at Bennington, Vt., and on the 11th of January, 1873, was told he was a Director of the Central Underground Railway Company; he attended but one meeting of the board and had never presented a bill to the company. He is a lawyer. He did not previous to the meeting of the Directors that he attended authorize any one to present a bill for him. One was presented and made out in his name, but he hain't authorized any such thing. The bill was for $25,000 for services rendered. He testified, however, that he had an agent who was acting for him, and he presented the bill, but never by any special request of witness.

Judge Nelson, of counsel for Oliver W. Barnes, the plaintiff, called the above witness to show that the latter's bill as presented was a bogus one, and as there were several others of a like nature, Judge Nelson took the ground that all were fraudulent.

In addition to his testimony as presented above, Mr. Park further testified that at the meeting referred to he told the Directors he had rendered no service, but had an honest claim of $25,000 against the Underground Railway Company for money advanced, and afterward he received his pay in the stock of the company, and transferred it and received cash for it out of the funds of the New-York, Boston and Montreal Railroad Company.

At this juncture witness was asked why he had made advances to the Central Underground Railway Company. He replied quickly, causing much surprise, as follows:

"I had made advances to the Underground Railway Company of $25,000 to be used in procuring certain legislation. I was never informed of the entire amount that was raised, but the $25,000 was our share."

Then the question was put to him as to who he meant by "our" share, and he replied as follows:

"I had six-tenths of it, Mr. Seligman one-tenth, Samuel J. Tilden one-tenth, and Mr. Tilden's two brothers each a tenth. We were all interested in a line of railway already constructed from Chatham Four Corners to Rutland." (Harlem Extension.)

This fund of $25,000 was put in the hands of Mr. Duncan to pay Legislative expenses for procuring amendments to the charter to secure to the Underground Railroad an inlet into New-York in connection with the New-York, Boston and Montreal Railroad.

On his cross-examination witness testified that $10,000 was paid to Judge Hilton for going to Albany and appearing before the Committee.

The next witness called was Mr. Canda, the treasurer of the Underground Railroad Company. He testified that, although holding the office of Treasurer, he had never seen anything of the $25,000 alluded to.

This closed the testimony when Justice Barnard ordered a non-suit on the grounds that the original contract between Barnes and Brown and Seligman was void for two reasons.

First—It purported to convey the right to Barnes in a contract to build a road of which he was President, which was against public polity and void.

Second—That the agreement to transfer the control of the Board of Directors from Barnes to Brown affected the rights of the minority of the stock holders, and was against public polity and void.

In its remarks the court was severe upon the machinations of large corporations, in which a few men sell out the rights of the ignorant and innocent, giving their victims no warning whatever. The lawyers present worked harmoniously toge her to get the record right, it being conceded that the case will now go to the General Term.

DAIRYMEN'S DAY IN PHILADELPHIA.

SOME OF THE SECRETS OF BUTTER-MAKING —THE NATIONAL BUTTER AND EGGS ASSOCIATION—SELLERS OF OLEOMARGARINE FOR BUTTER TO BE PROSECUTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17—A great meeting of the National Butter and Eggs Association was held to-day at the Judges Pavilion on the Centennial grounds. The attendance was large, including about seventy-five representatives. The day gathered additional importance from the fact of being termed "Dairymen's Day," and the attendance was nearly one hundred thousand paying visitors. Mr. George E. Groome presided at the meeting. The dairy interests of America are of vast importance; it is estimated that there are 13,000 000 cows in the country, and the products from them in the shape of butter, cheese, condensed milk, &c., is valued at between five and six millions of dollars per year. Of this the central and northern portions of New-York State come in for a large percentage. The address of the President called attention to the fact that 10,000,000 pounds of butter, valued at nearly two million dollars, had been exported from the United States to Europe since the 1st of January last. The butter rate on railroads has been reduced from second to third class, making a saving of $50 per car. He called attention the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine in the large cities, where it is disposed of as pure butter, at the same prices as the genuine article. This has grown to such great proportions as to call for legislat ve aid in the butter-producing States, and demands the punishment of the parties who sell it and practice the deception. Cases were cited where large manufactures in Glasgow make up the article and supply the United Kingdom with it, one of these factories being a publicly-known "soap works." Its general use tends to ruin legitimate trade, while it brings large profits to the makers. Oleomargarine is a compound made of beef fat finely rendered and cleared of impurities by a secret process. It is packed in barrels and tierces, and exported over the whole world, oils and greases of various kinds and fine quality being made from it. Mixed with fresh milk it has the appearance of good butter, and so close is the deception that it requires an expert to detect the fraud. The manufacture of it requires costly machinery and a thorough knowledge of the business, else what will be made will turn out only fit for wheel grease. The cost of fitting out the factori s no doubt deters many from embarking in the business. It is represented that butter made from the article is sold extensively in New-York City, and there can be no doubt that it will be found on the tables of most of the third-class boarding-houses in the country, and even find its way into hostelries of greater pretensions. The Butter and Eggs Association will take vigorous measures, at the next session of the various State Legislatures, to see that hereafter, when oleomargarine butter is sold, it shall be so marked, and that the deception practiced on the public shall be done away with. A discussion was also had relative to a gold and silver medal which the association desire to award for the best display of butter and cheese, and it was decided to refer the matter to the Centennial Judges in Dairy Products, with the addition of an expert from the association.

In the afternoon the American Dairymen's Association met, Gardner B. Weeks, Esq., presiding in the absence of Hon. Horatio Seymour, the President. This meeting was held for the purpose of hearing papers read relative to scientific farming, and of advancing the interests of the farmers in relation to butter and cheese making. Prof. L. Wetherill, of Boston, read a paper on "Dairy Stock," and Hon. Harris Lewis, ex-President of the New-York State Agricultural Society, followed by one on "Butter-making." Papers will also be read at the meetings by Henry V. Wood, Esq., of London, England; Dr. E. L. Sturtevant, Boston; J. H. Reed, Philadelphia; Prof. E. W. Stewart, Hon. Thomas Ballantyne, Stratford, Canada; Prof. G. C. Caldwell, Cornell University; Prof. E. N. Horsford, Cambridge, Mass. To-morrow afternoon both associations will be entertained by the Produce Exchange, of Philadelphia.

THE WORK ON THE BRIDGE.

ONE END OF THE FIRST CRADLE CABLE FIRMLY ANCHORED—INFORMATION THAT MAY BE OF VALUE TO MASTERS OF LARGE VESSELS.

The work of stretching the first of the "cradle" cables of the East River Bridge was resumed yesterday, and the end which had been carried to the summit of the Brooklyn tower on Monday, was safely taken to the anchorage and firmly secured. The slack was then hauled in on the New-York side, leaving everything in readiness for the workmen to begin the operation of carrying the other end to the anchorage on this side of the river this morning. Mr. Farrington, the master mechanic, who has been superintending the work, said that its prosecution had necessarily been very slow, as the cable was comparatively a very large one, and only two of his men had had any previous experience in that kind of work. They had gained considerable knowledge within the last two days, however, and he thought that they would be able to place the four remaining cables in position in much less time than that occupied in placing this one. He said that he expected to carry the end of the present cable to the anchorage on this side of the river by this afternoon, and that although he might possibly accomplish it early in the day, he did not think that he would be able to release the cable from the carrier pullies by which it is suspended from the smaller cable until to-morrow. This operation, he said, would not be attended with any difficulty. The large cable would be hauled taut, and would then be so close to the carrier that there would be no trouble in liberating it from the hooks by which it is now suspended from the pullies. This would be effected by two men, who would start from opposite sides of the river in "boatswain's chairs," controlled by a messenger line from each tower. They would be gradually lowered along the carrier cable, releasing the large cable as they went along, and would meet in the middle of the space between the towers. Each would then be hauled back by means of the messenger lines, and the operation would be concluded. The master of a British ship called at the New-York office yesterday morning in order to learn the height of the cable, which is now hanging in graceful loops between the towers, above the surface of the water, as he wanted to take his vessel from the East to the Hudson River. He said that the distance from his main truck to his ship's water line was just 175 feet. Mr. Martin, the engineer in charge, at once went to the top of the New-York tower, and ascertained by observation that a 200 feet from the shore there was 210 feet clear between the cable and high water.

KINGSLEY AND KEENEY'S SUIT.

The trial of the suit of Kingsley and Keeney against the City of Brooklyn for the recovery of $178,000, alleged to be due for extra work performed on the Hempstead Reservoir, was continued yesterday in the Common Council Chamber of the Brooklyn City Hall, before the Referees, Messrs. Lott, Rodman, and Fisher. The proceedings consisted of a long argument by Mr. Van Cott, one of the counsel for the plaintiffs, in reply to the argument of Mr. John H. Parsons, on the motion of defendant's counsel to dismiss the suit on the ground that the City of Brooklyn was not bound by the contract, because it was signed only by Mr. Fowler, President of the board, and he was not authorized to sign it. Mr. Van Cott argued that Mr. Fowler was a city official, and as such, authorized to sign the contract, and that the city was bound by the action of its agents. Besides, if the other Commissioners did not sign the contract, they were present when it was signed, and hence were bound by its provisions. It was true that the contractors had not completed the contract, but they would have done so if they had not been prevented by the city. Mr. Van Cott was followed by Mr. De Witt, in behalf of the motion. At the conclusion of Mr. De Witt's remarks, the Referees announced that they had decided to adjourn the case until Tuesday next, at which time they will render their decision on the motion to dismiss the complaint.

FIRE IN A PUBLIC SCHOOL.

Between 12:30 and 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon a fire broke out on the second floor of the school building in Broome street, near Sheriff, occupied by Public School No. 31, of which Henry C. Martin is the Principal. The floor on which the fire occurred is occupied by the primary department, of which Mrs. Hannah M. Gedney is the Principal. The fire occurred in a recess between the stairway and a dressing-room used by the female teachers. Through this recess runs the main steam-pipe, which conveys the steam from the apparatus in the basement to the radiators in the different classrooms. It was very fortunate that the fire occurred during the noon recess when very few of the children were in the building. Michael Moran, when informed of the fire, endeavored to extinguish it, but without success, and an alarm was sent out to the Fire Department. The firemen were promptly at the school, and the fire was quickly extinguished. The damage to the building will not exceed $200. The fire is supposed to have originated from overheating the steam-pipe.

THE SCANTY WATER SUPPLY.

In response to a communication from the Board of Health in relation to the scanty water supply on the east side of the City, based upon a report made on that subject by Sanitary Inspector Viele, Mr. Allan Campbell, Commissioner of Public Works, has sent a letter to the board, in which he says: "The Depar ment of Public Works will not be able to furnish a full supply of water until after a rainfall of several days in the Croton basin. The recent rains only slightly and temporarily increased the flow of water into the Croton River, which, at no time since June 27, was equal to the capacity of the aqueduct and the supply needed for the City. The drafts upon the stored water in the reservoir and lakes to make up the deficiency is the natural flow have been so heavy that the supply in the City was necessarily reduced."

MORTALITY STATISTICS.

At the meeting of the Board of Health, yesterday, Dr. Nagle, the Deputy Register of Vital Statistics, presented the following report:

There were 486 deaths reported for the week ending Saturday, Oct. 14, being a decrease of 14 as compared with the preceding week, and 51 less than the number reported during the corresponding week of 1875. The actual mortality for the week ending Oct. 7 was 469, which is 13 below the average number of deaths reported for the corresponding week of the past five years, and represents an annual death-rate of 22.83, the population estimated at 1,005,746. Deaths from diphtheria decreased 4; membranous croup, 5; whooping cough, 3; typhoid fever, 6; puerperal diseases, 3; diarrheal diseases, 9; cancer, 7; phthisis pulmonalis, 1; marasmus and scrofula, 3; deaths of persons seventy years of age or more, 3, and children under five years of age, 15; and scarlatina increased 2; bronchitis, 1; diseases of the nervous system 3, and bright's disease 10 during the past, compared with the previous week. No deaths were reported from small-pox and measels during the week. During the three months ending Sept. 30, there were 8,920 deaths, a decrease of 247; 6,103 births, a decrease of 5; 1,572 marriages, a decrease of 215; 532 still births, an increase of 13, as compared with the corresponding quarter of 1875. One thousand three hundred and forty-eight deaths were reported in institutions; 2,452 in houses containing three families and less; 5,412 in houses containing four families and more (tenement-houses,) and 55 in hotels and boarding-houses.

A BANCO "STEERER" IN CUSTODY.

William Morgan, a well-dressed young man, was brought before Superintendent Walling, by Capt. Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, yesterday, charged with being a "steerer" for a "banco" game. Morgan was arrested on complaint of Charles Van Dyke, a resident of Illinois, at present a guest at Leggett's Hotel in Chatham street, who alleges that Morgan attempted to inveigle him into a "banco" game in the neighborhood of Park row, but he had been swindled before in a similar manner and seizing the young man by the collar held him un il the arrival of a policeman. Morgan's picture will in a few days adorn the Rogues' Gallery.

METHODIST MISSIONS.

A meeting of the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church was held yesterday at No. 805 Broadway, Judge Fancher presiding. The Treasurer presented a report, of which an abstract is as follows: Balance Sept. 1, Treasury in debt, $253,762 17; receipts, $47,434 76; disbursements, $243,218 14; Treasury in debt, $249,545 55; less amount in the hands of the Assistant Treasurer in Cincinnati, $28,899 82; net indebtedness, $220,645 73. The special committee on the debt of the society made a report, which was adopted, that they deem it inexpedient to make any special effort to liquidate the existing debt at present, and in the judgment of the committee the appropriations should be $500,000 and not less than $50,000 of this sh uld go to paying off the debt. Reports were read from the missions in China, India, and Turkey. John Young was nominated for Indian Agent at the Blackfeet Agency. Three missionaries in China left the service, but no appointments were made in their places. Rev. Bishop Levi Scott was elected President in place of Bishop Janes, deceased, and Rev. Daniel Willy was elected Vice President. A committee of twelve were appointed to represent the society at the meeting of the General Missionary Committee.

THE AMERICAN CENTENNIAL, 1876.

WHEELER & WILSON VICTORIOUS!

Again the WHEELER & WILSON SEWING-MACHINES triumph over the world. The Centennial Commission have officially announced the awards, and decreed for the new Wheeler & Wilson machine two Diplomas of Honor and two Medals of Merit. This is a double victory, and the highest award which it was in the power of the Centennial authorities to bestow. No other sewing-machine received such a recognition. More than thirty of the best producers of machines in this and other countries entered for competition, and at Philadelphia in 1876, as at Vienna in 1873, and at Paris in 1867, Wheeler & Wilson lead the list. After a careful, rigorous, and exhaustive examination, the judges unanimously decided that the superior excellence of these machines deserved more than one medal or diploma, and consequently they recommended two of each. The Centennial Commission unanimously ratified the action of the judges, and the public will indorse the decision of these ablest of mechanical experts. A claim of equally distinguished honor for any other sewing-machine is only an attempt to hoodwink the people. Read the following, which stamps the "New Wheeler & Wilson" as the standard sewing-machine of the world. From the official report:

AWARDS TO WHEELER & WILSON.

1. A Medal and Diploma for the "New Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine," for the following reasons:

"A Lock-stitch Sewing-machine, unsurpassed in the fine workmanship of its parts, great originality, great adaptability to different kinds of work both in Cloth and Leather, beauty of stitch, ease and rapidity of motion, and completeness of display."

2. A Medal and Diploma for the "New Wheeler & Wilson Sewing-machine" for Leather, for "Superior quality of work in Leather Stitching."—Exchange.

AMERICA AHEAD IN SPOOL COTTON.

The Judges of Awards and the Centennial Commission have dispelled another delusion which has prevailed in this country in favor of cotton thread of British manufacture, and against that of domestic production. Heretofore it has only been necessary to place an English trade-mark on a spool to insure its sale. Now, however, a different order of things is introduced, and after a careful test of all the cotton threads and yarns from the most noted factories at home and abroad, by twelve expert judges, we are told that the WILLIMANTIC COMPANY, of Hartford, Conn., produces the best cotton thread in the world!

Let Americans read the following and be glad of another triumph for American industry and enterprise: (Official copy.)

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION, PHILADELPHIA, 1876.

FUNERAL OF MR. CHARLES S. HUNT.

The last solemn offices were held yesterday over the remains of the late Mr. Charles S. Hunt at the residence of the deceased, No. 102 East Fifty-fourth street. These were simple, but touching—some readings from the Scriptures, a short prayer, and a brief homily pointing to the fragility of human life and inculcating the necessity and duty of submitting to the will of Providence. The esteem in which the deceased was held was made manifest by the attendance at these last ceremonies. Besides those who were bound to him by the ties of kinship and who had, therefore, most occasion to mourn their bereavement, there were others whose ties were remote, but whose grief for his loss was not less sincere. Those whose friendship with the deceased grew out of the intimacy in private life, and others who had been his associates in the discharge of public duties, which he had performed with so modest a mien and so zealous a sincerity, were there as well, to pay a final tribute to his memory. All the little tokens by which grief is expressed or respect for the memory of the lost one indicated were gathered in the chamber of death. At the head of the bier stood a broken column rising from a bed of flowers, typical of a life cut short in the midst of its usefulness. A beautiful cross of white flowers lay on a table close by; on another was an anchor, and through the room were distributed smaller pieces. These were the gifts of the staffs of THE TIMES and the Evening Post and of numerous friends. The remains were inclosed in a massive burial casket covered with black cloth, and with heavy silver mountings. A plate on the cover bore the name, date of death, and age of the deceased. The upper portion was left uncovered, disclosing the features of the deceased. They were singularly serene, and wore that mildness of expression which was best known to his friends during his lifetime. By 4 o'clock, the hour for the holding of the services, the suite of rooms was filled, his associates in literary labor being there in large numbers, chiefly from the staff of THE TIMES, to which his latest service was given.

The final offices were performed by Rev. Dr Erskine White, Pastor of the Twenty-third street Presbyterian Church. After reading a portion of the Scriptures he delivered a short exhortation. There were some things, he said, which came to us in our lives that seemed to run in antagonism to the direct course of nature, visitations which we could not understand, and which it was beyond the power and functions of philosophy to solve. When we saw the old going down into their graves, their lives fulfilled, rounded, and completed, we could understand it without much difficulty. Even when the young were taken from us, great as might be our regrets, there was some measure of alleviation. But when the mature life was cut short in its career of usefulness, then came a condition of things which we were unable to understand, and in which philosophy was feeble to aid us. But, as he had said, philosophy had no power in this extremity, nor was it necessary that it should. To God alone should we look for light. Nor, indeed, did God deem it necessary that we should know why this was so. He only asked that we should bow our wills to His. This was the lesson which was taught that day in the case of their dear friend upon whom God had called. It was not for them to question why this was so, nor to marvel why a useful life should be arrested in its career; their part was to bow to the will of Providence, who had ordered all things for the best. Dr. White then paid a tribute to the memory of the deceased, to whom, he said, all who knew him had conceded singular purity of life and great usefulness in the career which he had chosen. He was engaged in connection with one of the mightiest engines and instructors which the world knew, one of wonderful responsibility, and it would appear that he always kept these responsibilities in view. In the particular department of journalism with which he was connected—finance and political economy—he had not much field for the exercise of imagination, but he had for the exercise of sound judgment, and such judgment appeared always to be his guide. Those who knew most of the plans which he had projected were of opinion that had he lived he would have become famous in connection with those special branches to which he had given his attention. But regrets were now vain. His career of usefulness had been arrested, and those who suffered the bereavement most should only put their trust in that Saviour who had died for human kind, and whose aid and consolation would be felt, even though there would be no personal presence, as there was more than eighteen hundred years ago, when the redemption of mankind was accomplished. Dr. White then offered up prayer, in which he specially asked for sympathy for the bereaved wife of the deceased, and strength that she might be enabled to bear her sorrow, after which he pronounced a blessing on those present.

The mourners then viewed the remains and retired from the room. The remains will be removed this morning to Falls Village, Conn., where they will be interred.

THE "CHRISTIAN AT WORK."

STATEMENTS OF THE PUBLISHER AND OWNERS OF THE PAPER CONCERNING DR. TALMAGE'S WITHDRAWAL.

The controversy concerning Dr. Talmage and the Christian at Work has been reinforced by a letter from Mr. J. M. Hallock accusing Dr. Talmage of endeavoring to draw him (Hallock) into a plot to deprive the paper in question of its old subscribers, and to transfer them in a mass to a new journal to be started by Talmage under the title of Christian Work. To carry out the plot, Mr. Hallock charges that Talmage's publisher, B. R. Corwin, surreptitiously possessed himself of a list of 20,000 subscribers to the Christian at Work. Talmage also proposed to use the electrotype heading of the old paper with the omission of the word "at," so as to deceive careless readers into the impression that the new paper was in reality the old one under a slightly altered name. Mr. Hallock asserts that Talmage urged him repeatedly to enter into this scheme, and when he refused, tried to induce him to purchase the Christian at Work, even offering to bring in new capital and to absorb the Methodist newspaper in the project. Shortly afterward Hallock told Talmage that he (Hallock) was seriously thinking of purchasing the Christian at Work, and offered Talmage $2,900 per year to edit it. On the 9th of October Hallock had an interview with Talmage at the Astor House, in which the following agreement was submitted to the latter for his signature:

OCT. 9, 1876.

In consideration of the fact that J. M. Hallock is intending to clear the Christian at Work entirely from personal control, and to treat it as a purely business basis, I do hereby promise and agree with him in consideration furthermore of the sum of two thousand ($2,000) dollars, to be paid by him to me in equal monthly instalments, to contribute to furnish my sermons and also my services as heretofore as editor exclusively of the Christian at Work, for one year from this date.

Talmage refused to sign this, but said he would turn a definite answer the next day. At 6 o'clock the same evening, after the closing of the office, Talmage returned, took one an editorial and put in one announcing his transfer to another journal. At the same time an advertisement was taken out to make room for his "announcement," and when all was ready the presses were started, with a secret injunction from Talmage to "run all night," in order that the whole edition could be worked off and mailed to subscribers before the owners of the paper could prevent it.

The President, Secretary, and Treasurer of the association owning the Christian at Work newspaper, publish the following card:

As announced last week, Rev. Mr. Talmage has retired from all connection with this journal. The first intimation that the management had of Mr. Talmage's withdrawal was the discovery that during the night, unknown to the proprietors, he had surreptitiously introduced an editorial announcing his withdrawal, in a manner calculated to seriously injure its interests. At the same time our advertising columns were tampered with, a large advertisement of his, taken out, and in Dr. Talmage's "announcement" inserted. The fact that Mr. Talmage prearranged with the pressmen to pay all expenses incurred by his extraordinary action by going into a strike in the offices, the nature of which will be sufficiently appreciated by all and need not here be characterized. We are glad to announce in this connection that Mr. J. N. Hallock, an evangelical christian man of ample means, of ability, and with ten years' experience in the newspaper business, has become publisher. With this brief announcement, and Mr. Hallock's accompanying "statement," which we believe embodies only the simple truth, we submit the matter to the discriminating judgment of every candid reader and friend of The Christian at Work.

A GREAT CLERGYMAN DYING.

Rev. John P. Durbin, who was years ago the sailing Methodist minister in this country, is dying at his residence, No. 219 West Twenty-third street. On Saturday afternoon he was prostrated by an apoplectic stroke, and since then he has gradually grown weaker, and there is no hope of his recovery. He is over eighty years of age, and for some time past he has been gradually failing in health. He was conscious yesterday, and recognized his relatives who were at his bedside. None of his friends have been allowed to see him. Dr. Guernsey, his physician, said last night that he was dying, and did not believe he could live more than a day longer. He has two daughters, Mrs. Fletcher Harper, Jr., and Mrs. Whittaker, of Philadelphia, and one son, Alexander Durbin, who are all at his bedside, having been telegraphed for. Dr. Durbin was for many years President of Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Penn., and resigned to take the position of General Secretary of the Methodist Missionary Society, and came from Philadelphia to this City to live.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY WORK.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE WOMEN'S UNION MISSIONARY SOCIETY—REPORTS AND ADDRESSES ON THE WORK OF THE SOCIETY.

The first session of the Annual Convention of the Women's Union Missionary Society was held yesterday morning in the Church of the Pilgrims, Rev. R. S. Storrs', corner of Henry and Remsen streets, Brooklyn. The meeting was called to order at 10 o'clock by Mrs. T. C. Doremus, of New-York, President of the society, and the first half hour was spent in devotional exercises, after which the business meeting was organized by the election of Mrs. Pruyn, of Albany, a missionary to Japan, as President, and Miss Abeel and Miss Waterbury as Secretaries, with a Business Committee of seven, and a Reception Committee of thirteen members. Mrs. Smith, of Philadelphia, briefly gave an account of the work being done by the Philadelphia branch of the society. She said that the society there was doing a good work, and was represented by every denomination—Methodist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist, &c. A lady from the Albany branch reported that the aggregate amount of funds raised by that society since its organization, for missionary purposes, was about thirty-five thousand dollars, and they were all keenly alive to the importance of the work, and the interest was continually growing. The society had furnished four missionaries for foreign work. Favorable reports were also made by Mrs. Bruno, of Pittsburg, and others. Mrs. Cronin, of London, England, spoke in favor of Christian work among ladies of too higher classes. She said in the old country, and she thought, perhaps, in this also, there was a field which was not sufficiently attended to, and she thought that much good could be done in that way.

The afternoon session was devoted to the reading of reports on India, and to an address by Rev. James Scudder, on the subject of "Degradation of Women in India." The first report read was from Miss Britton, Missionary at Calcutta, India. At present they have charge of an orphanage containing 100 children, and 150 zenana and twenty-five day schools, independent of the orphanage, at which 900 to 980 pupils are being educated. There is also in Calcutta a normal school for the education of native teachers, and the Government of India have bestowed upon them a grant of $375 per month to aid in carrying on this great work. The second report was from Miss Hook, who has also been four years in Calcutta, and the last was from Miss Lathrop, who went out one year ago to Allahabad, India, to labor in behalf of the society. Rev. Dr. Budington presided at the evening session, and read the annual statement of the society. An address was delivered by Miss Smiley, on "Consecration of Talents Essential to Foreign Mission Works." An appropriate address was also delivered by Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs. The convention will continue in session through to-day and to-morrow.

A CENTENNIAL CLAM BAKE.

A great Centennial clam bake was held yesterday afternoon at Case's Hotel, on Centralavenue, under the auspices of the Rhode Island Clam Bakers' Club, which was attended by nearly all of the well-known politicians of this City, as well as a large number of sporting men. It is confidently asserted by those who took part in the proceedings that the affair was never equaled before in this vicinity. The clam eaters, of whom there were at least three hundred, began to assemble on the grounds back of the hotel soon after 2 o'clock, and at the appointed time, an hour later, as stated in the programme, the feast was begun. Shepherd F. Knapp presided at the banquet, and among those whose faces were noticeable were Mayor Wickham, ex-City Chamberlain Lane, Judge Harris, of New-Hampshire; Augustus Schell, Hosea B. Perkins, Ex-Commissioners of Public Works George M. Van Nort, Gen. George A. Sheridan, of Louisiana; Mr. Sheridan Snook, Mr. Edward Gilmore, Mr. Frank Allen, and Mr. A. J. Dam, of the Astor House; Mr. Thomas Ryan, of the Union Place Hotel; Police Commissioner Smith, Sheriff Watts, C. Comer, Mr. David Bonner, Mr. J. B. Ayres, Mr. C. W. Griswold, Mr. W. H. Turnbull, Mr. F. J. Allen, Mr. Ambrose H. Purdy, Mr. E. P. Barker, Jr. J. J. Mooney, Mr. David L. Baker, Mr. William J. Florence, the comedian, Mr. James O'Neil, of the Union Square Theatre, and many others. The "bake," which was gotten up by Mr. Babcock, was composed of hard and soft clams, Blue Point oysters, chickens, sheepshead, lobsters, corn, and Carolina potatoes, and to say that the guests did ample justice to it would be a poor way of expressing the manner in which it disappeared. A band of music discoursed national and other airs, and the repast was enlivened by witty speeches from Gen. Sheridan, Hosea B. Perkins, Augustus Schell, the chairman, George M. Van Nort, and others. There was considerable rivalry among some of those present as to who could eat the largest number of clams, and the contest proved a close one—so close, indeed, that last night the chairman was unable to state who was the victor, if any one. The "bake" commenced at 3 o'clock sharp, and it was long after nightfall before the greater number of the guests left the vicinity.

A FASHIONABLE WEDDING.

The Church of the Transfiguration (the "Little Church 'Round the Corner,") in Twenty-ninth street, was crowded by a fashionable assemblage last night, the occasion being the marriage of Miss Anna Walton Schaus, daughter of Mr. William Schaus, so well known to artists and art connoisseurs, to Capt. George Ludwig Brinckermann, of the Imperial German Army. The bridal party entered the church punctually at the appointed time, (7:30 P. M.) As they walked up the central aisle to the altar where Rev. Dr. Houghton stood to perform the marriage ceremony, the organist, Mr. Albert W. Berg, played Mendelssohn's "Wedding March." Miss Schaus was escorted to the altar-rail by Lieut. Von Issendorff, of the German Army. Capt. Brinckermann escorted a sister of the bride, who was one of the bridesmaids. Following were Lieut. Kohler, also of the German Army, with the bridesmaid. Mr. and Mrs. Schaus, and other relatives. The bride and her mates were similarly attired in white silk and lace. No attempt was made at display. The groom and his fellow-officers wore their Army uniforms of dark blue cloth, slashed with silver and heavy white braid. Their nether garments were very tight, and they wore boots that reached almost to their knees. When the bridal party arrived at the altar-rail the organist played a selection from "Lurline," and, while the ceremony was in progress, the aria, "Take this Ring," from "La Sonnambula." The somewhat somber music of the "Lohengrin Wedding March" sounded through the church as the newly-married couple and their friends left the sanctuary. A brilliant reception was given at Mr. Schaus' residence, No. 30 East Thirty-ninth street, later in the evening.

THE CHEESMAN MYSTERY.

The condition of Mrs. Cora Chesman, who was shot or shot herself in her apartments at No. 976 Sixth avenue, was unchanged yesterday. The woman is improving slowly, and absolute quiet is enjoined. The mystery surrounding the case is still unsolved, unless the statement made by the woman, and published in THE TIMES on Monday, is accepted as an explanation of the affair. There is no doubt that she made a statement similar to that published, although she now denies it, and there is scarcely a doubt that it was a true version of the affair. No trace of her reputed husband has yet been obtained. The man Cheesman, or whatever his name may be, is described as follows: About five feet ten inches in height, medium build and has auburn hair, and pretty full mustache and goatee. He dressed neatly, and had the appearance of a commercial traveler or a small tradesman. During the time he lived in Sixth avenue he was absent for a week or fortnight at intervals. He seemed to be well supplied with funds, and kept Mrs. Cheesman also well supplied with money. It is stated that the woman was a clairvoyant and was a regular attendant at the Sunday meetings of Spiritualists held at a hall in the upper part of the City, but it could not be ascertained to what extent she was connected with them.

THE NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Committee of the National Rifle Association held a special meeting yesterday. Gen. Shaler in the chair. A prize offered by Sharpe's Rifle Company—$250 in gold—was accepted, and the first competition for the trophy was ordered to take place on Saturday, Oct. 28. The conditions governing the contest will be as follows: Distances, 800, 900, and 1,000 yards; fifteen shots without signaling aside; no "coaching" to be allowed, the object being to make the match a strict test of individual shooting. The winner must lead all the other competitors at each of the three distances; entrance fee, $1, one-quarter of the entrance money to go to the highest competitor unless he wins the prize, in which case it will go to the maker of the second highest score; one-quarter of the entrance money will be added to the principal prize until finally won. The protest entered against the team of the Forty-eighth Regiment of Oswego in the military matches during the Fall prize meeting at Creedmoor was reopened, and the matter was referred to the Board of Directors for consideration at their next meeting. The reason for this action was owing to the fact that the Oswego team had made certain affidavits relieving themselves from all responsibility in the alteration of the sights of their guns.

LOCAL POLITISC.

THE CITY DEMOCRACY.

ANOTHER FAILURE TO UNITE THE FACTIONS —JOHN MORRISSEY TO BE DISCIPLINED BY THE ANTI-TAMMANY PARTY.

Yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock the Tammany and Anti-Tammany County Conference Committees met in their respective halls. Justice Duffy presided at the Tammany meeting, and John Kelly had a long private conference with Senator Francis M. Bixby, of the Anti-Tammany organization during the progress of the meeting. This fact led to reports that a combination was likely to be formed with Anti-Tammany, and excited great interest among politicians connected with each faction. After a long session a committee of Tammany Hall, composed of John J. Gorman, Henry D. Purroy, Owen Murphy Sidney P. Nichols, and Edward L. Parris was appointed to confer with all Democratic organizations in the City in reference to a coalition, and had informal conferences during the afternoon with conference committees from the German Independent Democratic organization and the Democratic Workingmen's Union.

The Anti-Tammany County Conference Committee was presided over by Ira Schafer, and Emanuel B. Hart, Henry Murray, John Purcell, James O'Brien, and Michael C. Murphy were appointed to confer with Democratic organizations.

The Tammany Congressional, Assembly, and Aldermanic Conference Committees met at Tammany Hall in the evening, and similar conference committees of Anti-Tammany at Irving Hall. Joseph Blumenthal presided at the Tammany meeting, and Thomas MacKellar at the Anti-Tammany. Francis M. Bixby, John W. Ford, James Hayes, Alexander V. Davidson, and Herman Fox were appointed as a committee to wait on the Tammany meeting and ascertain whether Tammany had any proposition to make, and they reported that Tammany would soon send a committee. The Tammany committee, composed of Richard J. Morrison, Henry D. Purroy, and John J. Gorman, arrived in a few minutes, and, after a consultation with the Anti-Tammany subcommittee, the latter reported to the main committee that Tammany had suggested that a liberal offer to Anti-Tammany would be two Congressmen, seven Assemblymen, and four Aldermen. A resolution was passed by the meeting that such an offer would be accepted, and the Anti-Tammany sub-committee again retired to consult with the Tammany sub-committee, which, under instructions from their main committee, refused to do anything more definite than suggest that the whole matter of compromise in the Congressional, Assembly, and Aldermanic Districts be left with the conventions of the respective factions in those districts. This information was conveyed to the Anti-Tammany meeting, together with the fact that the Tammany meeting had adjourned. This announcement was a surprise to the Anti-Tammany Party, and excited great apparent indignation, a hope having been entertained that a combination was not only on the point of being formed in the districts, but that one acceptable to Anti-Tammany would be made in reference to the county ticket. The following resolution was presented by Senator Bixby and adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That the whole subject embraced in the opposition made by the representatives of the New-York County Democracy be referred to the several Congressional, Assembly, and Aldermanic District conventions, and the Fifth Senatorial District Convention, with full power to take such action as they may deem necessary.

As soon as this resolution was adopted the meeting adjourned, and strong language was used by many of the Anti-Tammanyites to characterize the action of Tammany Hall, and it was quite evident that the opinion of all was that there was little, if any, hope left of any combination for the spoils being made with Tammany Hall. The practical result, it is said, will be that in districts in which Tammany is stronger than Anti-Tammany no combinations will be made.

Many of the Anti-Tammany adherents are very bitter against John Morrissey on account of his leaning toward a fusion with Tammany, and threaten to have a meeting of the Anti-Tammany Executive Committee called for the purpose of disciplining him and his friends for their action.

There is little doubt that the report published in Monday's TIMES, that Smith Ely, Jr., is to be the Tammany nominee for mayor, is correct.

TAMMANY DEMOCRATS FIGHTING.

The Tammany Hall politicians of the Twentieth Assembly District have split into two factions which are so bitterly opposed to each other that it is believed they will place two candidates for Assembly in nomination for the district. One faction is under the leadership of ex-Alderman Thomas Duffy, and the other is headed by Counsel for Van Wyck. On Monday evening, when the Assembly Convention met at the Orient in Third avenue, the proceedings were so disorderly and disgraceful that the Police were called in to clear the room, and the convention was brought to a very unceremonious termination, without either of the contending factions accomplishing anything. Ex-Judge Carduzo is the favorite candidate with Duffy's faction, but the party which is led by Van Wyck has not yet named their man. The General Committee of the District has been divided for some time past, about one-half of the members siding with Park Commissioner Donahue and the rest following the leadership of Mr. Randolph Suggenheimer. The fight between the factions is so bitter that it is generally conceded that there is no possibility of brin ing them to agree upon any one candidate for Assembly.

A meeting was held at Steinert Hall, corner of Fifty-seventh street and Third avenue, of the citizens of the Twentieth Assembly District, irrespective of party, for the purpose of placing a candidate for Assembly in nomination for the district. The chair was occupied by Mr. Mossier Danck, and resolutions were adopted pledging the meeting to support Mr. Sewell Parker for Assembly. Mr. Parker has recently separated himself from the Tammany Hall politicians of the district, and will run as an independent candidate.

SENATOR BLAINE IN NEWARK.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION—THE SENATOR REPEATS HIS COOPER INSTITUTE SPEECH —A GRAND REPUBLICAN TORCH-LIGHT PARADE.

The reception of Senator James G. Blaine, of Maine, in Newark yesterday was made the occasion of a demonstration which is seldom seen in the quiet State across the river. Distinguished Republicans came in from all parts of the State to do honor to the Maine statesman. At 2:30 Mr. Blaine began his speech in Institute Hall to an audience which thronged the building, large as it was. Fully 3,000 persons were within its walls, and nearly one thousand more clamored for admission. Capt. Allan L. Bassett, Chairman of the County Committee, introduced Mr. Blaine as the "chivalrous champion of human rights." Senator W. H. Kirk, of Newark, presided at the meeting. Mr. Blaine was received with cheers, and when the applause subsided, made the same speech he delivered at Cooper Hall, New-York, on Monday night. Many ladies were present, and joined in the general enthusiasm.

After the meeting Mr. Blaine was driven to the residence of Hon. George A. Halsey, on Broad street, where he took dinner with a number of distinguished Jersey men, among whom were ex-Gov. Marcus L. Ward, Hon. Thomas M. McCarter, ex-Mayor Peddie, nominee for Congress; Hon. Nehemiah Perry, formerly a Democrat; H. M. Congor, Consul to Prague; S. S. Kinney, John Y. Foster, Capt. Bassett, Hon. John Hill, of Boonton; Hon. Ira M. Harrison, and Alderman Stamsby. Capt. Bassett proposed Senator Blaine's health as follows: "Henry Clay and James G. Blaine; they alike enjoy the love of the people. May the latter secure what the former failed to achieve."

After dinner Mr. Blaine was driven to Association Hall, on West Park street, where he held a reception for half an hour. The hall was packed with all classes and conditions of people from Newark, Paterson, Elizabeth, Rahway, Jersey City, New-Brunswick, Trenton, and Hoboken. The platform was cleared, and Mr. Blaine began his reception, shaking hands with all who presented themselves before him, and having a kind smile or a nod for every one. Mr. Blaine must have shaken hands with 2,000 people, among whom were veterans hobbling on crutches, little boys and girls, ladies with children in their arms, and colored men. Every now and then the room was rent with deafening cheers. Mr. Blaine was called on for a speech, and said he did not feel much like making two speeches in one day. He was overwhelmed with the cordiality of his reception. He had nowhere been received, he said, with so much heartiness and enthusiasm. Besides the gentlemen mentioned above, the following eminent Republicans of the State gathered round Mr. Blaine on the platform: Hon. Amos Clarke, Hon. E. G. Browne, of Elizabeth; Rev. Mr. Hutchins, formerly missionary to India; Dr. Stanton, W. A. Cowan, of the County Committee; Hon. William M. Francis, Hon. John L. Blake of Orange, Hon. James L. Mount, and Mr. G. E. Jenkinson. At the close of the reception the Hayes and Wheeler Glee Club rendered a campaign song in a very creditable manner.

Mr. Blaine was then escorted by a private exit to ex-Mayor Peddie's house, where he held another and informal reception, and rested a few minutes. He was then placed on a stand in front of Mr. Peddie's house and reviewed the procession of clubs from all parts of the county. All the houses in the neighborhood were handsomely illuminated, and a profusion of rockets and blue lights enlivened the scene. The procession contained nount seven thousand men belonging to the various organizations, which were all uniformed and bore torches. The procession halted in Market and formed a double line, through which Mr. Blaine's carriage passed on the way to the depot. There the enthusiastic crowd made a rush for him, as soon as he left his carriage, and he was compelled to take refuge in the ticket-office. When the Washington train came along, Mr. Blaine got on board. His wife and six children were also on the train.

THE KINGS COUNTY DEMOCRATS.

NOMINATIONS MADE BY M'LAUGHLIN'S CONVENTION—THE "BOSS" DICTATING TO HIS FOLLOWERS.

The County Convention of the McLaughlin Democrats was held at noon yesterday at the rooms of the Kings County Democratic General Committee on Court street, Brooklyn. A. F. Freeman went through the farce of presiding, and Robert Furey and Hugh McLaughlin, a nephew of the "Boss," as they have done for years past, ran the convention. When the convention assembled not one of the delegates could tell whether they were to vote for an adjournment or indorse the Boss' nominees. About 12:30 o'clock, however, (the convention was called for 12 M.,) Furey came rushing into the room, and without any attempt at concealment directed Mr. Freeman to call the convention to order. Freeman, without loss of time, proceeded to carry out his instructions and to deliver a set speech, in which he congratulated the Democracy of the nation on the grand victory in Ohio. What Mr. Freeman meant by claiming a victory in Ohio may be set down as one of those things "no fellow can make out," but it is certain that he claimed such a victory, and that the assembled Democrats cheered lustily. Tunis G. Bergen was made Permanent Chairman and Robert McCoy and Henry J. Cullen, Secretaries. A squabble occurred over the calling of the roll. A delegate moved that the room be cleared of all who were not members of the convention, and the motion was carried. Ex-Alderman O'Connell, who is nothing if not a demagogue, wishing to make himself popular with the "boys," moved to reconsider, announcing that he had voted for the former motion. James Shevlin, keeper of the Penitentiary, and a relative of the "Boss," jumped to his feet and asserted that the statement made by O'Connell, to the effect that he had voted with the majority, was untrue. O'Connell, fearing to offend a member of "the ruling family," withdrew the motion, and expressed the hope that he had not offended Mr. Shevlin. After the roll had been called, Mr. J. W. Flaherty offered a resolution, which was carried, to the effect that one of the nominations ought to be given to an Eastern District man, provided he was a straight-out Democrat. It was set forth in the resolution that there were a number of ambitious men in the Eastern District, and that if a nomination was not accorded to that section of the City it would endanger the success of the ticket. Mr. Flaherty was of opinion that new converts should not be given front seats in the Democratic synagogue. To Mr. William B. Lewis, of the Twentieth Ward, was assigned the duty of nominating the Boss' man Barre for Register. He said it was his pleasure, duty, &c., and concluded by assuring the Convention that Barre "filled the bill." The delegates, with lambike docility, but without any enthusiasm, indorsed the nomination unanimously. Hon. T. V. P. Talcage then took the floor and delivered himself of an oration which will compel Hon. John Kelly to look to his laurels. In placing the name of Judge John Delmar before the convention for the office of County Clerk, he said of that gentleman that in his "judicious" capacity he had exhibited "no impartiality" during the years he occupied the position of Justice. Delmar received the votes of all the delegates and was declared the nominee of the convention for County Clerk. The names of William D. Veeder, Rodney C. Thurston, Abram H. Daily, Henry D. B risall, and George L. Fox were presented for the position of Surrogate. Mr. Flaherty said that his duty to the men he represented in the convention compelled him to nominate Mr. Birdsall, but that he was aware of the fact that the "flat had gone forth" in favor of Daily. The "Boss" had, at the last moment, declared in favor of Daily as a concession to the reform element, and permitted Veeder, his first favorite, to go into the convention and fight for the nomination. The result was a sharp contest. The first vote resulted in a tie, and then a recess for half an hour was taken. When the convention again assembled, Daily received a majority of the votes, but an effort to make the nomination unanimous proved a dead failure. The rank and file are strongly opposed to Daily, and it was confidently asserted by leading Democrats after the convention that he could not poll the full vote of the party. Bernard Midas as intimated in yesterday's TIMES secured the nomination for Charity Commissioner and Judge Andrew McKibben for Associate Justice. The following is the county ticket as above indicated:

Register—William Barre.
County Clerk—John Delmar.
Surrogate—Abram H. Daily.
Commissioner of Charities—Bernard Midas.
Justice of sessions—Andrew McKibben.

THE CITY CONVENTION.

At 4 o'clock the City Convention was called to order by Mr. Freeman. There was no intention on the part of the leaders of making nominations at that time, for the reason, as Robert Furey expressed it, that "one of the strings had broken," and it would be necessary to have further consultation. Accordingly, after the convention had been called to order, Wilson G. Bloome was made permanent Chairman and declared a motion to adjourn until 7 o'clock P. M., made by Alderman Donovan, carried. It became apparent before 7 o'clock that a further adjournment would be necessary. Robert Furey was early on the scene with a message from the "Boss," directing the delegates to vote for an adjournment. The programme as presented in THE TIMES of Monday was carried out, and the convention, on motion of one of the delegates, was adjourned until Thursday night at 7:30 o'clock. The Second Congressional Convention was then called to order by George B. Farrington, and after John Guilfoyle had been appointed Chairman, and G. W. Richards, of the Twenty-second Ward, Secretary, was also adjourned until Thursday night at 9 o'clock. It is the purpose of McLaughlin to wait until the Republicans and Independent Democrats have made their nominations before dictating the nominees of the "regular" Democrats.

JAMES O'BRIEN FOR SHERIFF.

The announcement that a grand rally and mass-meeting of the electors of the Fifteenth Assembly District favoring the election of James O'Brien for Sheriff would be held last evening at Continental Hall, corner of Eighth avenue and Thirty-fourth street, caused the gathering of a large number of persons at that place. It was further announced that, among others, Hon. S. S. Cox would make a speech on the occasion. He, however, did not put in an appearance. Mr. James Lightbody presided, and Messrs. James F. Higgins and William E. Demarest acted as Secretaries. Mr. Patrick Walsh spoke first, explaining the object of the meeting, and advocating the claims of Mr. O'Brien to the position of Sheriff. He was followed by Mr. Purcell, whose remarks were of the same tenor. Mr. O'Brien, who arrived at about 9 o'clock, then addressed the assemblage. He said, in referring to the dissensions existing in the Democratic Party in this City to-day, that personally he was in favor of a union, and that it would be of great advantage to the party if the two factions to come together. He would, nevertheless, be guided by the people, and whatever they deemed best he would do. In regard to John Kelly and John Morrissey he did not believe it was right that they should have the disposal of all the offices in the gift of the people, he thought they should decide those matters for themselves. Speaking of his own course, Mr. O'Brien said that he had always been the friend of the mechanics and laboring men, and had always protected their interests when it was in his power to do so. Mr. O'Brien also referred to his course in 1872, in regard to the election of Kernan, and said that he had contributed largely toward the expenses of that campaign. Speeches were also made by Mr. John D. McClelland and others.

THE RECEPTION TO GOV. DIX IN BROOKLYN.

Among the features of the reception to Gen. Dix at the Morgan Wigwam, corner of Classon and Putnam avenues, Brooklyn, this evening, will be the display of a transparency after Nast's great cartoon "Hold the Fort," with additions. It represents, as in the original, a fort with sentry challenging with "Arms port," Parrott guns, &c., protecting the flag, the Capitol, the public schools, the Treasury—in a word, all the sacred institutions of the country, with "the first line" of heroes in ghostly array standing to their arms at the head of their grave-stones. In one corner is a tomb inscribed, "To the Memory of Lincoln and 2,300,000 more who wore 'the bloody shirt;'" "We are coming, Father Abraham, 30,000 more," and at the other corner a bust Copperhead with the head of Tilden. On the back of the transparency is the legend "Seventh Ward Minute Men;" on one side, "Tilden's Extract of Coffee;" on the other, "Lebanon Springs Elixir." The work of art was painted by Capt. William L. D. O'Grady, a Minute Man of the Seventh Ward, and lettered by Capt. George B. Elmore, President of the Seventh Ward Republican Association.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

The Democratic Convention of the Third Assembly District of Passaic County, N. J., met at Ramsey's yesterday and nominated Garrabrant Ryerson, of Paterson, by acclamation.

Hon. Charles A. Campbell, of Woodbridge, N. J., has been renominated for the Assembly by the Democrats of the Second District of Middlesex County.

RUSSIAN HOSTILITY MORE MARKED.

OCCUPATION OF SOME OF THE TURKISH PROVINCES SAID TO BE DETERMINED ON —DIPLOMACY AT CONSTANTINOPLE BELIEVED IN ENGLAND TO BE AT AN END—THE ENGLISH PRESS ON THE ACTION THAT MAY BE TAKEN BY GREAT BRITAIN.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—The correspondent of the Standard at Belgrade telegraphs to that paper as follows: "I have just received information that Russia has issued a circular note announcing that in the interests of humanity she feels bound to march troops into Bulgaria and Armenia. I cannot vouch for the truth of this, but it is not improbable. There are 82,000 men at the camp of Bender and 64,000 around Tiflis."

A special dispatch to the Daily News from Pesth says: "Intelligence received here from Vienna states that England considers all diplomatic action at Constantinople at an end. This statement has produced a very gloomy feeling here, and war is considered unavoidable."

The Paris Bien Public's Semlin correspondent telegraphs that he has had an interview with M. Ristics, the Servian Prime Minister, in which the latter stated that a resumption of hostilities, in which Russia will participate, is certain.

The Paris correspondent of the Daily News says he learns that all Russians in Paris under the age of forty years have been ordered to return home.

A special from Berlin to the Times announces that the new Russian iron-clad Peter the Great is to leave Cronstadt immediately for the Mediterranean.

The Times to-day in an editorial article says: "The hopes we have so anxiously cherished must, we fear, at length be abandoned, and we must recognize the fact that negotiations are practically at an end, and that the two belligerents, now face to face in European Turkey, must be left to the consequences of their acts. Another twenty-four hours has brought no relief to the tension under which we were laboring, and events are evidently moving too fast on the Danube to be arrested by the slow progress of even telegraphic diplomacy."

The Daily Telegraph, in a leading article, says: "England, much as she loves and desires peace, must wage war from end to end of the world rather than permit the Russian flag to be hoisted at Constantinople. Lord Derby justly said that for British interests the Eastern question centred in Constantinople, and we hold it clear to all sensible and resolute Englishmen that at the first overt invasion of Turkish territory the British fleet, with the assent of the Sultan, would most assuredly cast anchor in the Golden Horn. Those to whom such a step might appear like help for the Turks may take comfort, for it would be simply an act vital to British security, and accomplished in the name of and for the protection of British rights. If it were not done Asia, from Scutari to Shanghai, would know and proclaim immediately that we had abdicated the sceptre of the East, and the commerce along all our Oriental lines would live at the mercy of a future Black Sea squadron."

VIENNA, Oct. 18.—It is stated that a convention has been concluded by Russia with the Roumanian railway companies, by which the latter engage to make preparations for transporting altogether 250,000 troops, at the rate of at least 25,000 daily.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The Times telegram from Belgrade says Russians state that a European war will not begin until early Spring, when, if necessary, Russia will be prepared to do something in the direction of India.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times telegraphs that Turkey seems favorable to an armistice of six weeks, provided Russia does not insist on a dismemberment of the Ottoman Empire. If Russia does, Turkey will let her do her worst.

POSITION OF OTHER GOVERNMENTS.

INDICATIONS OF THE EXISTENCE OF AN ALLIANCE BETWEEN AUSTRIA, RUSSIA, AND GERMANY—THE ALLEGED RUSSO-ITALIAN SECRET UNDERSTANDING—FRANCE TO REMAIN NEUTRAL—TURKEY, WITHOUT ENGLAND, INCAPABLE OF LONG RESISTANCE.

LONDON, Oct. 8.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Vienna to-day confirms from official sources the statement that Austria's Eastern policy will conform to that of Russia and Germany.

This means the re-establishment of the Imperial alliance, which was shaken last Spring by England's rejection of the Berlin memorandum and the dispatch of a fleet to Besiki Bay. The Norddeutsche Zeitung's reply to the article in the London Times of Oct. 16, in which the former journal says the Times ignores the existence of an alliance of the three imperial powers indicated Germany's adhesion. Unconfirmed reports, but which are rendered probable by Italy's action, of a secret treaty between Russia and Italy, would account for Austria's sudden return to Russian views. It will be remembered that the Crown Prince and Princess of Italy visited Russia early last Summer, and met with a distinguished reception. More recently the Italian Liberal journals have been claiming an extension of territory in the direction of Tyrol in case Austria acquired any Turkish provinces. The Italian Government has disclaimed responsibility for this discussion, but it nevertheless has considerable effect on public feeling at Vienna. A programme agreed upon and executed by the three Emperors would set aside these pretentions and equally guarantee Austria against the danger on the side of Germany which independent action on her part would involve. Thus the Imperial alliance leaves only England and France to be accounted with, supposing the truth of the reported Russo-Italian understanding. There is no recent evidence to show what would be the attitude of France, but, up to the failure of the Berlin memorandum, she gave ready adhesion to the Imperial programme, and is not likely now to offer it any spontaneous opposition. If, therefore, the Russian preparations for a movement against Turkey are, as Reuter's Vienna dispatches indicate, in accordance with the views of the three Emperors acting in concert, there can be little doubt they have determined to undertake the pacification of the Turkish Provinces, probably on the basis of the Berlin memorandum, extending its provisions to Bulgaria. The question of the peace of Europe will in that case depend upon England, Turkish resistance without her aid being manifestly impossible for any considerable time. The view taken here is gloomy; but as the Imperial plans have not yet been made known, and the reports of the reconstitution of the Northern triumvirate are not fully credited, there has been no public expression indicating the course likely to be pursued. The recent agitation against the Government has entirely ceased, and a strong feeling against Russia has sprung up since her proposal to Austria for joint occupation; but if occupation is enforced under the sanction of the other powers without threatening Constantinople, public sentiment would not support the Government in opposing it with force, as the co-operation of Austria and Germany would be regarded as a guarantee against Russian pretensions. In this view of the case—that is, accepting the Vienna dispatches as true—the panic here is unwarranted, for unless Turkey plays a desperate game Russian intervention will lead to peace, with guarantees for the protection of the Porte's Christian subjects in Europe. It is not improbable that the Porte, when confronted with the prospect of intervention by united Europe, will concede the Russian demands without fighting.

PARIS, Oct. 18.—All the evening papers declare that if the peace of Europe is disturbed France will rigorously observe a policy of abstention.

HALIFAX, Oct. 18.—The British fleet here has been ordered to remain until further orders, instead of proceeding to the West Indies for the Winter, as usual.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—Late on Tuesday evening summons were issued for a Cabinet Council to be held to-day, (Thursday,) and several Ministers arrived in town last night. It is rumored that the Government contemplates calling an Autumn session of Parliament in consequence of the grave aspect of the Eastern question. It is also said that the Government have applied to Lloyds to have ships ready to transport troops. The Advertiser says it is reported that Lord Napier of Magdala has been ordered to hold himself in readiness to take command of troops which may be sent to Egypt.

The Standard prints an imposing table descriptive of the iron vessels of the Russian Navy. It shows that they are twenty-eight in number, and carry from two to twenty-six guns each.

The Standard's dispatch from Belgrade says there is some talk of a proposal for an armistice until Dec. 31. It matters little what proposal is made. It is the opinion of well-informed people that Russia is bent on carrying on war until she gains a clear road to Constantinople. Only the armed coalition of Europe will make her swerve. It is tedious to repeat this every day; but it cannot be too strongly impressed on Europe that preparations are making in Servia utterly inconsistent with any pacific professions which the St. Petersburg Cabinet may put forth. If Russia meant peace, the preparations would be insanity.

The Times, in a leader, repeats the rumors noted in the first cable dispatch to the Associated Press of to-day's date, and adds: "It is stated that orders have been given by the War Office to the Commander in Chief to hold three army corps in readiness for immediate dispatch to the Mediterranean, also that plans for the defense of Constantinople prepared by the Royal Engineers have been forwarded to the Admiral commanding the British fleet in Besika Bay."

The Times says: "There is nothing but what is ordinary and necessary in calling the Cabinet together at such an emergency. It will be only common sense to await the result of its deliberations before giving credence to less authenticstatements. No such measures as those reported can be taken without the consideration of the Cabinet; and the first council since events took their present anxious turn will be be held to-day. For purposes of action at sea we are as near the seat of probable disturbances as any other power. Much more must happen before English interests are menaced so as to call for our immediate interposition. It is not to be denied that great dangers might arise. We must be prepared to defend all points threatened, but the mere danger of Turkey will not precipitate such measures. Neither Parliament nor the country would ever hear of going to war in behalf of Turkey. She had her opportunities, and has thrown them away. It would be criminal folly to expend the smallest amount of English blood or treasure in her support."

The Paris correspondent of the Times reports that the symptoms of accord between Russia and Germany become more evident, and unfortunate Austria, placed between her formidable neighbors, must ultimately obey them. The only thing which keeps Russia back is that Austria's neutrality is not enough for her. She wants Austria's cooperation. France and England are the only powers that sincerely desire peace, and the Russian programme which will now be brought forward is one which Turkey will rather fall by the sword than accept. England and France should have an understanding and force their pacific views on Turkey.

EFFECT ON THE STOCK MARKET.

HEAVY DECLINE IN RUSSIAN, HUNGARIAN, AND AUSTRIAN SECURITIES THROUGHOUT EUROPE—ALMOST A PANIC IN LONDON.

LONDON, Oct. 18.—This afternoon's Globe in its financial article says a complete panic prevails on the Stock Exchange. The news of Russia's apparent determination to make open war upon Turkey has confirmed the fears which for several days have depressed the market, and culminated to-day in an indiscriminate pressure of sales of all descriptions of stock, not only by speculators stimulating panic fears, but by bona fide holders of securities, especially foreigns. There was at the opening a further serious decline in quotations, and it was difficult to obtain prices at which bargains could be effected, the fluctuations being so great and frequent. The changes include a reduction of 5 in Hungarian, 1¼ in Turkish, 2 in Egyptian, 3 in Italian, and less, but a considerable, decline in all stocks.

At 12:30 P. M. the Stock Exchange was greatly excited, and it was almost impossible to give accurate quotations. Russian securities have declined 7, making a fall of nearly 20 within a week. War between Russia and Turkey is considered as already begun, and it is generally believed that other powers will become involved. A commercial and financial crisis in Russia, and a consequent heavy fall in Russian exchange, adds to the confusion.

The funded loan, which was the only American stock much dealt in, felt the influence of the prevailing depression, and at 1 P. M. was quoted at 105¾ to 106.

LONDON, Oct. 18—Evening.—During the afternoon stocks rallied slightly, but at the official close (3 o'clock) were again flat. The markets continued to decline to the last moment, and the final quotations at 5 o'clock are about the lowest of the day.

PARIS, Oct. 18—Evening.—The Bourse has been much agitated throughout, and all stocks closed at the lowest.

VIENNA, Oct. 18—Evening.—An important fall in Government stocks and a sharp rise in exchange and the bullion market have characterized to-day's Bourse.

BERLIN, Oct. 18—Evening.—On the Bourse to-day Russian securities fell 6, Hungarian 3, and Austrian about 2½. All other international stocks likewise suffered considerably.

DEMANDS OF THE GREAT POWERS.

TERMS PROPOSED TO TURKEY—BULGARIA'S POSITION AND THE SCLAVONIC PEOPLE —MONEY AND TROOPS NEEDED BY THE SULTAN—THE INHABITANTS OF CONSTANTINOPLE CONSTANTLY MISINFORMED—HOW THE CHRISTIANS IN BIRIJIK WERE COMPELLED TO APOLOGIZE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BUYUKDERE, Thursday, Sept. 28, 1876.

A Turkish officer said to a friend of mine a few days ago: "You English people are beyond all understanding. You have been our friends now for twenty years. Turkey has always been the same that it is to-day. We have been doing this year just as we have done any time in the last twenty, and yet, apparently because there have been a few more shepherds and old women killed than in ordinary seasons, you turn suddenly against us." The fickleness of England seemed something incomprehensible to him. Turkey remains constant to herself. Why should England change? We must confess with shame that from the Mussulman point of view the Turkish officer was only too just in his reasonings. Still we can only rejoice in the inconsistency that underlies the English awakening. Without stopping to reproach Great Britain for remaining so long blind to the enormities always attendant on Ottoman rule, the task now is to turn her lately-acquired vision to account in behalf of those who have always suffered unseen and unpitied. Knowledge brings the responsibility of action and action is unfortunately beset with difficulties. Never was the Eastern question more thorny than now, when the public opinion of Europe is at last on the right track. Ignorance and prejudice and selfishness have so long united to warp and twist this question that its solution is no longer easy, merely because the world has come round to a right way of thinking. It is the inflexible rule of life that makes reform next to impossible for the veteran sinner, even though he at last recognize its necessity.

AUTONOMY FOR TURKISH PROVINCES.

A couple of days or so ago England presented the Sublime Porte conditions for regulating a peace. Day before yesterday the other powers together presented their demands toward the same end. It is believed that all agree substantially in asking the Government of the Sultan to conclude a peace upon the basis of autonomy for Bosnia, the Herzegovina, and Bulgaria, for Servia the status quo before the war. It is very doubtful whether Turkey will accept terms so hard as these. It is only a few days since she proposed to dictate to Servia the conditions of peace, demanding, among other things, that the former tribute of Servia be henceforth largely increased by the payment of a war indemnity; that Prince Milan come to Constantinople to receive investiture at the hands of the Sultan. These conditions were altogether to the Turkish liking. Those which are now demanded, in addition to their intrinsic distastefulness, incur an extreme odium from comparison with what the Porte felt itself in a position to exact. After having poured forth blood and treasure when both were more than ordinarily precious, and having had the sacrifice rewarded by a fair measure of success, it would indeed be humiliating to be obliged not only to grant every request of the rebellious Servians, but actually to yield that which neither they nor even the Bulgarians had yet presumed to ask! One would need to be infinitely less than human to swallow so bitter a pill without resistance, and Turkey, though degraded and utterly reprobate, is still human. But this is only the beginning of difficulties. Suppose Turkey to accede to the demand of the great powers—what then? In the first place it would be necessary to define what Bulgaria really is. Geographers seem to agree in representing Bulgaria as the tract of country stretching from the north slope of the Balkans to the Danube, and from the eastern frontier of Servia to the Black Sea. In Turkey we cannot look upon such a division as other than absurd. This region is known here as the Vilayet of the Danube—a region quite one side from the scene of the Bulgarian outrages which have been lately engaging the world. Bulgaria here is the country of the Bulgarians, and lies as much south as north of the Balkans. It comprehends nearly all of the country described on the maps as Roumelia. Portions of the sea-coast are mainly inhabited by Greeks, a few villages here and there may be rather Mohammedan than Christian, but taken as a whole the majority of the population is overwhelmingly Bulgarian. The question is certain to arise: Is the Bulgaria for which autonomy is demanded that of the geographers or that of the long-suffering race which good men are seeking to relieve?

Again, there is another people, not Sclavonic whose pride and interest will be deeply concerned in the grant of autonomy to Bulgaria. These are the provinces of Thessaly and Epirus, exclusively Greek, with almost no Mussulman population at all beyond the succession of officials sent out from Constantinople. They say, and the Greek newspapers of Pera and Athens say for them: Why should autonomy be granted to Bulgaria and denied to Thessaly and Epirus, which have also suffered and struggled, which are also held under oppression with no shadow of right? Why should not Crete throw off the Moslem yoke? The Greeks are asking such questions with great fervor and earnestness, and the answer is not easy. The steady-going, conservative Neologos even, the best known of the Greek journals of Constantinople, has spoken in this sense with a freedom and boldness wonderful when we consider that within the last three months more than half the newspapers of the city have been suppressed for offenses no greater. Grant Bulgaria autonomy and we may expect an insurrection of the Greek populations of the Empire. Who shall say that their cause is less worthy than that of the Sclavs?

THE SUSPENSION OF HOSTILITIES.

If, on the other hand, the Porte refuses to listen to these overtures of peace, the possible results are such as to baffle conjecture. I believe the Government of His Imperial Majesty the Sultan to be willing to make considerable sacrifices for the sake of bringing this war to an end. Not only is money wanting, but there are no more troops to send forward. Winter is drawing near, and the army is unprovided with either the clothes or the tents necessary toward braving the inclement season. Add that it is impossible to furnish these wants, and that the Serbians are far from being subdued. I am told, moreover, that the Sultan is personally strongly desirous of peace. In the announcement of his policy, promulgated 10th September, His Majesty expresses this feeling, and requests his Ministers to take measures to put an end to the deplorable state of affairs then existing. And yet, how are these desires to be gratified? The constant succession of lying telegrams with which Constantinople has been supplied during the last two months, together with some undoubted successes, have assured the Mohammedan population of unqualified victory over the Serbians. They were to dictate the terms of peace, after having humbled the pretensions of Belgrade; they had begun even to assume a tone of greater arrogance toward Christians here in Constantinople, under the shadow of the embassies and in the face of the Stationnaires anchored in the Bosphorus. In the provinces they went further yet: not only was insurrection to be stamped out, but dissent was to be utterly crushed. The good old days when Islamism was upheld at the point of the sword were to be brought back. The suspension of hostilities was a dreadful blow to these untamed barbarians. Their angry excitement during the last ten days has been a serious menace to the men in power. What will be the result if they have to endure such a humiliation as that implied in the peace now demanded no one can say. It would not be unreasonable to expect revolution—not a mere triumph of enthusiasm over indifference, such as for a few days in early Summer almost cheated Europe into believing that Turkey had entered into the contests of civilization; not a mere substitution by the Cabinet of one figure-head for another. Revolution would this time stalk forth in garments dyed in blood, and would write her dread will in characters of fire. Where choice is so fearfully embarrassing we can only await the decision with anxiety, sure that in any event it will bring pain, and doubtful of the possibility of good.

Granting, however, that the demands of the great powers are acceded to; granted that the utmost asked is accorded to Servia, Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria, and that all has been accomplished without a revolution in Stamboul; grant, too, that Thessaly and Epirus and Crete have been surrendered to Greece—the Eastern question will still remain, and still importunately cry for solution. Mussulman fanaticism is raised, and will not be laid without much suffering to the Christian populations under its power. Facts are not wanting in support of this statement. Some weeks ago, at Birijik, in the vilayet of Aleppo, Christians were robbed and beaten by redif soldiers; at Marath there was an incipient rising of Turks against the Christians. In both these places the prompt action of the Government checked the disorders. At Aintab, however, and at other cities and villages of Asia Minor, similar deeds of violence have been perpetrated, and in most cases have remained unredressed. Shocking outrages have been committed in some villages on the Russian frontier. As the consequences in these cases may be awkward for the Government, it shows a commendable disposition to bring the offenders to justice. The Armenians living south of the Black Sea have been greatly distressed by the exactions and violence of the Kurds. In their case the Porte shows a disposition to let things take their course, rather than run the risk of a Kurdish war on their account.

CHARACTERISTIC TURKISH MANAGEMENT.

With regard to Birijik I may note one of the curiosities of Turkish management. The Christians of this place carried the complaint of their suffering to the Porte and demanded protection against their persecutors. The Porte named a committee of inquiry, the results of whose action appeared a few days ago in La Turquie. Two telegrams addressed to the Grand Vizier are there published consecutively. The first recounts the grievances of the inhabitants of Birijik and prays for relief. Their property had been pillaged and wantonly destroyed. Their wives and children had been beaten and otherwise ill treated. They had been obliged to seek refuge in the mountains during several days. The second telegram is in its way so characteristic of Turkish management that I cannot forbear giving you a partial translation. It is addressed by the Armenian communities, Catholic and Protestant, of Birijik to the Grand Vizier, and runs as follows:

"By our telegram of 27th July last we made a complaint against the Mussulman inhabitants of Birijik, as well as the regiments of Orfa. We now declare that those complaints are entirely without foundation, since the Mussulman inhabitants have not ceased to live with us in the most perfect harmony, as is becoming in children of the same country. Under the auspices of our august Sovereign our union is complete, and our tranquility leaves nothing to be desired. The Mussulmans and the Christians have no sentiment of animosity toward one another. Several Reuls, who had deceived among the Armenians, wished to recover their rights at Orfa, without having recourse to the authorities. A few children, not yet of an age to discriminate between right and wrong, were drawn in their conduct. * * * Our security is now more perfect than ever. We pray your Highness kindly to overlook the strong and unmerited terms which we employed in our telegram against our Mussulman compatriots, and we express our deep gratitude for the good will toward us of which our Governor has given proof."

La Turquie assures us that this second telegram bore the same signatures as the first. Such a fact is not surprising in a country where torture is a frequent instrument toward attaining the ends of the Government. The Bulgarians, in the extremity of their anguish, have signed no end of similar testimonials of happiness. A paper is even now in circulation in Bulgaria demanding the signature of the most respectable people to a statement that they regret the insurrection which brought down the richly-earned justice of the Porte upon them; that they are truly thankful to the Government of his Imperial Majesty for having repressed disorder, and that as for the atrocities that foreign agents have been proclaiming to the world, their existence was quite unknown to the people of Bulgaria! The Turks of the governing classes are often men of a high degree of shrewdness. I make this statement in justice to them, though it is quite irreconcilable with the mass of reports of investigations and testimonials, tissues of lies and absurdities, that they have recently tried to palm off upon a credulous world.

I forget, there is one man who believes in all these reports and testimonials, and whose adherence may well discredit my humble judgment of them. That man is Sir Henry Elliot, her Britannic Majesty's Ambassador. He first refused to believe in the Turkish excesses in Bulgaria; then, when disbelief was no longer possible, refused to report them to his Government, and now hates the Bulgarians for having put him in the wrong, and is more Turkophile than ever. To such a man England intrusts the utterance of her demands relative to peace. Does she mean to invite their non-acceptance by the Porte?

THE EXPEDIENTS OF THE PORTE.

The answer of the Porte to the propositions of the great powers is to-day announced. Turkey pronounces for peace with Servia and Montenegro, as proposed by the powers. With regard to Bosnia, the Herzegovina, and Bulgaria, Turkey declines to grant those provinces a special administrative autonomy as suggested, but the Porte, on its part, puts forward a counter proposal to the following effect: Bosnia, the Herzegovina, and Bulgaria to be governed henceforward according to a new system in the nature of a constitution, which shall be applied to all the vilayets (provinces) of the Ottoman Empire. According to this system the central administrative authority for the Turkish Empire will be confided to a mixed National Council, sitting at Constantinople, and composed of 120 members, of whom thirty will be Christians. These 120 members will be in part nominated by the Turkish Government and in part elected in the provinces. There will, moreover, be established in each vilayet a mixed Provincial Council to superintend the local administration and see to the faithful execution of the laws and measures of the mixed National Council in Constantinople.

Incorrigible Turkey! Any expedient possible to put off the inevitable day when the Christian population shall have justice, security, equality, and liberty! Of course the counter proposition means nothing, except that nothing shall be changed, and Turkey means to go on as formerly. Were there ninety Christian members instead of thirty in the mixed Council they would have no more voice than the same men have now. What next?

EFFECT ON COMMERCIAL INTERESTS.

HEAVY TRADING IN BREADSTUFFS—SHARP RISE IN FLOUR AND WHEAT—EFFECT OF THE WAR MOVEMENT ON THE PROVISION TRADE—BUOYANCY IN OCEAN GRAIN FREIGHTS.

Commercial interests generally were influenced more or less directly, and to a more or less important extent, by the warlike reports and rumors from Europe. The rise in gold was also of weight in shaping the course of trade and the tendency of values of produce and merchandise. At the Produce Exchange the bearing of these reports, rumors, and influences was very clearly defined, especially in the breadstuff and provision lines. Holders of supplies of any great magnitude were all much more confident in their views, and insisted on advances as to price, which served to limit operations, though the disposition to purchase for legitimate trade purposes, and also on speculative account, was very decided. Added to the impediments to active movements was the rise in ocean grain freights and the unwillingness of shipowners to accept less than full asking rates, in view of the limited supply of accommodation in this line now available for early use here and at the outports, particularly of room and tonnage suited to the wants of the breadstuff trade.

Dealings in flour and wheat reached unusually large proportions, and represented mainly the purchases for export account, though a good part went also to the credit of home buyers, chiefly for consumption, though to a considerable extent on speculation. Wheat values were advanced sharply, in most instances three to five cents a bushel, on an aggregated reported business of over five hundred and forty thousand bushels very well distributed all through the grades of merchantable stock of both Spring and Winter product, available in this market. Of the Spring wheat grades, the sales consisted largely of old crop, in store, the remarkably light offerings of the new crop for the season checking transactions in the latter class. Old crop No. 2 Chicago Spring, in store, formed nearly a third of the whole amount reported sold and went at from $1 18@$1 22, mostly at $1 20@$1 22; one prominent house reporting sales of fully 100,000 bushels on the basis of the latter quotations. New No. 3 Milwaukee Spring, choice, afloat, sold up to $1 26. Of the sales of Winter wheat, the most important were of new crop amber Western at $1 23@$1 35; very choice amber Michigan selling up to $1 35, as against $1 30 the previous day; new red Western at $1 20½@$1 28, as to quality; new white Western at $1 31@$1 35, and very choice white Michigan, crop of 1874, as high as $1 50—the highest figures reached by even this class of stock in a long time.

New crop Spring wheat, particularly of the grade of No. 2 Chicago, is very seriously retarded in its progress toward the seaboard markets by the speculative manipulations of Chicago operators and their connections. Flour sales also went up to a very large gross amount, the reported transactions making the aggregate of all grades about forty-six thousand barrels, of which the grades suited to the export trade were represented in the reports to the extent of fully one-half the specified total, mainly for actual shipment, though, doubtless, in part for speculative account. The bulk of the trade in shipping stock was in brands for the European markets, though from the West India and Provincial interests the inquiry for supplies was fairly active. Prices of shipping and Spring wheat brands generally were advanced fifteen to twenty-five cents per barrel, and Winter wheat brands were also quoted somewhat stronger. Of the sales of Spring Wheat Extras, Minnesota brands formed an important element, Minnesota straight extras having been reported as changing hands to the extent of fully 9,000 barrels, and Minnesota patent extras (or "new process," as the trade phrase it,) to the amount of 2,100 barrels. City millers contributed nearly 5,000 barrels to the total sales, partly for the English markets the brands suited to this trade ruling at from $5 25@$5 50, and closing at $5 40@$5 60, as representing pretty accurately the views of buyers and sellers of good stock of this class.

Corn ruled higher, fully one cent a bushel on the actual dealings, which were moderate in amount and in good part, too, for export. Oats were also stronger in price, and more sought after, prime old crop meeting with some inquiry from the export interest. Provisions—more especially lard, bacon, pork, and beef—felt the impulse of the "war movement," and ruled stronger in price, but less actively as to sales and values than the breadstuff interests. Cotton was fairly active but variable, closing firm, and general merchandise was quoted firmer but not remarkably brisk. Currency values of imported goods were influenced by the rise in gold, but the fluctuations in this item were so violent that the effect in commercial circles was mainly to arrest trading beyond actual pressing wants.

Ocean grain freights were all stronger as to rates, and accommodation on berth and charter was actively sought after.

AT THE GOLD AND STOCK EXCHANGES

The warlike news from Europe yesterday created quite an excitement at the Gold Exchange. The moment the Gold Room opened there was a rush to the ring, and gold, which closed the evening before at 109⅞, opened at 110⅛. The short interest was well represented, the operators being anxious to cover their shorts at the lowest figure possible. The demand became so brisk that in a short time the price of gold ran up to 113¼. This was the highest point reached, and subsequently a radual decline took place, the price closing at 111¼. The decline of two per cent. was chiefly caused by the fact that the bears having covered their shorts the demand fell off, and notwithstanding the efforts of the bull clique to keep up the price it fell to 111, finally reacting to 111¼.

There was considerable excitement, too, in the Stock Exchange, chiefly in the coal stocks, which advanced sharply, owing to the fact that the bears invested largely to cover their shorts, influenced no doubt by the warlike news from Europe.

The sudden changes on the Stock Exchange and in the Gold Room caused a slight flurry in the money market during the afternoon. From two to five and a half per cent., which were the ruling rates during the morning, there was an advance to six and seven per cent., the rise being occasioned chiefly by the shifting of loans and the delay on the part of brokers in making up their accounts at bank. After the demand from this source was supplied the rates dropped to three and four per cent., which were the closing figures. Prime mercantile paper was quoted at five and six per cent. There was an active demand for cash gold early in the day, and loans were made as high as one-thirty-second and one-sixteenth per cent. per diem for use, but late in the day business was done flat. Government bonds were one-quarter and one-half per cent. higher, in sympathy with the further advance in gold, which more than counterbalanced the effect of the decline in bonds at London. Business was very restricted, however, and the market exhibited very little animation. The sharp advance in both gold and stocks occasioned a few small failures. That of Messrs. Hone, Nicholas & Co., stock-brokers, of No. 17 William street, was announced at the Stock Exchange during the day. A reporter of THE TIMES called at their office yesterday afternoon and had an interview with Mr. Hone. That gentleman said: "It is true we have suspended payment. We have no statement to make to the public. Our liabilities are not large, and we do not expect any serious difficulties." The total liabilities are estimated at between thirty and forty thousand dollars. The cause of the failure was owing to a sudden rise in New-Jersey Central, from 35⅝ to 38; Delaware, Lackawanna and Western, from 73½ to 80⅝, which subsequently dropped to 78; Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, from 69½ to 82½, and which subsequently fell to 75. The firm was short when the jump occurred and they intimated to the President of the Stock Exchange that they were unable to cover their contracts. J. P. McEwen, a member of the Gold and Stock Exchanges, announced his suspension at noon yesterday. Mr. McEwen was short of gold and stocks, and was unable to pay up the differences in his contracts. H. R. Deter, a member of the Gold Room, also announced his suspension.

THE WAR NEWS IN CHICAGO.

SHARP ADVANCE IN WHEAT AND OTHER PRODUCE—GREAT EXCITEMENT—SEVERAL OPERATORS CAUGHT "SHORT"—FAILURE OF ONE FIRM.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 18.—At no time since the Franco-Prussian war, in all probability, has there been such an intensity of excitement as was manifested to-day in the wheat dealings on 'Change in this city. It was a wild day—a regular field-day, in fact. At the opening hour there were between four and five hundred operators gathered together, and before noon fully fifteen hundred members of the Board of Trade were wildly engaged in the exciting scenes consequent upon a sharp rise in the prices of produce. The news from Europe, as published in the morning papers, had given a sudden impetus to dealings, and wheat, which yesterday afternoon closed at $1 11⅜ for "seller November," opened this morning at $1 13. Deals and contracts were made to an almost unheard of extent, and as the excitement was accompanied by more or less confusion, prices frequently varied at the same time in different parts of the surging crowd. The excitement exhibited was simply intense, and from the opening to the close the market was watched with the closest interest. Prices were subject to frequent fluctuations. Seller November, the favorite option, sold from $1 13 to $1 17, and seller December at $1 15¾ to $1 18. The trading was almost entirely speculative. Some "cash" grain was purchased for shipment, or on direct orders, but speculators practically monopolized the trade, and the options received far more attention than cash operations. When the outside prices were reached, which was in an incredibly short time, and the excitement had somewhat subsided, there was a rather strong pressure to sell brought to bear on the market, and a sharp reaction followed. The advance in gold, and the decline in consols assisted in creating the excitement and in forcing the improvement. Wheat advanced on the whole five cents, the range for the day being four cents. The option dealings, mainly for November delivery, with a few October and December deals, amounted to between twenty and twenty-five million bushels of wheat.

The general market closed in an unhealthy condition, as a rule, with operators unwilling to place much confidence in the stability of prices. European events now control the movement. So sudden was the rise that a number of dealers were caught short, which caused much uneasiness. Among these was the firm of Rumsey & Inglis, who were forced to suspend. Fears of serious breaks were anticipated, but none others were reported up to a late hour.

The effect of the news upon the produce market generally, was very marked. Mess Pork advanced 30 to 35 cents per barrel for future delivery; Lard, 15 cents per 100 pounds; Cut-meats, ⅛ to ¼ of a cent per pound; Oats 1 to 1¼ cents per bushel; Rye, 1 cent; Corn, 1⅜ to 1⅝ cents, and Flour 12½ cents per barrel. Barley was depressed 3 and 4 cents.

It is the opinion of dealers here that the general effect will be to strengthen the market, the farmers gaining greater confidence in the value of cereals and produce generally. This was shown to-day in the falling off in orders from the country upon the city banks for currency, the news having reached the outlying districts and producers becoming anxious to hold their grain, in anticipation of a further advance.

THE MASSACHUSETTS REPUBLICANS

THE CONTEST IN THE SEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT—JUDGE HOAR IN THE FIELD IN PERSON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 18.—Judge Hoar's supporters in the Seventh District in the fight against Butler, have finally decided to wage open war, and the Judge has been induced to take the stump, begining at Lawrence next week. An address has been issued to the Republican voters in the Seventh District in the interest of Judge Hoar, which outs into the record of Butler savagely, and argues in defense of the right to bolt. It declares that the Republicans of Massachusetts, at more than one State convention, have declared the emancipation of the voter; that no obligation lies upon him to vote for a candidate, by whatever regularity of process brought forward, whose public character is not good, or whose opinions and acts have been adverse to those of the party on important questions. It claims that the convention nominating Butler was not a true Republican Convention in that it passed no resolution and took no ground on either of the two issues of finance or civil service reform, and nominated a man known throughout the Union by his acts and written and spoken words, for eight or ten years, to be the constant, most outspoken, most violent, and most persistent opponent of the principles now declared by the National platform on both those points. In denouncing Butler the address says: "His course has been well described by a leading public man of this State in three words—'swagger, fraud, failure.' He has done more than any man in this State and generation to lower the tone of its politics, create a despotism and servitude out of the public offices, to mislead and debauch the impressible by an example of bad principles and bad practices, carrying with them a kind of false show and glitter of celebrity and popular attention." In concluding, the following practical appeal is made to the voters: "The support of Judge Hoar cannot aid in the election of Mr. Tarbox. The total vote cast in the district has never exceeded 19,000, but in this Presidential year will undoubtedly reach, if not exceed that number. The Democratic candidate has never received more than six thousand votes, except in the election of 1874, when Mr. Tarbox received 3,000 Republican votes. In estimating the vote of this year, if we concede Mr. Tarbox the large number of 6,000 votes there will remain 13,000 to be divided between Judge Hoar and Gen. Butler; therefore, if the Republican vote should be equally divided, each Republican candidate would have a majority over Mr. Tarbox, and whether Judge Hoar or Gen. Butler shall have the plurality is in your hands."

THE COLOR LINE IN THE MASONIC ORDER.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 18.—In the Masonic Grand Lodge to-day a very earnest discussion was had on a point of order relative to recognition of the colored Masonic Grand Lodge of Ohio. The question of their recognition was presented last year and laid over until this session. To-day the Committee on Jurisprudence reported the matter back with resolutions recommending recognition of the colored Grand Lodge. A point of order was then made that under the constitution of the Grand Lodge the resolutions were not in order except as amendments to the Grand Lodge itself. The Grand Master overruled the point of order, and held that the resolutions were in order. An appeal was then taken from this decision, and it was sustained by the Grand Lodge, there being about 75 majority in favor of the appeal.

TILDEN'S SHARP TRICKS.

MORE ABOUT HIS MICHIGAN PENINSULA SHINPLASTERS.

THE SHAM REFORMER'S LACK OF CONSCIENCE WELL UNDERSTOOD IN THE MICHIGAN MINING REGIONS—HIS EMPLOYES WORKING FOR SMALL WAGES—THEY ARE PAID IN BOGUS CURRENCY—TILDEN'S ENORMOUS PROFITS FROM THE NEW-YORK MINE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ISHPEMING, Mich., Saturday, Oct. 14, 1876.

There is no other place where the character of Samuel J. Tilden can be studied with so much profit as on the Michigan Peninsula, where his operations as a bank of issue, a mining stockholder, and a railroad shark have been so extensive. Coming North by the only railroad line that reaches this region, one begins to hear of Tilden immediately after leaving Fort Howard. For the most part the half dozen families of Marquette County people who were returning from a visit to the Centennial Exposition, on the train I had taken, were friendly to the Democratic candidate. A majority of the people up here who are "well off" will vote for him. This is due to the fact that their fortunes were made by the same process that swelled the purse of Mr. Tilden—the issue of shinplasters. But down in the mines, 250 feet below the surface, I talked with men who had suffered from Tilden's heartlessness. The workmen are Scotch, Cornish, Welsh, and a few Irish. Many of them, in the time of the bastard issue of the companies, had not their families with them. Some had wives and children in the Eastern States, some across the water. One intelligent Cornishman told me, as he came into a tunnel to await a blast, that his mother and his wife in England looked to him for support and for means to bring them to this country. He was at work in the New-York Mine, and received his pay in the bogus currency issued by Tilden and Wetmore. It was good at the store of Tilden and Wetmore, for goods, on which a larger profit was charged than on those of the adjoining company stores. But he required money to send home and was compelled to sell his scrip for seventy-five cents on the dollar. The miners do not talk much, but it is admitted by half a dozen leading Democrats with whom I talked that they will carry the county for Hayes and Wheeler. To understand just how significant this is of their detestation of Tilden, it is necessary to know how intolerant are the Democrats who "run the country." I hardly knew what high political feeling was until I met Peninsular Democrats. Tilden has aided, by his schemes for his own advancement, many of them to make fortunes. One particular supporter of his, with a refreshing lack of conscience, operated against Tilden as well as the miners, and, as he expressed it, "thinks he ought to even things by voting for Sam." He declared that Tilden and Wetmore, through agents, actually bought all the shinplasters issued to their la ful face and issued four-months' non-interest-bearing, non-collectable scrip.

In the copper mines around Houghton, there was, at the time of Tilden's issue, many serious fears of a complete shutting down. Companies were embarrassed and stockholders unwilling to sink more money. If there is the shadow of an excuse for Tilden, these companies would have been more pardonable still for making their own currency. Contrast what they did with Tilden's course. They assessed stockholders, and where they could get no money by this means, persuaded stockholders to pledge their credit in proportion to the stock held. With not nearly so fair an outlook as in the iron regions, they pulled through, and even in these hard times are hopeful of making money.

It is easily understood that, with their knowledge of Tilden, the people in this region should not be surprised at the exposure of Tilden's evasion of the Income Tax laws by THE TIMES. Even his strongest supporters here attempt no explanations, but laugh at the whole thing as "one of Sam's sharp tricks." I was told that undoubtedly Tilden's income for 1862 was very large from some of the pits of the present Iron Cliffs Company, in which it is said he owned stock to a considerable amount at that time. I visited Marquette and made a careful examination of the records, but found nothing in regard to either the Iron Cliffs Company or the New-York Mine prior to 1872. The return of the former for that year does not show the original holders of stock. However, Abram S. Hewitt, Mr. Tilden's partner, appears in 1872 as the holder of 800 shares, W. T. Pelton, Mr. Tilden's nephew, of 500 shares, and others who have been intimately connected with Mr. Tilden for a large number of shares. It is believed by persons with whom I conversed that all this stock, amounting at least to one-tenth of the total, was originally in the hands of Mr. Tilden. But there is no legal evidence of this. On the estimate of a Peninsular Republican, Mr. Tilden must have realized $10,000 from the pits which were afterward combined under the title of the Iron Cliffs Company, from the defunct Michigan Company, and from stock he is said to have held in the Jackson Company. As I have said, there are no records prior to 1872, and it is impossible to verify this estimate.

As to the New-York mine, I secured undoubted evidence. It was opened in 1864, when 8,000 tons of ore were taken out at a profit to Mr. Tilden alone of more than ten thousand dollars. In 1865, 12,214 tons of ore were taken out at a profit to Mr. Tilden of more than eighteen thousand dollars—the ore having been sold at rates far above the market price by previous contract. This mine is owned exclusively by Tilden and Wetmore, the former owning three-fourths of the stock. This is shown by the records in the office of the County Clerk. The application of this to his income tax for 1865 is easily made. The history of the Peninsular "Consolidation" given in THE TIMES is thoroughly indorsed by business men at this place, at Negaunee, and at Marquette, and the figures given are regarded as accurate. The real income of Mr. Tilden for 1865, without regard to the immense profits made from his currency and from the pits of the Iron Cliffs Company, would be: From the "Consolidation," $174,550; professional services to the Northwestern Railroad, $17,250; from the New-York Mine, $18,000—making a total of $209,700. The amount for which he allowed himself to be assessed and upon which he paid tax was $20,000.

It is to be regretted that the law requiring annual returns of amount of ore taken out of each mine, together with the names of stockholders, to be made to the County Clerk, was not in force in 1862. Tilden was known on the Peninsula at that time, and it is remembered in a vague way that he was making a great deal of money out of investments in lands and mines. While the absence of legal evidence prevents a decided statement on my part as to amounts, it does not obviate the impression, among Democrats as well, that $10,000 will not cover Tilden's earnings on the Peninsula for 1862.

In regard to Tilden's utter lack of conscience and heartlessness, unfortunately there is too much evidence. The companies that claim to have resorted to the issue of currency from necessity have no sympathy with Tilden in his general oppression of his miners. All over this district I hear disapproval. Capt. Henry Merey, a humane gentleman, who has charge of the Jackson Company's works, is supported by his miners in the statement that their losses under the "currency" rule were light, as compared with those of the men in the New-York Mine. Owing to the shutting down of many mines on the Peninsula, the supply of workmen is large. All who were able left when wages were reduced, at least six thousand going from this place. But many miners with families could not get away. Mr. Tilden, as owner of the New-York Mine, takes advantage of their helplessness and employs skilled workmen at wages that would disgust a street laborer. In the mine did not make more than a moderate profit this would be well enough. Yet in this year, when the miners are working at less than half pay, Mr. Tilden will coolly pocket $100,000 as his profit. It is not surprising that the old Democratic County of Marquette will roll up a big majority for Hayes and Wheeler.

THE IRISH SOLDIER IN THE WAR.

Gen. Judson Kilpatrick lectured last evening before the Young People's Christian Association of the Sixteenth Baptist Church, Sixteenth street, near Eighth avenue. The lecture was the first of a course to be delivered for the benefit of the association. Its subject was: "The Irish Soldier in the War of the Rebellion," and it was originally prepared for and delivered before an audience of a different character from that which heard it last evening. The scope of the lecture was much wider than its title would indicate, for, as Gen. Kilpatrick explained in his researches after material which would enable him to do his subject justice, he had found that Irishmen had been engaged on so many fields of battle that he thought he could not pass many of them by without some brief reference. Accordingly, the gallantry of Irish soldiers in their own country on the battlefield of Continental Europe, and in the war of the Revolution, as well as in that of the rebellion, was duly descanted upon. The lecturer generalized in the first instance concerning the perpetual craving after liberty which races cherished, and the sacrifices which they were ready to make in pursuit of it. Among such races he classed the Celts. He briefly followed their fortunes in Ireland in their contests with the Northman, the Dane and the Saxon, paid a fitting tribute to the heroism of the Irish at Limerick and their valor at Malplaquet and Fontenoy, told of their services to the young Republic of America in the war of the Revolution, and finally narrated the story of their bravery and fealty on the more modern battle-fields of the rebellion. He closed up, too, the names of unknown heroes, concerning whom fame has failed to blow the trumpet so as to make it generally heard, and told many anecdotes of the wit and soldierly qualities of the Irish volunteers. Then he placed his hearers with McClellan's army before Richmond, described the attack of Stonewall Jackson, the long, heaving retreat, and the final check of the rebels at Malvern Hill. In connection with this famous battle he paid the highest tribute to Meagher's Brigade, consisting of the Sixty-third, Sixty-ninth, and Eighty-eighth New-York, and the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts Regiments. Their attack on the rebels; the long, desperate struggle, and the impetuous valor which compelled victory to side with it, were vividly described, and mention was made of various cases of individual gallantry. Next he told of Winchester, the ride of Phil. Sheridan, whom he styled the Murat of America, and his splendid rally of the flying troops. Then the story of the death of Gen. Philip Kearny, (New-Jersey's great soldier, the lecturer called him,) was pathetically narrated, and in conclusion he recited a poem dedicated to the memory of that gallant General. The next lecture of the association will be delivered by Mr. Frederick Douglass on the subject of "Self-made Men."

THE CITY DEMOCRACY.

THE FACTIONS WILL NOT UNITE.

JOHN MORRISSEY'S RECONVERSION — HE SUBMITS TO JOHN KELLY—HIS LETTER OF RESIGNATION—IRA SHAFER'S CAUSTIC REPLY—ACTION OF THE ANTI-TAMMANY PARTY.

Some of the most respectable members of the Anti-Tammany organization expressed themselves yesterday morning as disgusted with the efforts which had been made to sell out the party to John Kelly, in order to obtain from him a bestowal of offices on the traitors or their friends. In the opinion of the gentlemen mentioned, it would be found impossible to deliver over to Kelly the votes of thousands of independent men in the Anti-Tammany organization—men who were opposed to Tammany Hall on principle, and who would rather vote for honest Republicans for local offices, in no way affecting national or State issues, than support mere creatures of John Kelly. It had been said that Smith Ely, Jr., was an honest man, and would be acceptable to Anti-Tammany. In the opinion of many of the Anti-Tammany party, Mr. Ely would be as much a "machine" candidate as Augustus Schell. Mr. Ely had always been a seeker after or acceptor of offices. To be sure, he had opposed Ring members of the old Board of Supervisors. Schell had been dropped by Kelly on account of the cry raised that he was Kelly's man, and Kelly had now taken up Ely, but it was well known among the initiated that Ely was as much Kelly's man as any candidate could be. Kelly had pitched upon him last Sunday, as reported in THE TIMES, and the two men had been almost inseparable ever since. Kelly was evidently coaching him, and he was doubtless a willing pupil. Such men as Morrissey, Hayes, and Creamer were not desirable members of any organization claiming to act in the interests of good government, and they would drift into Tammany Hall, where they naturally belonged, and where they expected to receive rewards for their unsuccessful treachery. Morrissey had, for some time, acted in such a manner that he was suspected of disloyalty to Anti-Tammany, and of entertaining a design to make such a combination with Tammany as would subserve his own purposes, and when taxed by Mr. Shafer and others with acting in, apparently, a tortuous and suspicious manner, he, in the most emphatic manner asserted his loyalty to Anti-Tammany and his innocence of any intention to act from any selfish motive or in the interests of Tammany Hall. His strong denial had so impressed Mr. Shafer that he was mistaken that he placed Morrissey in the position of Chairman of the Anti-Tammany Subcommittee on Conferences with Tammany Hall, and Morrissey had taken advantage of the great opportunity thus afforded him to endeavor to sell out the organization to John Kelly.

Matters stood in this position yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock, the hour when the County Conference Committees of Tammany and Anti-Tammany met in their respective halls to resume business. The Anti-Tammanyites suspected that Morrissey was on the eve of abandoning their organization and going over to John Kelly, and the Tammanyites knew the fact, and, consequently, sent no communications of an official character to the Anti-Tammany Committee looking to an overture for fresh proposals; but a few of the Tammany adherents informally notified some of the members of the Anti-Tammany Committee that no further proposals would be made or considered by Tammany Hall.

The Tammany County Conference Committee had but a short session. Its subcommittee, appointed on Tuesday, reported that it had attempted to confer with the German Independent ("Ottendorfer") Democracy's subcommittee, but that, owing to a misunderstanding as to the time of conference, a postponement of the meeting was had until to-day. The committee then adjourned until this morning.

The Anti-Tammany County Conference Committee had a long session, and the proceedings were of a very interesting character. Mr. Ira Shafer presided, and Messrs. John D. Coughlin and William P. Mitchell acted as Secretaries. Every Assembly district except the Eleventh (John Morrissey's) was represented. Communications received from subcommittees of the Citizens' organization, which placed Comptroller Green in nomination for Mayor, and from the German Independent Democracy were received, and the sub-committee of the Anti-Tammany Conference Committee was instructed to confer with sub-committees of those organizations in reference to a plan of uniting all organizations opposed to Tammany Hall. A call of the Assembly Districts represented in the Conference Committee was had, and the representatives of each, except the third, responded that their organizations stood by Anti-Tammany, and would support any respectable ticket that it might combine on in opposition to Tammany Hall. Ex-Supervisor "Jimmy" Hayes, the bosom friend of Morrissey, who represented the Third District, said that he would have to confer with the delegation from that district before he could state what course they would pursue. After reports from the district organizations had been received to the effect that they were all in a prosperous condition, Mr. Shafer, who is the Chairman of the Anti-Tammany County Committee, the County Convention and the County Conference Committee, announced that Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, Chairman of the Anti-Tammany Executive Committee, would present a communication received by him from Mr. Morrissey, and the following letter was read:

HOFFMAN HOUSE, NEW-YORK Oct. 18, 1876.
Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, Chairman of the Executive Committee New-York County Democracy:

DEAR SIR: In consideration of the action of the County Convention of your body in rejecting the proposition for a union of the Democratic Party, as proffered by the organization known as Tammany Hall, I hereby tender my resignation as a member of your Executive and Conference Committees, and notify you of my withdrawal from every connection with your political body. I esteem the success of the Democratic ticket as the coming election as of infinitely greater importance than the success of any mere office-seekers, and cannot but regard the action of your convention upon Saturday last as inimical to the interests and principles of the Democratic Party. Respectfully,

JOHN MORRISSEY.

When the letter had been read and received with indications of the greatest satisfaction, Mr. Shafer stated briefly the outlines of the course which had been pursued by Mr. Morrissey during the brief connection with Anti-Tammany, in his endeavors to sacrifice the organization on the pretense of helping the national ticket.

Ex-Supervisor O'Brien urged that the resignation should be accepted with thanks, and several of the members of the committee were in favor of instantly expelling Morrissey from membership, characterizing him as a traitor, &c. Finally it was resolved by a unanimous vote that the following reply, written by Mr. Shafer, should be sent to Mr. Morrissey as expressing the sentiments of the committee:

NEW-YORK, Oct. 18, 1876.

SIR: The Chairman of the Executive Committee of the New-York County Democracy this afternoon read to the Conference Committee your letter resigning from both committees and withdrawing from our organization. I am instructed by the Conference Committee to inform you that your resignation is accepted with great pleasure, and that we are but too happy to be rid of one who, although a member for only three weeks, has been mainly engaged in conspiring against our interests and in holding secret conferences with our enemies, and one especially with Mr. John Kelly, having for its object the surrender of this organization to Tammany Hall, after you had received, with merited disapprobation, the proposition the rejection of which by our body compels you, with a great show of virtue, to resume your old relations with Tammany Hall. Your profession of interest in the success of the Democratic ticket is appreciated by those of our organization who understand the treacherous course you have been pursuing, solely for the purpose of promoting your personal ends. Yours, &c.,

IRA SHAFER, Chairman.

To JOHN MORRISSEY, Esq.

The committee adjourned to meet at 4 o'clock on Friday afternoon.

The Anti-Tammany County Convention, which adjourned subject to the call of the chair, after its stormy session last Saturday, will be reconvened as soon as its Conference Committee has consulted with all the organizations opposed to Tammany Hall, which will unite on a ticket with Anti-Tammany.

The Anti-Tammany Executive Committee is to meet on Saturday evening, pursuant to a call from Mr. Hart, its Chairman, and action is to be taken to reorganize the Eleventh District and any other districts which may possibly show defections on account of Morrissey's submission to John Kelly.

WHAT JOHN MORRISSEY SAYS.

On Mr. Morrissey being asked, last evening, what had induced him to resign, he said:

I went into the organization about thirty days ago, to use my best endeavors to bring about a union of the party in this City. I thought it was the duty of every person who participated in the Saratoga Convention to use his best endeavors to effect a union here, and in the same spirit in which it was carried out there. In that union we got two members of the State Central Committee, and two on the electoral ticket. The Democratic Party throughout the State had every right to expect the same spirit to exist here. There were conference committees appointed from each organization. Tammany Hall proposed to give us one-third of all the offices to be elected in the City and County. It was not the exact proportion according to the State Convention, but this certainly was not enough difference to prevent a union. My judgment is that it should have been accepted. But I found on that Conference Committee of our organization, when it looked like a union, the members became candidates themselves, or nearly every one of them had one. There would have been a union could they or their men have been nominated. The most conspicuous one was O'Brien, for Sheriff. It looked to me as though he had promised every man on the conference a nomination, providing he would vote for him. It was very evident to me that, unless he was nominated, he was going to do everything he could to prevent a union. It was no question of principle or party with him. It was a question of his own nomination or no union. I was satisfied that they were willing to trade with anybody or any party for their own selfish notions. I voted to accept the proposition made by John Kelly in the conference, thinking that it was better to accept it than to have any division in the party. I was voted down by the combination of office-seekers. I made a minority report to the convention. It met with the same fate there. My judgment is, had the delegates had their own way, the minority report would have been adopted. But through the intimidation of a band of assassins, who were led by O'Brien and let in off the sidewalk, there were a great many of the delegates who did not dare to discuss the question, through fear of bodily harm. I saw that it made no difference to them what party they traded with, if they got what they wanted personally. I ask the people to watch their movements. They were willing to sell out every man in their organization for their own interests. I never had any candidates, nor ever commit ed myself to any man for any position, nor proposed any of the candidates named. My judgment is that every man who voted against a union, if he was to run for office to-morrow in this City, you could put all the votes he got in your hat. There is no strength attached to it. There was a combination of circumstances happened last year by the bad management of Tammany Hall, and the united press being for them, elected their ticket. They assumed that they did it. If they were to nominate a straight ticket, in my judgment, they would not poll 5,000 votes in the City of New-York. When they speak of selling out their organization, they have not got it, and anybody who buys them to deliver anything will certainly get the worst of the bargain. Any combination that they may make will not, in my judgment, injure the national or State ticket. Their motives would be so apparent to everybody that on election day they would have no following. They'd be all officers, without an army.

THE PROBABLE NOMINEES OF TAMMANY HALL.

The Tammany County Convention meets at 3 o'clock this afternoon in Tammany Hall. Henry L. Clinton is to preside. At a meeting of the Tammany Committee on Organization, held yesterday afternoon, it was resolved that in reference to each nomination to be made the district delegations are to be called in their numerical order, and the Chairman of each delegation is to announce its vote.

Following is the "slate," so far as it could be ascertained last evening, but it is very imperfect, there being much doubt in reference to some nominations:

Mayor—Smith Ely, Jr.
Sheriff—Bernard Reilly.
County Clerk—Henry A. Gumbleton, William Walsh, Charles E. Loew, or William A. Butler.
Surrogate—Frederick A. Smyth or Delano C. Calvin.

THE INDEPENDENT REPUBLICANS.

A County Convention of the Independent Republican organization was held last evening at Science Hall, Eighth street, near Broadway. Samuel N. Lecompte was elected Chairman, and E. P. Thompson and H. C. Atwood Secretaries. Before taking the chair, Mr. Lecompte made a brief speech, in which he warmly eulogized Hayes and Wheeler and Edwin D. Morgan, claiming that the latter had been first nominated by the Independent Republicans. A resolution offered by Mr. James G. Murray that a committee of twenty-one be appointed to confer with other organizations having in view the nomination of the "highest character" for local offices was unanimously adopted. It was then resolved to ratify the nomination of Hon. Charles P. Shaw for Congress in the Eighth District, and, after speeches by Harvey Cleaveland, Samuel E. Gel, and Col. John J. Shaw, the convention adjourned to Monday, the 23d inst.

WOMEN'S UNION MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The morning session of the second day's proceedings of the Women's Union Missionary Society was called to order at 10 o'clock yesterday, by Mrs. Pruyn, President of the convention, in the Church of the Pilgrims, corner of Henry and Remsen streets, Brooklyn. After the usual half-hour spent in devotional exercises, Mrs. O. F. Avery, Treasurer of the branch society at Chicago, read a report setting forth how the missionary cause was being upheld by the society, and the good work it was accomplishing. Mrs. Isaac Williams, President of the Philadelphia branch, stated that they had contributed several thousand dollars for missionary work, and were using their utmost endeavors to forward the good cause. Mrs. Pruyn then offered prayer for the success of the missionary cause, after which Mrs. Brunot gave a history of the work done by the Boston Branch Society, and stated that it was growing in strength rapidly. At the afternoon session reports were read from Burmah, India, and China. Two young ladies who had been engaged in missionary work in the Burman district of India, Miss Marston and Miss Higbee, had been compelled to return home on account of ill-health brought upon them by the climate. Miss Marston's hearing had been much impaired. She stated that she had discovered many Christian churches while traveling through the jungles of India. Miss Kyle, a missionary at Athens, Greece, gave a short history of her work among the heathen of that benighted land. Mrs. Pruyn stated that it was proposed to establish a missionary home, where those who had been worn out and broken down in health in laboring for the conversion of the heathen could have an opportunity to rest and gain strength, for future work, or be taken care of when unable longer to labor. The suggestion met with an immediate response, and several ladies present subscribed toward the establishment of a fund for the purpose. Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby then addressed the convention on the great interest of missionary work in Greece, after which the afternoon session was brought to a close with prayer by Rev. Dr. Gracey, of the Methodist Mission. The evening session was held in Rev. Dr. Eagles' Church, Pierrepont street, near Monroe place. Addresses were delivered by Mrs. Van Lennep on "Woman in Moslem Bible," Mrs. A. Williamson on "Woman's Work in the Nineteenth Century," and Mrs. A. Johnson on "Influence of Women."

NEW-JERSEY PRESBYTERIAN SYNOD.

The New-Jersey Presbyterian Synod effected a permanent organization at Elizabeth yesterday by electing Rev. Dr. McCauley, of Hackettstown, Moderator, and Revs. R. S. Everett and William Swan Clerks. A list of 230 delegates from all parts of the State was read. The Synod received and accepted an invitation to witness the unveiling of the Witherspoon statue next Friday, at Philadelphia. The appeal and complaint of the minority of the Westfield Presbyterian Church who object to Rev. Mr. McKelvey as their Pastor, was presented, read, and referred to the Synod. It will be discussed this morning. The minority object to Mr. McKelvey because they do not believe him competent, but they have no complaint to make of his character. Rev. Dr. Miller, of Mount Holly, read a defense of the action taken at a previous session of the Synod in this case. He was several times interrupted and called to order. There was considerable excitement for awhile. Rev. Mr. Sawyer said the report was an outrage, and moved to refer it to a committee. Rev. Dr. Priest argued against receiving the report. One of the delegates thought the report was a criticism on the action of the General Assembly. The report was finally received, and referred to the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Brainard read a paper on the present status of the case. The case of Rev. Dr. Patterson will be considered by the Elizabeth Presbytery as soon as the committee appointed to investigate the rumors against him have made their report.

NEW-YORK STATE CONGREGATIONALISTS.

LOCKPORT, Oct. 18.—The sessions of the State Congregational Association were largely attended at the Congregational Church in this city to-day, large accessions of delegates being made by the incoming trains. The morning session included essays by Rev. Ethan Curtis, of Camden, N. Y., and Rev. Myron Adams, of Rochester, N. Y. Prayer by Rev. Ray Palmer and congratulations were extended to the Synod of the Presbyterian Church in session at Avlon. There were miscellaneous exercises this afternoon, and this evening the sessions Presbyterian Church was filled to hear addresses by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Rev. Samuel Scovell, of Norwich; Rev. Dr. Storrs, and others. The association will continue through to-morrow.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

VIEWS OF PROMINENT REPUBLICANS

PROMISING OUTLOOK IN MISSOURI — THE MARYLAND PROSPECTS — PENNSYLVANIA CERTAIN TO DO WELL — INDIANA REPUBLICANS CONFIDENT — THE PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION APPROVED.

The following interviews with prominent Republicans from various sections of the country and members of the National Committee indicate the feeling existing in their respective localities. There is a general enthusiasm reported for the national ticket, and strong expectations of gains in Congressmen and on State and national tickets.

Mr. Chauncey I. Filley, of Missouri, said that, in his opinion, the Democratic majority would be reduced by at least 10,000. Some were so sanguine that they believed that the Republican candidate for Governor would be elected, owing to the great unpopularity of Phelps, the Democratic candidate for the same position. The City and County of St. Louis would be carried by the Republicans. The Democrats had made so poor a ticket that they had been compelled to recall their County Convention to remodel it, and had struck off a number of names, and nominated new men. This, however, had not bettered their ticket, and it was as weak as before. The Republican county ticket, on the contrary, was the best that had ever been put in the field, and would be successful. In regard to the election of Congressmen there was the best reason to anticipate that four Republican members would certainly be elected, although it was thought by some of the party that so many as six would be returned. All that might be elected would be a gain for the Republicans, as the present representatives were all Democrats. Speaking of the effect of the Indiana election in his State, he said that the gain of Congressmen by the Republicans and securing a majority of the Legislature was conceded to be a substantial victory by the leading Democrats of Missouri, and that the reduction of the 17,000 majority to 5,500 could not be looked upon as a Democratic victory, although they desired to create such an impression on the public mind. The proclamation of the President in regard to the affairs of South Carolina would strengthen all law-abiding citizens in Missouri, and would give encouragement to all classes, more particularly to colored men. The Democratic press would, of course, howl about military usurpation; but had the Democrats the same right and provocation on their side as the Republicans now have, there was no State in this country that would be quicker to invoke military aid from the Government than the State of Missouri. Speaking generally, he said the Germans were rallying to the support of the Republican National, State, County, and Congressional tickets. The registration showed a large increase, composed chiefly of Germans and colored men; so large that the Democrats were becoming alarmed, and had already conceded the election of the Republican ticket in St. Louis County. It was the fear of this result that had induced them to make the change in their ticket already spoken of, this confessing their weakness. The four or five names substituted, however, were no more satisfactory than those first off red.

This weakness of the Democratic county ticket added materially to the strength of the Republican Congressional ticket. The Republican candidate for Congress in the St. Louis district, Hon. Anthony Ittner, was a leading German, President of the Manufacturers' and Mechanics' Exchange, and a member of the State Senate, and would certainly beat Kehr, the present Democratic member, who had been elected by a small majority on a bogus or independent ticket peddled by Republicans. In the Second District two Democrats were running, both claiming to be regular. The Republican candidate was ex-Mayor Cole, a prominent merchant and President of the Merchants' Exchange. He would command a full party vote, and a large support from the merchants of the district, which was the commercial centre of the West, and whose financial, commercial, manufacturing, railway, and shipping interests required a mercantile and business representative. The present President of the Merchants' Exchange, Mr. Lyne S. Metcalfe, was the Republican candidate in the Third District, the one in which the church influence had defeated the renomination of Hon. William H. Stone, the present Democratic member. There were very heavy manufacturing interests in this District, and the Republican candidate was so far superior to his opponent that his election was almost certain.

Mr. Charles C. Fulton, of Baltimore, said that the Democrats would, of course, carry Maryland, but by a much less majority than heretofore. Among the Republicans there was much more enthusiasm than there had been for years, and all were hard at work to further their cause. The party hope to elect two members of Congress in the present campaign, from the Third and Sixth Districts; and there was also a prospect of the return of another from the Fourth District, making three in all, which, should they be elected, would be an entire gain over the last delegation from the State. The Republicans were very hopeful, and were of the opinion that the chances of the coming contest were decidedly in favor of Hayes. President Grant's proclamation in regard to the protection of voters in South Carolina would be received by the Republicans of Maryland with great satisfaction, as they knew by experience that it would be required in order to insure a fair election. In Maryland colored Republican voters had been intimidated and driven from the polls by thousands at the election of last Fall. The proclamation would not affect the vote of the State, however, although there were many persons of both parties who really believed that such protection as that accorded in South Carolina would be necessary in Maryland during the coming election. Last Fall the Reform party, composed of Democrats and Republicans, undoubtedly carried the State, but they were counted out by ballot-box stuffing and the intimidation of colored voters, one-third of their vote only being polled. The proclamation would anger the ex-rebels, but the Republicans would rejoice at all movements on the part of the General Government to protect the purity of the ballot-box.

Mr. William H. Kemble, of Pennsylvania, said that the prospects of a Republican victory in his State were first-rate, and he had no doubt the majority for the Republican ticket would be all the way from 20,000 to 30,000. The party, he said, was in a much better condition than it was in 1868; the Liberal Republicans had, with very few exceptions, left the ranks of the Democracy and had returned to the Republican Party. In the western part of the State, where the defection of 1872 was the greatest, the party would poll the largest majority it had given since Grant's election. The Republicans would certainly gain seven Congressmen, and possibly eight. The result of the election in Indiana had caused the voters in Pennsylvania to be more watchful, and would undoubtedly be the means of rolling up a larger Republican majority than could have been attained had Indiana gone Republican, because the full Republican vote of the State would now be polled. Referring to President Grant's proclamation to the turbulent element in South Carolina, he said that the message was precisely what the party had been looking for for a long time. Its effect would be to inspire confidence in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, and Louisiana, and would strengthen the party in the North by assuring its members that the Republican Party in the South was "not going to be permitted to be overawed."

Hon. Edward F. Noyes, of Ohio, made the following statement: "Mr. Hayes will carry his State by 25,000 majority. The feeling of the Republican Party in the State was never better than at the present time. The North-west will go solid for Hayes and Wheeler. We have reason to hope that Indiana will repeat the experiment of 1872, when she gave 1,100 Democratic majority in October and 21,000 Republican majority in November. For many reasons the recent election in that State was not a test of the relative strength of parties, but as it was we reduced the Democratic majority of 17,000 last year to 5,500, carried the Legislature, and gained four Congressmen. Ohio gains five Republican Congressmen, and carries the State by a largely increased majority over last year, when we had a very active and able canvass. All Republicans and all loyal and true Democrats will regard President Grant's Message on South Carolina as absolutely called for and necessary. Nobody pretends that Federal bayonets ever prevented a Democrat from exercising his rights except during the war, when they were used on Democrats in arms against their country. All they are intended for now is to enable loyal citizens of the United States to exercise the rights guaranteed them by the Constitution. If our Government is not strong enough to protect its own citizens in their rights of person and property it will be difficult to say what it is good for. Nobody complains of President Grant's order except those who want a 'solid South' for the Democratic Party, secured by violence and murder."

In speaking of the same matters Mr. George W. Friedley, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of Indiana, said that the Republicans of Indiana, though temporarily defeated, were not disheartened. They were never more determined than now, and they would work hard and faithfully to redeem the State in November. They believed, as he did, that a majority of the legal voters of the State were Republican, and that the late Democratic victory was gained through the most outrageous frauds, which they determined should no be repeated in November. He was not able to state the exact strength of the greenback or independent vote in the late election; but he thought it would be found to be fully eight thousand. A very large majority of those voting that ticket had been Republicans, and he was confident that most of them would unite with their old party friends to beat Tilden in November. A large proportion of the Kentucky rebels who were colonized in Indiana to vote, and who did vote the Democratic ticket at the late election, had gone home. For these reasons he believed Indiana would be carried by the Republicans in November. Nine Republican Congressmen have been elected in his State, which was a gain of four. They had also gained the House of Representatives in their Legislature and reduced the Democratic majority from more than seventeen thousand in 1874 to about five thousand at the late election.

He had no doubt that the proclamation of President Grant would meet with the unqualified approval of Republicans everywhere. Republicans believed that the time had come when the Democratic Party, and especially the rebel portion of it in the South, should be reminded that it was Lee who surrendered to Grant at Appomattox, and not Grant to Lee. The effect of this proclamation, he thought, would be to secure fair elections in South Carolina and some of the other States. If such election should be secured the Republicans would certainly carry that State, together with North Carolina and Florida.

JOHN BRIGHT ON THE EASTERN WAR.

THE CRIMEAN WAR—HALF A MILLION OF LIVES LOST—RUSSIA GARROTED BY FRANCE AND ENGLAND—THE FREE PASSAGE OF THE BOSPHORUS AND THE DARDANELLES—HIS OPPOSITION TO FURTHER SUPPORTING TURKEY.

On Monday evening, the 2d inst., a very crowded meeting of members of the Manchester Reform Club was addressed by the Right Hon. John Bright, an honorary member of the club, on public affairs. During the course of his remarks, referring to the Crimean war, Mr. Bright spoke as follows:

Some said that Russia, with its great military power, was going to weigh down on all Europe and destroy the liberty of all the nations of Europe. Some said that Russia was about to take over to herself the government of 150,000,000 of people in India, and to drive England out of the territory. Some said that we went to war for the purpose of liberating Poland. Some said that it was to prevent the Russian fleets from coming through the Black Sea into the Mediterranean. In fact, I know not what reasons were those that were suggested to thoughtless and uninformed people to induce them to support the Government and Parliament, in that unhappy war. They were sufficient, and the war took place. Now that it was disastrous—looking back twenty years—I think all men must admit. I am not speaking now of what the failure of troops or of their failures in any contest in which they were engaged. I am speaking of it now from a far higher point of view than that. I say it was a disastrous war, and to us now, looking back upon it, especially humiliating. [Hear, hear.] I think Mr. Kinglake says that more than half a million of lives, from first to last, were sacrificed. Of that our share is supposed to have been about forty thousand men, and 100,000,000 of money was spent by us. I am not speaking now of what other nations spent. I am not addressing other nations. The moment the war was over, though there was a reduction of armaments, still our military estimates remained, and have remained from that time at ten millions or more. Beside all this, we entered into commercial transactions with an insolvent firm on the Bosphorus, to which the people of England advanced large sums which there is no hope they will ever see again, amounting probably to £100,000,000. It may be said, looking back at this alliance, that at this moment there is not an invested shilling in the Turkish war; that there is not a rifle, or bayonet, or sword by which a Servian has been killed in this war, or unarmed men, or helpless women and children have been murdered in Bulgaria, that was not purchased and paid for by money borrowed from the credulous people of this country. [Hear, hear.] Well, but after all, when the war was over, we were told that the great objects which had been gained—one was that the fleet of Russia in the Black Sea had been sequestrated that there could be no danger of its attacking Constantinople, and that Russia's treaty of protectorate over the Christian subjects of the Porte was abolished, or that they were transferred, rather, to the concerted action—a sort of combination of all the great powers—under which Russia could do no further mischief, and Turkey could be kept in something like a mode of humor and just action with regard to her Christian population. Well, now, what happened. Fourteen years after that war, in the year 1870, the armies of Prussia vanquished the armies of France. France and England had garotted Russia in 1854-6, and, having Russia down, they forced upon her that particular clause with regard to the Black Sea fleet, but the moment Prussia and France down and England was left alone, then Russia rose up and said that she would no longer submit to a clause so unfair to her, as she judged, and so humiliating. [Hear, hear.] She announced to Europe that the clause was at an end, so far as she was bound to regard it, and the Government of England, finding it inevitable and unavoidable, consented to the abrogation of that clause. * * * The people of England have come to a contrary opinion to that which they held twenty years ago, and they not only now are willing to condemn the war of that time, but are willing to pronounce emphatically against following the example of that time. [Cheers.] In fact, I think they have discovered that our old ideas upon the subject were foolish, and that some of our very pretensions and assumptions at that time were foolish and unjust and wicked. Now they have found out that the dread that Russia was going, with her great military despotism, to overshadow all Europe, and to destroy constitutional government and freedom over the whole continent—they have discovered that that was a folly that ought to have never been listened to. They have found out that the idea that Russia is likely by some mode to get possession of Constantinople, and be able to make her way to India and dethrone English power in that country—they have found out that that was a phantom that really had nothing in it, and I think they have found out also that the dread of the possession of a free passage through the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles would anger the ex-rebels, but the Republicans would rejoice at all movements on the part of the General Government to protect the purity of the ballot-box.

In speaking of the same matters Mr. George W. Friedley, Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee of Indiana, said that the Republicans of Indiana, though temporarily defeated, were not disheartened. They were never more determined than now, and they would work hard and faithfully to redeem the State in November. NEW PUBLICATIONS.

EVERY-DAY TOPICS. A Book of Briefs. By J. G. HOLLAND. New-York: SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & Co. 1876.

Little as is thought by competent critics of the paragraphs which, as "Topics of the Time," appear in Scribner's Monthly, Dr. Holland should not be blamed for collecting the least unobjectionable of his magazine work and presenting it to the public in book form. It is a common failing with writers of no power to set the highest value upon their own productions. Their faith in this particular especially when joined to the Christian desire of advancing the morals of their fellow men, naturally incites them to give the public the greatest possible opportunities of benefiting by their writings. Dr. Holland has doubtless learned, for he could not have avoided learning it if he reads the daily papers, that while buried in the pages of a magazine his sermons and cogitations have not been very much appreciated. Hence his anxiety to present them in another shape is quite easy to understand, and quite excusable. Personally he is very proud of his work. He has probably been distressed at the thought that an ungrateful public does not appreciate the fruits of his labors; and he now asks them to survey a selection from them as a whole, and so to profit by them to the full extent of his own aspirations. "Culture," a topic that Dr. Holland has almost made his own, occupies the foremost place in this book, and is discussed in four articles with all the energy of which their author is capable. The reader will not learn much from them, and he will probably be inclined to consider them vapid and rather in the girls' boarding-school style. But we must not be hard upon a man when we feel that he is doing his best, and that is what Dr. Holland has been doing in these essays. Perhaps he has been too discursive to do himself full justice. Perhaps if he had tried to concentrate the mental faculties with which nature has endowed him he might have produced something less feeble. But we must take things as we find them. Dr. Holland has felt himself capable of discoursing in the same volume, not only upon "Culture," but upon literature and literary men, criticism, popular lectures, personal dangers, personal development, preachers, Christianity and science, revivals and reforms, Christian practice, the Church of the future, common moralists, woman, amusements, temperance, social intercourse, town and country, rich and poor, politics and politicians, and American life and manners in general. This is a wide field. There may be the leaven of genius in the work, but either the work is so vast or the genius so small that it is not perceptible. There is but little room for doubt, therefore, that Dr. Holland should learn to concentrate his mental power upon some one subject. "Culture" is probably that which would be most congenial to him. A monograph, in a limited number of volumes, on "Culture" from the pen of Dr. Holland might be the means of perpetuating the name of its author.

Another remark may not be out of place. Dr. Holland should not touch the subject of criticism. He has touched it here; but he ought not to have done it. Dr. Holland does not like critics. In that he is not at all singular. We never met with a writer of Dr. Holland's calibre who did like critics. They are a class of people whose duties to the public, like those of a Judge and jury, do not cause them to be much loved by aspiring mediocrities who come under their scrutiny. We do not blame Dr. Holland for his antipathy. He is human, and the antipathy is natural. But he should avoid critics as a text for his sermons, because he has not sufficient control over his passions to treat them with that Christianlike and judicial fairness which should characterize an author of such eminence. We heartily congratulate Dr. Holland, however, on having furnished to his publishers a new opportunity for evidencing the excellence of their typographical and other mechanical work in the art of book-making.

THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS. Historical Sketches, with Numerous Illustrations. Published for the Committee of Council on Education. New-York: SCRIBNER, WELFORD & ARMSTRONG. 1876.

Although this volume bears the imprint of a New-York publishing house, it is, as will be judged from the title, an English book. Indeed, it could not have been written anywhere else than where it was, since the illustrations and the various subjects of the different sections are taken mainly from the collection in the South Kensington Museum. It claims to be nothing more than an elementary work, prepared not for the learned but for the unlearned, in fact for educational purposes, and as such it is very complete. The extraordinary advance in artistic work made in England during the last quarter of a century is one of the great results of the first International Exhibition in 1851. In the manufacture of furniture, in house decorations, in architecture, and some other directions, there are evidences already perceptible that a similar advance, for which there is much need, will be made in this country as a consequence of the Exhibition at Philadelphia. It is progress of that kind which works like this are calculated to further; and it would be well, as a means of improving the national taste generally, if the present volume were made a text-book in the more advanced classes in educational institutions. The pages have already been used, but without acknowledgment, to furnish food for magazine readers, but the book should be studied in its entirety. It is filled with illustrations, and comprises notices and representations of the finest ancient work in gold, silver, bronze, copper, iron, and enamels; examples of furniture, pottery, and porcelain, carved ivories, majolicas, glass, mosaics, arms and armor, textile fabrics, and lace. An immense amount of information is given in a comparatively small space, and in readable form, not only explanatory of the objects mentioned, but descriptive to a great degree of the development of art in its several departments. The subject has for some time come to be regarded as an essential item in English education. To that the book itself owes its existence, and with a proper appreciation of the necessity for æsthetic cultivation in the industrial arts, its value should be as fully recognized here as it has been already in the place where it was produced.

THE CHILD SAMUEL. A practical and devotional commentary on the birth and childhood of the Prophet Samuel. Designed as a help to meditation on the Holy Scriptures for children and young persons. By EDWARD MEDRICK GOULBURN, D. D., Dean of Norwich. New-York: PUTT. YOUNG & Co. 1876.

We have had occasion before to draw attention to the great value of those of Dr. Goulburn's works which have come before us. The present is in no wise inferior to the best we have noticed. It is a work specially intended for the young, but persons of all ages are likely to derive much instruction and benefit from its perusal. All the writings of Dr. Goulburn are distinguished by deep earnestness and abundant faith, and the wide and comprehensive scholarship of the writer which militates against a style which is at once simple to those with whom simplicity is necessary, and suggestive of close scriptural study to those who are more willing to enter heartily into the spirit of the author's labors. Dr. Goulburn has the happy faculty not only of bringing great truths into a shape where they can be readily comprehended, and of forcibly, and as it were without effort, laying down true scriptural principles, but he does all in a manner so alluring and attractive that the interest as well as the attention of the reader is secured. These qualities, amid other merits which it is not necessary to detail here, are very marked in the book before us. It is a valuable addition to works of its class, and one to which the warmest recommendations may safely be given. Such writings, especially in these days of neglect and indifference cannot be too widely disseminated.

STUDIES IN BRYANT. A text-book. By JOSEPH ALDEN, D. D., of the State Normal School at Albany. With an introduction by WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT. New-York: D. APPLETON & Co. 1876.

In the production of this volume the most difficult part of the labor must have been that which was performed by Mr. Bryant. It is no slight compliment which Dr. Alden has paid him, and in asking him to write the introduction the Doctor required him virtually to acknowledge the honor done to him. We need not say that Mr. Bryant has succeeded in this, evincing the utmost modesty and good taste.

Out of the long list of poets, ancient and modern, which lies before him Dr. Alden has chosen Mr. Bryant as the one whose works seem to him well adapted as the groundwork for a text-book in the institution at Albany with which he is connected. Of this choice we shall say nothing. It is not our place to criticise it. Dr. Alden understands his own wants in the matter, and his authority is such that his judgment is certain to be respected. Accordingly Mr. Bryant's permission to print some of his poems was applied for and obtained, and this little volume is the result. That it will prove valuable in the schools we do not doubt. Each selection is succeeded by a number of questions, the manner in which they are to be answered being indicated in the earlier examples. These questions have been planned with care and good judgment, and the pupil who will examine them carefully and work out the answers cannot fail to profit considerably by the book. Indeed, the profit to be derived from the little work—for it contains only some ninety pages of matter for the student—is far in excess of what might be imagined from the limits of the selection.

THREE CENTURIES OF ENGLISH POETRY. Being selections from Chaucer to Herrick, with introductions and notes by ROSALIND ORME MASSON, and a general preface by DAVID MASSON, M. A., LL. D., Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature in the University of Edinburgh. London and New-York: MACMILLAN & Co. 1876.

The indorsement of Prof. Masson will be a sufficient guarantee for the value of this selection. Works of the kind are not uncommon, but this is decidedly the best that has come under our notice. To professors and students of literature in our colleges, it will prove of much value, and those readers among the general public who, through lack of time or opportunity, have not access to the works of the ancient authors, will find it a volume of the greatest literary interest, supplying, as it does, specimens from the productions of some of the most prominent poetical writers of early times. Nearly sixty of those writers are represented, from Chaucer, in the fourteenth century, to Robert Herrick, in the seventeenth. Of each there is a brief notice, defining the identity of the author and his merits, and these notices are models of conciseness and accuracy. They evince no less the literary skill of the writer in forming her estimate of the requirements indicated by the nature of the work, than the sound judgment with which she has tersely laid before her readers a measure of the qualities of the poets from whom she has made her selections. It is a book which students of the English language cannot afford to be without; but besides that, it should find a place on the shelves of all who can appreciate in any degree the importance of the English classics.

OAKUM PICKINGS. A collection of stories, sketches, and paragraphs contributed from time to time to the telegraphic and general press. By JOHN OAKUM. New-York: W. J. JOHNSTON. 1876.

We have here a collection of trifles of various degrees of merit which will serve to while away half an hour pleasantly in a railway car or anywhere else where time is not very valuable. Some of the chapters are highly amusing and the stories are well told. The author is a telegraphic operator, and his sketches in connection with his own profession will be read with much sympathy by the fraternity. Here and there a foot-note explanatory of some of the things only known in telegraph offices would have been an assistance to the ignorant outside world. But this can be remedied in a second edition; and meanwhile he must be a discontented reader indeed who will not derive some enjoyment from Mr. Oakum's trifling. In time we shall not be surprised if we hear from him again, for he evidently possesses some of the qualities of a good story-teller and paragraphist, which need but little exercise and cultivation to enable him to turn them to good account.

IMAGINARY CONVERSATIONS. By WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR. First series—Classical Dialogues, Greek and Roman. Boston: ROBERTS BROTHERS. 1876.

The publishers of this volume deserve the thanks of the American public, not only for introducing to it anew one of the most interesting works in English literature, but also for the admirable form and mechanical excellence in which it is reproduced. In the case of those readers who are already familiar with these conversations no recommendation from us is necessary. But to that more numerous class among which they are not known it may be well to say that few books among our standard classical authors are more entertaining. The characters of the persons introduced in the conversations are well and truthfully defined, and the conversations themselves are full of rich, imaginings, fine dramatic scenes, and suggestive thoughts. The work is a reprint, and includes Mr. Forster's preface, which, although to the purpose, might advantageously have been more elaborated. Still, its brevity will serve the more to concentrate attention on the text, from which its readers cannot fail to derive both pleasure and profit.

PLATED WARE.

THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBIT.

FALSE ART TENDENCIES—THE EASTLAKERS—APOSTLE SPOONS AND SOUP LADLES—TOOLS VERSUS HAND-WORK—OLD PEWTER—MODERN NICKEL SILVER—THE QUALITY OF OUR WORK—ITS PECULIAR EXCELLENCE—GENERAL DEDUCTIONS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Oct. 16, 1876.

It looks just now as if a great many very good people were getting muddled, addled, and demented in regard to household art. That incoherent chatter one hears in regard to certain art tendencies which must and shall pervade the commonest objects, I think ought to be extinguished. I do not consider it as absolutely necessary that I should pull my boots off by means of an æsthetic boot-jack, nor do I see why I must hang my clothes upon a mediæval coat-hook. Undoubtedly Apostle spoons are very pretty things for me to have in my cabinet, but I must confess that my potage bisque can be consumed by me quite cheerfully by means of even a plated spoon, and I am even utterly indifferent as to the quite possible fact that my neighbors who live in the houses both sides of me are eating their soup with spoons quite identical as to shape or ornamentation.

Now, we may rate all we please at what are called the leveling influences of tools, or the methods employed to turn out mechanically a gross of Venuses of Milo or a hundred soup-ladles all precisely alike, but it is a good thing that the majority of us should be able to enjoy our statuettes or handle our soup-ladles, and that Dives should not alone enjoy the monopoly. There was a time when the rich had their tables and bouffets all ablaze with silver salvers, or parcel-gilt ha naps, or golden vases, and the next in rank did the best they could with pewter, while the lower herd, who worked and sweated for the other two higher classes, devoured their meat off of wooden trenchers or slaked their thirst in horn cups. Things are more democratic, thank heavens, nowadays. Let us, then, notwithstanding the heartrending appeals of those who refuse to eat their mackerel unless it be broiled on a cloisonné gridiron, or turn away from the crumpet unless it is served on a champ-leve muffineer, let us rather glorify the artisans of the present century, who give us in plenty articles for common use which are well designed, made of excellent material, and which a very little money will buy. I would be quite indifferent even if they were somewhat identical in character. Nothing can be more stupid than to insist that because a tool does a thing, and does it accurately, the result should be ugly. Quite to the contrary. The tool product may be chaste and beautiful. Machinery defies hand-work. Of course it is not creative but imitative. So, if you were an Eastlaker, and a vertiginous one to boot, and you were to ask the Meriden Britannia Company to kindly furnish you with some hundred dozens of spoons of some particular pattern, and you were, in your distracted way, to insist that unless the spoons had file-marks apparent on them, and a certain slight unfinished appearance which would make your spoons look exactly like hand-worked spoons, and were to write on the bottom of your contract that they were to be returned unless they had these particular ear-marks, the Meriden Britannia Company would undoubtedly book your order. All, then, that the Meriden people would do would be to put some file-marks or scratches on their dies or stamps or rollers, and out would pour a continuous stream of spoons, knives, or forks, every one having the peculiar beauty spots, which you, as an Eastlaker, especially cherished. So you see that if machines are left to themselves they can make work which is true to the touch of the nail, or rough work, if you require it, which is all that human hands can encompass.

The display of plated ware in the great Exhibition is conceived in exceeding good taste, is remarkable for its fine workmanship, and forms altogether a most notable collection. Connecticut, with its busy town of West Meriden, seems to control the business in plated ware, though Rhode Island divides the honors. Two materials are employed as the foundation on which the nobler metals, gold and silver, are applied. A plated article must have strength, solidity, and ring, for perhaps no articles in common use get more use or abuse than plated ware. We have supplanted pewter. Alas, for the tears of the æsthetic! These daft people still mourn its loss. We shall have somebody after a while lecturing about pewter as one of the lost arts. True, pewter was so soft that you could bend it, but then, so say the Eastlakers, it had a tender color about it which was quite comforting. The fact was, from the heat out of which it was made pewter was greasy to the touch and tarnished. Hard metal now eschews lead, and we make a good solid compound with tin, copper, and antimony. There is something, however, better than this, which is called nickel silver, and is a mixture of copper, zinc, and nickel. It used to be called German silver, but some how or other German silver was thought to be an inelegant, even a vulgar name, and we have substituted nickel silver for it. The hard metal is good in its way, but the nickel silver has a strength and durability somewhat surpassing pure silver. On both these substances the silver is laid. The trade distinctions as to shapes are quite simple—all forks, spoons, and knives are flat ware; everything else is hollow ware. Now, as to silvering or gilding, electro-plating, or the processes by means of which these nobler metals are put in the hard metal or nickel silver. Many years ago Ruolz and Elkington first adapted electro-plating to common use, and although the Eastlaker will whimper about his old fire-gold, the modern electro process does the work a thousand times better and is immensely cheaper. In regard to the mechanical work—chemical or galvano-plastic methods—I will hold my peace, simply remarking that in the higher sphere of art such objects as are produced by Elkington & Co., of England, are identical with the models. The saltcellars which Benvenuto-Cellini made for Pope or Prince are copied by this English house, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art contains no end of beautiful Elkington reproductions, which are triumphs of art.

Now, to make a fine piece of plated ware it must be understood that just as much skill and patient toil or imaginative power is required as if the material was of gold or silver. There are no such invidious distinctions as might snub the artist who works for the plated-ware makers, as if one might say: "This gentleman is a silver designer, and this fellow is a plated-ware worker." In fact, nothing asserts itself more distinctly than does the higher class of plated ware. When you see written under an elegant piece of the less costly ware this notice: "This plated work can be reproduced in silver if required," this quite caps the climax, and drives the art-maniacs howling away.

Now, the frugal housewife wanting to replenish her stores, or the sumptuous man inclined to garnish his sideboard, will do well to look carefully over all these exhibits. I suppose that nothing can be really more saddening than the appearance of a plated fork with the baser metal showing through. Of course I can enjoy my beefsteak even if the yellow metal out of which interior plated ware is made does shine through, but I am aware that there are a great many susceptible people who would sicken at it. Now, a fork or a spoon, even if made of adamant, will wear out at its points of contact either with the food, the mouth, or the table. Just here the Meriden Britannia Company have introduced what they call "sectional electro-plating" on their spoons and forks. By a clever mechanical device the article which is being plated receives just at the points of greatest usage some half dozen or more extra coats of silver. Of course the lite of a spoon or fork is indefinitely prolonged in this way.

American plated-ware in some respects has greater scope and amplitude than that of any other country. Though we are not as much given to plated candlesticks as our English friends, the use of ice in this country has made the ice pitcher and water cooler particularly our own. Then again, as butter would run into ghee, six months in the year in the United States, unless served in particular butter dishes, we have had to invent all kinds of shapes and forms. One thing which we do not use in this country, and which might be recommended to public notice, is the butter or sauce boat of plated-ware. China butter-boats are fragile and unsightly things, and might find a substitute in plated-ware. Everything appertaining to the work of the Meriden britannia ware is admirable in design and very perfect and true in workmanship. Mind you, spoons and forks and knives can be made, and are made by this company in endless varieties, and when you come to pièce montée, such as epergnes or punch-bowls or flower stands or pitchers or tea or coffee services, their work abounds with fine outlines and conscientious work in all its details. As to the plated-ware of the Gorham Company, their exhibition is superb. There is a dowager set of theirs which is really imposing. Perhaps there never was a cleverer designer than their Mr. Heller, and this artist is just as willing to work in plated-ware as in silver. The most conclusive evidence of the success of plated-ware in this country is its enormous consumption. The leading people inform me that they never were as busy as now, the Meriden Britannia Company employing to-day some eight hundred workmen. Foreign plated-ware, save the artistic work of the Elkingtons, which is superb in its way, is hardly represented at the Centennial. There is a French house which has a rather mediocre collection. I fancy it is an accepted thing that our work in plated-ware, as adapted to our wants, cannot now be surpassed, if equalled, by that of any other country. B. P.

THE INDIANA ELECTION.

WILLIAMS' MAJORITY OVER HARRISON—THE STATE LEGISLATURE—OFFICIAL RETURNS FROM ALL THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 18.—The aggregate vote on the State ticket is 433,333, of which Mr. Williams, Democrat, received 213,093; Mr. Harrison, Republican, 207,979, and Mr. Harrington, Independent, 12,226. Williams' majority over Harrison is 5,119. The largest Independent vote cast was for Newson, candidate for Treasurer of the State, 15,945. The Legislature stands: House—Republicans, 53; Democrats, 45; Independents, 2. Senate—Republicans, 23; Democrats, 25; Independents, 2.

The Democratic plurality on Congressmen is 7,913. The indepent vote on Congressmen is: First District, 1,240; Second, 944; Third, 1,634; Fourth, 378; Fifth, 0; Sixth, 816; Seventh, 1,505; Eighth, 4,704; Ninth, 3,349; Tenth, 33; Eleventh none; Twelfth, 675; Thirteenth, 186; total, 14,963; Democratic minority, 7,050.

HOME POLITICAL WORK.

SPEECH BY EX-GOV. DIX IN THE MORGAN WIGWAM, BROOKLYN.

An immense assemblage gathered to hear Gen. Dix at the Morgan Wigwam, corner of Classon and Putnam avenues, Brooklyn, last evening. The platform was crowded with distinguished visitors. In the body of the edifice were a number of ladies. At 7:50 o'clock Mr. Elijah R. Kennedy, President, announced the nominations agreed on in conference with the Reform Party in Brooklyn to board the Democratic jackals in their den and smash what he stigmatized as "the brutal Ring." When Gen. Dix entered the audience cheered wildly. After acknowledging his reception, the General treated most lucidly the financial question, showing that while neither party had exhibited too much wisdom in dealing with the currency, the Republican Party, in its honesty and determination to pay the debts of the country, kept up its credit, which would be destroyed by the Democrats. A most graceful tribute was paid to the personal worth and virtues of the venerable Peter Cooper, while his financial theories were deprecated, and an augury of the future policy of our next President, Rutherford B. Hayes, [received with immense applause,] was deduced from his recorded acts in Ohio, which showed that he was emphatically a hard-money man. Tilden's claim to having organized the Tammany Regiment was exposed as another of those misconceptions so prevalent concerning the wrecker of railroads. The history of the great Union square meeting, the necessity for it, its objects, and Tilden's mean hostility and cowardly venom against his country were given with masterly force and eloquence. The reduction of taxes, and who reduced them, were then touched on according to the facts, and Tilden's mysterious manipulation of the State sinking fund thoroughly exposed. He then denounced the overbashy, self-betraying villainy of "the solid South" in ousting maimed Union veterans and replacing them with rebels. The General asked what could be expected of such a combination of traitors, rebels, and copperheads, and pointed out how the Democrats would, if they could, "beat the devil round the stump" with the amendments to the Constitution. Then Tilden's income tax frauds were severely commented upon. The General closed with a noble review of the history and character and great deeds of the Republican Party and an appeal to "hold the fort" against all treason, with an invitation to the avowed Democrats present who responded to his inquiry to cut loose from the rebel sympathizers with the unpenitent enemies of the country. At the close of Gen. Dix's speech Gen. William Henry Browne, of Washington, and Gen. Sharpe addressed the meeting, which did not break up till a late hour.

At a meeting of the independent German citizens of the Eighteenth Assembly District, held on Tuesday evening at No. 588 Second avenue, it was recommended that Hon. Henry E. Howland be their candidate for Superior Court Judge. P. Diehle, C. Becht, and B. Metzer were appointed a committee to confer with the Republican District Association in regard to a nomination of Assemblyman.

The Swedish Republican Association held a well-attended meeting last night at No. 62 East Fourth street, Mr. R. Peterson presiding. Eloquent addresses were delivered by several members of the association, and great enthusiasm for the Republican Party, its principles, and candidates was manifested. A Swedish mass-meeting under the auspices of the above association will be held next Monday evening in Germania Hall, Nos 291 and 293 Bowery.

The Republicans of Jersey City held another large and enthusiastic meeting in the Catholic Institute last evening, under the auspices of the Pavonia Club. The large building was crowded to its utmost capacity, and hundreds of people were turned away. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Charles P. Shaw, of New-York, and Prof. J. M. Langston, the eloquent colored orator, of Washington. The meeting closed at a late hour with cheers for Hayes and Wheeler.

CENTRAL VERMONT RAILROAD.

A CONSULTATION WITH THE RECEIVER—TRAFFIC TO GO ON WITHOUT INTERRUPTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ST. ALBANS, Oct. 18.—The authorities of the Central Vermont Railroad have been in consultation nearly all day with Mr. Averill, the Receiver, and Mr. John C. Pratt, manager, lately appointed on an ex parte hearing by the New-York Supreme Court, of the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain Railroad, which was yesterday seized from the Central Vermont for non-payment of rent. Arrangements have been perfected whereby business over the Central Vermont and Ogdensburg Roads will go on absolutely without interruption as before. There will be no transfers of passengers or freight, and all existing contracts will be carried out. The appointment of Receiver is a temporary one, and the 31st of this month is set for a full hearing before Judge Landon at Schenectady. The proceedings have been entirely amicable.

WRECK OF A BRITISH SHIP.

THE RYDAL HALL CAST AWAY ON THE CALIFORNIA COAST—NINE OF THE CREW LOST—REFUSAL OF THE CAPTAIN TO LEAVE THE SHIP.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 18.—A dispatch from Spanish Town, about thirty miles down the coast, reports that the ship Rydal Hall, from Cardiff, consigned to Balfour, Guthrie & Co., of this city, was wrecked near there last night at about 8 o'clock. Nine of the crew were lost in trying to get ashore; the balance were taken off this morning by a whaler from a station near by. The Captain is still on board, refusing to come ashore. The ship is fast on the rocks, and the sea is breaking over her. She will probably soon go to pieces.

THE UNION SOLDIERS.

ABSURDITY OF VOTING FOR TILDEN

SOME OF THE REASONS WHY MEN WHO WERE IN THE ARMY OF THE UNION CANNOT REASONABLY BE DEMOCRATS IN THE PRESENT CAMPAIGN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Gen. Joseph Hooker, the President of the Union Soldiers' and Sailors' Reform Association, has called a convention to meet at Albany on Oct. 19, the object of which he declares to be to show to the country that many of its defenders are in favor of the election of Samuel J. Tilden. In connection with this call the Executive Committee of the Association issues an address "to its former comrades in arms, the patriotic soldiers and sailors of America," which appeals to all to whom it is addressed to join its authors in all honorable endeavors for the election of Tilden and Hendricks. By it we are assured that "it is a work inaugurated with the approval and by co-operation of the Democratic National Committee." This address, insincere, inconsistent, and illogical though it is, attempts to present an argument to the Union soldier by which he shall be induced to vote in favor of the Democratic Party, its candidates, and its principles. The question, therefore, naturally arises: Is the Democratic Party entitled to the vote of the Union soldier, either upon its record or upon the case made by this address? I desire to answer this question as briefly as possible, from a soldier's standpoint. The Democratic Party to-day, with cringing flattery, begs the votes of the very men whom fourteen years ago it sought to disfranchise. Evidently that party has forgotten its record; the soldier, however, has not and will not forget it. Early in the war the Legislatures of most, if not all, of the Republican States passed enabling acts allowing their soldiers to vote with their several organizations in the field. These acts were, without exception, passed by an almost strictly party vote. With rare exceptions Democrats were found who were brave enough and loyal enough to break their party shackles and vote in their favor. But that party, as a party, strenuously, persistently, and bitterly opposed them. Especially was this true in this State. Their opposition was based on the ground that the loyal citizens of the Union States, by enlisting in the service of their country thereby lost their citizenship. This was the penalty which the Democratic Party attached to loyalty. While the war lasted, so long as a single soldier voted or was entitled to vote under these acts, this opposition continued. This, however, was not all. The Democratic Party sought to disfranchise the soldier and make loyalty odious in a manner and by means peculiar to itself. This effort was everywhere, in legislative halls, in the party press, and in the speeches of the party leaders characterized by a malignant hatred and coarse abuse of the soldier, not to say disloyalty to country which contrast strangely with the praise and flattery which the same agencies are heaping upon him to-day. Surely the party forgets its past. This opposition, as a mere party measure, was wise in a Democratic sense, as the result proves, or rather would have been if it had been successful. But for the vote of the soldier in the field the anti-war party would have been in the majority in many localities. It is not an unjust inference from these facts that the Democratic opposition to these measures had its real origin in the knowledge that the great majority of soldiers would vote with the war party, which confessedly this party was not. Upon no other ground can that opposition be accounted for. Let that party, if it will, justify itself by the plea that this opposition was necessary as a party measure. But how, let me ask, will that party justify its hatred and abuse heaped upon the soldiers in the field? How will it explain the fact that its public speakers and its press so persistently misrepresented and condemned the motives of the Union soldiers?

Since the passage of the above acts the soldier vote has been an important element in the politics of the country. So important was it during the war that the returns of the soldiers' votes in the field more than once overcame the anti-war Democratic majority of the home vote. With an almost unanimous voice the soldiers many times declared with their ballots, not less than with their muskets, that they were in hearty accord with the sentiments and aims of the Republican Party. Many a would-be anti-war Congressman owed his defeat to this cause. Soldiers, then at least, voted as they fought. Hardly was the peace resolution of August, 1864, adopted by the great anti-war party at Chicago, when it was shot to death by the muskets of the soldiers at Atlanta, Winchester, and Mobile in September. This resolution being dead and its authors infamous, with hardly a dissenting voice the soldiers buried it forever with their ballots in November. Then there was no question how the soldiers would and did vote. They fought to make the war a success. They could not and did not vote to declare the war a failure.

While the soldier vote since the war has lacked somewhat that unanimity which characterized it in the field, it still continues to be as it was then, Republican by an overwhelming majority. It is to overcome and counteract the influence of this fact upon the coming election that the above convention is called. The reason why soldiers continue to vote as they did in 1864 is simple. In 1864 they found the solid South fighting against their Government. They found it in hearty sympathy with the Democratic Party and its infamous peace resolutions. Every rebel soldier was a Democrat. Every shot he fired was fired in the interest of the candidates and platform of the Chicago Convention. He knew that the strongest argument in their favor would be to bring defeat upon the Union cause. The Union soldier also knew what foes he was fighting in front and rear. In 1876 he sees the solid South again in hearty and active sympathy with the candidates and principles of the Democratic Party. Again he hears the rebel yell as lusty and unanimous for Tilden in 1876 as he heard it for McClellan and peace at Winchester. It is no answer to say that the war issues are dead; that Republicans and Democrats ought together for their country's sake "to all lose up as one man" to put down the rebellion. The Democratic Party has its record, which, whether it will or not, will ever rise to curse it. The Union soldier, so long as he remembers this record, cannot vote for the party which sought to disfranchise him and to make the war a failure.

The address of the Executive Committee is worthy of notice chiefly because of the utter weakness of its argument. It deprecates the formation of political organizations by Republican soldiers and condemns them as dangerous to the peace and prosperity of the country. It charges those soldiers who are in favor of the election of Hayes with a desire to rekindle the old feeling of animosity. Then it straightway appeals "to its former comrades in arms" to join with its authors in honorable endeavors for the election of Tilden and Hendricks, and for this purpose "to form into political organization and clubs." Nothing could be more inconsistent or insincere. Is the safety of the country, is its peace and prosperity, lodged in the keeping of the signers of this address? Why else do they do the very thing they deprecate and condemn in others. The address, however, only partakes of the glaring inconsistency and insincerity of its author. By their own statements they are arrayed as against a majority of their comrades in arms with a section of the country, and with a people they helped to overcome in a civil war. They choose for their political friends and associates—not the men by whose side they fought and suffered—but those "comrades" whose loyalty has been tried and found true—but men against whom they fought, men whom they helped to overcome in a civil war, men who were the cause of all their suffering, and whose loyalty is loyalty to treason in arms. Such of their comrades as will not join them in this rebel affiliation they charge with a desire to rekindle the old feeling of animosity and with a lack of patriotism.

The address seeks to remove the false impression "that none of the soldiers of the late war can be expected to vote any other than the Radical ticket." Is there any reason, save it be born of inconsistency and insincerity, why, when the rebel vote, drawn together through sympathy for the lost cause, is cast solid for Tilden, the Union soldiers should not vote solid for Hayes? Whose place is it to yield, he that conquers or he that is conquered? The logic of this address says the latter. It says we must no longer array ourselves against, not simply the people we helped to overcome in a civil war, but the sentiments of that people which unhappily for the country we failed to conquer. It says that we must array ourselves with the people we helped to overcome, else the peace of the country is endangered. It asks that finding that people as unanimous in their rebel sentiments and views as they were during the war, we must adopt their sentiments and views, and thereby show our patriotism. It is, however, a false logic based on false statements. The Republican soldier is not arrayed "against a people who laid down their arms, surrendered to a superior power, and returned to their duty and allegiance more than eleven years ago." On the contrary, it is the people who have not yet returned to their duty and allegiance who are arrayed in as solid column against the Republican soldiers as they ever were upon the field of battle. It is the coast of Southern speakers in the present canvass that the rebel soldier vote is solid for Tilden. This sentiment is better expressed in the refined and patriotic words of Zebulon Vance, who, in a recent speech in North Carolina reminded his hearers that "all the brave Southern heroes who dipped their hands in Union blood are for reform and Tilden." This and kindred expressions which might be multiplied without limit, justify the true impression "that none of the soldiers of the Army of the Union can be expected to vote any other than the Radical ticket."

As a substitute for valid argument, the address makes a bitter attack upon the Grand Army of the Republic. It charges that organization with allowing itself "to be subverse the purposes of engineering sectional strife, perpetuating Radical Republican misrule." This charge is as unjust as it is false and without foundation. The Grand Army of the Republic is in no sense a political organization. None of its objects are political, except it may be that its members are unalterably opposed to every form of treason. It may be this feature of the Grand Army of the Republic to which the address refers. Opposition to treason is apt to engender sectional strife. It has done so in the past. It in the future opposition to treason engenders sectional strife, we may regret the treason, but not the opposition to it. It will be remembered that on the last Decoration Days the Grand Army of the Republic, in localities where rebel dead were buried, did not distinguish between the rebel and loyal graves. Upon each were placed the same emblems of peace. The members of the Grand Army of the Republic decorated the graves of their foes as tenderly as the graves of their comrades. What was the significance of this except to show to the living men of the South that they desire all sectional strife, all hate and bitterness engendered by the war, might be buried in the grave forever? One of the objects in which the Grand Army of the Republic of this State is most deeply interested to-day, is the establishment of a home for those soldiers of the Republic, who, through their services to their country, have become poor. Does this object subserve the purpose of engendering sectional strife? If so, it cannot be true that the people of the South returned to their duty and allegiance more than eleven years ago.

The crowning piece of demagoguery and dishonesty of the address is found in its reference to the Bounty bill passed by the Democratic Party in June. Here we find the chief argument presented why the Union soldier should vote the Democratic ticket. This argument, stripped of its surplusage, is simply this: The Democratic Party passed the Bounty bill. Under the provisions of this bill a large number of soldiers will receive a sum of money. Therefore the soldiers should, in consideration thereof, vote the Democratic ticket. Here we find a direct offer of the people's money to purchase votes for partisan ends. The argument condemns itself. It it needs further answer, the authors of this insult to the honesty and integrity of the soldier will find it in this fact—that the Union soldier does not sell his vote. The address expressly states that it has the sanction and approval of the Democratic National Committee. The Democratic Party, therefore, adopts as a party measure the Bounty act, which at the time of its passage received the merited condemnation of the leading papers of both parties. The manner of its adoption by the managers of that party in the present canvass proves that it was passed with the single purpose of securing votes for the party which was its author. By the passage of this act the party has attempted to assume the rôle of the soldier's friend. Many Democrats in and out of Congress opposed the act, for they saw the absurd position in which it would place their party. It has already been shown that during the war when friendship was of more value to the soldier than money, their party was not the soldier's friend. It can also be shown that when bounties were necessary to procure prompt and large enlistments to fill the depleted ranks of the Army and thus make the war a success, the Democratic Party almost solidly opposed them. That party will search its record in vain to find a single instance during the war when it proposed to offer bounties to encourage enlistments. It is, therefore, justly entitled to each consolation and help as it shall be able to derive from its only child.

The bill proposes to grant to every soldier who served in the Union Army, with certain exceptions, the sum of $$ 33 per month for every month actually served, exclusive of bounties already received. The bill was passed after some discussion, and after the assurance of its champion that the total amount of money which it would take from the Treasury would be less than $10,000,000. The basis upon which the advocates of this measure made their calculations, (see Congressional Record June 21,) was to reduce the aggregate force of men in the field during the whole war to a three years' basis. From this radical reduction it found that the average number of men in the Army from first to last was 1,100,000. This number, less the exceptions mentioned in the act, would be entitled to the additional bounty. Making these deductions, the actual number to be benefited is found to be 579,000. This would give to each man the munificent sum of seventeen dollars provided they all share equally. The smart section of the act fixes the sum to be paid to attorneys and collecting agents at $10 for each claim. The agents and attorneys will therefore be benefited to the extent of ten seventeenths of the total sum of $10,000,000, while the soldiers will receive seven seventeenths. The Democratic party, the soldiers' friend, votes to claim agents the sum of $5,790,000, and to the soldiers the sum of $4,210,000, and this under the guise of generosity to the soldier. Let their party try again. The American soldier cannot be bought at the average price of $7 per head. W. H. BRIGHT.

The figures of yesterday's registration prove that public interest is very powerfully excited on the issues of the present campaign, but we fear that they also prove the existence of a vast and comprehensive scheme of fraudulent voting. We should consider 150,000 a high estimate of the number of legal voters in this city, and assuming everyone to be registered, we should have, after making the usual deduction, about 135,000 as the probable number of those who would deposit their ballots. As the result of two days of registration, there are already enrolled the names of 117,000 alleged voters. Should the registration of the two concluding days bear the usual proportion to the number enrolled during the first two days, we shall have an amount of fraudulent voters on the rolls far in excess of anything ever seen in the palmiest days of the Ring. If Tammany Hall has conceived the idea of outdoing the monstrous election frauds of 1868, it would be well for those who are responsible for such a scheme to consider what might happen were the fate of the Union to turn upon the number of repeaters in the City of New-York, and it would also be well to have some means adopted very promptly for sending a deputation of both leaders and accomplices to the Penitentiary. The law is effective enough, if only it be effectively enforced.

Some further light upon Mr. TILDEN'S character and operations as a mine-owner will be found in the letter from Ishpeming which we publish to-day. It brings out in very strong relief the grasping and unscrupulous character of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. It will be remembered that Mr. TILDEN professed a very tender concern for the rights of working men in the reasons which he assigned for vetoing the Convict Labor bill, and that his remarkable opinions on that subject procured for him a nomination for the Presidency from a meeting of Communists held in New-York last June. In Marquette County, where Mr. TILDEN is known as an employer of labor, he is universally detested among the miners for his share in the shinplaster currency swindle and for the policy of starvation wages adopted at the mine of which he is the chief proprietor. Mr. TILDEN'S share of the profits of the New-York Mine for the present year, will, it is said, reach $100,000, but as his agent remarked, "we let the miners believe we are not making anything, otherwise they would strike." This astute person is evidently a worthy disciple of his employer.

Even the Petersburg Index and Appeal has lost patience with the Tilden Bureau. It is of opinion that "every editor of any self-respect or any fitness for the position he holds is but affronted by the receipt of selections and compositions which strongly suggest that he is not considered, by the Democratic managers, to be competent to discharge his duties." It believes that the Liberty Street Agency "brings the Reform Party into ridicule," and is merely the means of furnishing "employment and salaries to a lot of penny-a-liners and hangers on." Hence it joins with the Sun in moving for the abolition of the "ninompoops." Mr. TILDEN will, doubtless, decline to take the hint. The broadsheets and pamphlets are the means on which he chiefly relies to influence the public mind, and for such results as may be attained he will unquestionably think himself much more indebted to Messrs. PELTON, ANDREWS & CO. than to a score of those brainless editors whom these gentlemen are retained to instruct.

Mr. JOHN MORRISSEY has gone back to Tammany Hall, where he naturally belongs. His friend KELLY is probably prepared to admit that he was mistaken when he said, a year ago, "It would be a disgrace to elect a man like JOHN MORRISSEY to the Senate of the State. He has attempted to make it appear that he is the champion of the laboring man, whereas it is said he never did a day's labor in his life." For these and other uncomplimentary references to MORRISSEY, the "Boss" will doubtless be able to make due amends. MORRISSEY did not bring a very appreciable accession of character to the Anti-Tammany movement—albeit very much the superior of KELLY—and he will take very little either of character or votes away with him.

The Republican County Convention of Kings has nominated a coalition ticket. Two Democrats of unimpeachable character have been nominated for Surrogate and Commissioner of Charities respectively, while for the offices of Register and County Clerk two Republicans of acknowledged strength within the party have been placed in nomination. The very close connection which exists between Mr. TILDEN and the members of the Brooklyn Ring ought to open the eyes of the voters of Kings County to the character of the sham "Reform" candidate for the Presidency. "Boss" MCLAUGHLIN is one of the men whom TILDEN has delighted to honor, and he forms a very fitting associate for the WEEDS, the APGARS, and the HAMMONDS who do TILDEN'S wire-pulling in the interior of the State. There can be no question that the strong ticket which the Republicans have placed in the field for local offices in Brooklyn will not only have a very excellent chance of success on its own merits, but will have the effect of increasing the vote for the National and State tickets in Kings County.

NEW-YORK.

We give below a table, embodying certain facts in connection with the vote of New-York State for the past eight years, which may be studied with advantage. The table shows the majority by which the State has been carried each year; the Democratic majorities in this City and in Kings County, and in the two united; the Republican majorities outside of New-York and Kings, and the total vote in the State. In each of the last three years the Temperance vote is added to that of the Republicans in dividing the majorities between what may be called the Metropolitan district and the remainder of the State.

Year.	Majority in State.....	Dem. majority in N. Y. City.....	Rep. majority in N. Y. and Kings Co.	Dem. majority in County.....	Dem. majority in City.....	Rep. majority in N. Y. and Kings Co.	Rep. majority outside of N. Y. and Kings Co.	Total vote.

* Temperance vote, 3,238.

‡‡ Temperance vote, 11,103.

The feature in this record which will first strike any careful observer, is the extreme apparent uncertainty as to which party the State of New-York sustains. It has elected the Democratic ticket on a pretty full vote, as in 1874, and rejected it on a fuller vote, as in 1872. It has gone Democratic on a very light vote, as in 1869 and 1873, and Republican on the next lighest vote, as in 1871.

In 1868 the election was wholly exceptional, having been marked by the greatest frauds. Mr. GRISWOLD undoubtedly received the vote of New-York for Governor, as the Grant electors ticket did in the Presidential contest. But the Governor's chair was given to HOFFMAN and the electoral vote to SEYMOUR. A more disgraceful chapter does not exist in the history of American politics. We include that year in our table because the majorities in New-York City and Brooklyn were the largest they have ever been, and much larger than they can be now, unless similar frauds are practiced.

It will be seen that the highest Democratic majority in New-York and Kings, after 1868, was in 1870, when the Ring was making a desperate attempt to intrench itself against the attacks of THE TIMES, and when the public had not yet been fully aroused. In that year the Democrats returned 52,277 majority in this City and 12,869 in Brooklyn, 65,146 in both. The next largest majority in the Metropolitan district was given two years ago, when the Democrats, under the influence of a powerful reaction against the Republicans, got 42,528 majority in New-York and 12,998 in Kings, in both, 55,526. In other years the united majorities in New-York and Kings have ranged, in round numbers, between 28,000 and 50,000. On a fair vote, the average Democratic majority in these two cities should be not more than 45,000, even in an exciting contest. It would not be safe, however, for the Republicans of New-York to count on that limit this year. The Democrats are again in the most desperate mood. Every possible means will be used to swell their majority in this City. They will aim, by fair means or foul, to reach the pretended majority of 1868, or at least that of 1870.

It lies in the power of the Republican Party, however, to defeat any majority that can be obtained in New-York and Kings this year. The vote of 1872 would do it, and with the aid we now have from Liberals who were that year in the enemy's camp, there is no reason why that vote should not be repeated. Then the Republicans came to the City of New-York with nearly eighty thousand majority. It was the fruit of a campaign of great activity and well-directed effort. The Republican managers this year can achieve a like result by like means.

The history of the past eight years shows that New-York is a very uncertain State, but that with the full Republican vote out, and a fair election secured, it can be carried for the Republicans. This year they have many things in their favor. Gov. MORGAN is a strong candidate, who unites the party. The State is represented on the national ticket by Mr. WHEELER, a man of great popularity. Gov. MORGAN ought to reduce the Democratic majority at this end of the State, and Mr. WHEELER ought to help greatly in overbalancing it at the other end. Mr. TILDEN, on the other hand, arrays against himself many powerful antagonisms. He is opposed openly and bitterly by some of the strongest men of his party, and not less bitterly, though secretly, by others. His personal reputation has suffered severely by the searching exposures of the campaign, and he is widely distrusted on account of his weakness and duplicity as to the important issue of the finances. A strong element, moreover, of his party revolts at the subserviency it has shown to Southern dictation and the perils, financial and political, with which its success threatens the country. Looking the ground over fairly, we believe that the Republican Party can defeat Mr. TILDEN'S ambition in his own State. They cannot expect an easy victory, but with sustained, watchful, and vigorous effort, they may look forward to a certain one.

WAR OR PEACE?

There is no doubt of the gravity of the news from Eastern Europe. The whole face of affairs has changed within a few days. The Czar has opposed the proposition of an armistice for six months on the ground that it would be burdensome and injurious to Servia and Montenegro, and would not improve the condition of the Christian subjects of the Porte. Servia, or in other words the Russian Revolutionary Party which governs it, has rejected it also. Turkey has not precisely accepted the English proposals, but has deferred them by announcing that she will introduce reforms throughout the whole Empire which will satisfy the Christian powers. These, however, are not the recent events which have caused almost a panic in Europe. The alarming occurrence has been the mission of Gen. SUMAROKOFF from the Czar to the Emperor of Austria—a diplomatic messenger who had been previously sent to Prince Milan to congratulate him on his marriage. The proposals of this diplomat have leaked out, and there seems no doubt that Russia has offered to Austria a joint occupancy of European Turkey, the latter power taking temporary possession of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the former of Bulgaria, Servia being left to herself. An Austro-Russian fleet is then to watch the Bosphorus. Under this plan, European Turkey will be essentially wiped out, or, at all events, placed under foreign occupancy. The Christians would be protected in the best possible manner. Turkish oppression would be checked summarily, and the Eastern question, so far as the Provinces are concerned, be finally solved. But under this arrangement Russia would gain or regain a new foothold near the mouth of the Danube, in all probability through the proposed port of Montenegro, would find a harbor for her fleet on the Adriatic, and, with Austria, control the great entrepôt for Eastern commerce, Constantinople. Turkey, of course, could only submit to such a degradation after a severe defeat. Such a settlement would only be made after a great war between Turkey and the two imperial powers. In such a war, would the other European powers be kept at a distance? Would England be drawn in? Would Germany assist Russia? These are the questions which have so excited and alarmed Europe.

The telegrams from the articles in leading European journals indicate a fear that Austria will accept this proposition of the Czar. But we doubt it, for the following reasons: Count ANDRASSY is a Hungarian, and the controlling sentiment in the Vienna Cabinet is Hungarian in its direction. The Magyars are notoriously opposed to strengthening the Sclavonic influence, and are favorable to Turkey. The last thing they would desire would be a new Sclavonic State on their eastern borders, or a new foothold of Russia on the Lower Danube. Joint occupation would mean in time either a new Sclavonic State or a new Russian Province and a new Sclavonic addition to Austro-Hungary.

The Magyars can hardly hold their own now against the Slavs in the Austrian and Hungarian Parliaments. They will not be likely to risk a great war in order to increase the number of these Deputies. A war against Turkey would be popular nowhere in Austria. Then, the finances of the Empire are in the last degree unfavorable to the undertaking of a new war. It is true that Austria may reasonably calculate on Turkey finding no ally in Germany, for the Czar could hardly have ventured so far in negotiations without being sure of the future position of his uncle, the Emperor WILLIAM. The great interest of the German Empire is, moreover, obviously to remain in harmony with Russia, in preparation for the future grand struggle with France, which always looms ominously in the distance. Still, the rulers of Europe know only too well that the fires of war can be easily kindled, but no one can predict where or when they will be quenched. It cannot be at all certain to Austria that England will not protect Turkey. It would be strongly probable that she would never consent to an Austro-Russian occupancy of Constantinople. All these considerations will tend to hold back the Austrian Emperor from this dangerous alliance. On the other hand, it may be that the proposals look only to a temporary occupancy, and that the two powers hope to effect it without a war with Turkey, and thus bring about a settlement of the question. In this case, however, Austria would only act with the consent of the other European powers, and a joint occupancy by all would check all ambitious projects by either of the two Empires. It is possible that the Russian proposal will result in this, which would certainly be the best conclusion. A European occupation of the insurgent and oppressed Provinces would settle the whole question and bring about the desired end—the cessation of Turkish absolute rule in Europe and the formation of new self-governing Sclavonic States.

THE DEMOCRACY AND THE WAR CLAIMS.

West Virginia arrays itself with the "solid South" on the question of war claims. That State cuts a large figure in the preposterous list of demands presented to Congress at its late session. And it is noticeable that in regions where these claims are most numerously held the Democracy have their greatest strength. This is not an accidental coincidence. Gradually we are coming to a clear understanding of the determination of the ex-rebels to secure payment for the property destroyed in the South during the rebellion. They invited war. In the prosecution of that war much property was wiped out of existence. This was particularly true of West Virginia, which in the early campaigns was repeatedly fought over. The private relief bills from that State are, accordingly, very large. One man demands $204,600; another wants $54,700, and Mr. HEREFORD, who, as Chairman of the House Committee of Commerce, proposed to improve the mill-creeks of West Virginia at public cost, has a modest claim in the House for $15,000. One claimant demands pay for sixty chickens, another for several chicken-coops, another for fence-rails, and one exacting petitioner puts in a claim for a horse valued at $2,300, and two barrels of sugar at $50 each. The curiosities of some of these bills would furnish interesting reading to the tax-payers, but the sum total is something astonishing. Including the proposed refunding of the cotton tax, the direct tax, and the private claims, Congress has been asked to pay about $4,500,000,000 on Southern account. It is expected that the United States will pay the costs of both parties engaged in the late conflict.

In West Virginia, we find, the numerous claimants have not been able to suppress their exultation over the anticipation of full payment of all war claims. The Republicans fought a good fight in that State, but there was no such thing as moving the men who believed that the triumph of the Democracy meant cash for their bills for damages. These men are now so elated over their hopeful prospects that they do not hesitate to boast of the good time coming, when the United States Government will pay for all the damages of the war. This is perfectly well understood in other States, but in West Virginia, where the people have longer brooded over their losses, there is more outspokenness, possibly, than in other localities. There is no reason why such claimants should not expect that the triumph of the Democracy should insure the payment of their bills. In fact, all of the initiatory steps have been taken by the Democratic House of Representatives. As we have seen, the so-called war claims introduced at the late session of Congress amount to thousands of millions. No action was asked upon these; they were simply presented and referred. They are to be considered when Congress meets, after the Presidential election. Whatever may then be their fate, it is certain that they will be pressed again and again, and the "solid South" will demand of a Democratic Administration, whenever we have one, that these demands shall be paid. The usual answer to any statement of this alarming conspiracy is that the amended Constitution forbids the payment of such claims as these. The men who make that rejoinder know how disingenuous it is. The amendment simply bars assumption of any portion of the rebel debt and compensation for lost slaves. Heretofore, Congressional legislation has provided for the payment only of claims of citizens who were loyal to the Union. There is now in the House of Representatives a bill, left over from the last session, which is designed to change all this. By the passage of this bill it will be enacted that the Secretary of War shall pay the claims of all persons who lost property during the war, provided a single witness shall certify that such loss was caused by the use or occupation of the Union forces. At one blow it is proposed to remove all Southern war claims from the Claims Commission and give them to the Secretary of War for adjudication. No distinction between the assailants and defenders of the Union is to be made. How WADE HAMPTON, for example, would act as Secretary of War were these claims laid before him, we need not ask.

As if to make the way still plainer, another bill yet in the files of the House, and in a condition to be acted upon, provides for the opening of the District Courts in the South for the admission of all kinds of war claims. And the House Committee on War Claims have enunciated the extraordinary doctrine that a pardoned or amnestied rebel is, to all intents and purposes, as fully entitled to recover damages for seized or destroyed property, as if he had been loyal during the war. In the case of PIERNELL and BROOCKS, the committee reported that "the proof of such pardon is equivalent to affirmative proof, under the statute of captured and abandoned property, that the party never gave aid and comfort to the rebellion." It is easy to see how wide a door to the public Treasury this theory would open, if it were once an established principle of the legislation of Congress. These are all steps in the direction of the recognition and payment of some of the most outrageous claims ever presented to any Government. In the first flush of a Democratic triumph, at the opening of the present Congress, there was an imperious demand for the payment of these bills of damages, and for the abolition of all barriers to the allowance of rebel claims. The Democratic majority in the House cunningly deferred action on any of the proposed measures. It is the intention of the party leaders to keep quiet about this business until after the Presidential election. But the claimants are indiscreet. They think they are sure of a Democratic Administration, and a Democratic Administration is to pay the Southern war losses. The triumph of the Democracy will mean to them a free entrance into the Treasury. Already they have begun to boast of their prospects.

AN INCONSIDERATE GIFT.

It is related that when WOLFE lay wounded on the Plains of Abraham a noisy and inconsiderate staff officer suddenly cried: "They fly! They fly!" "Shoo, fly!" sternly exclaimed the dying but exasperated hero, "let me die in peace"—— and immediately expired.

This touching historical anecdote will naturally recur to every one who reads of the late noble conduct of the King of the Fiji Islands. As is generally known, the British Government recently assumed a protectorate over the Fijians. It is not easy to explain precisely what a protectorate is, but there is no difficulty in understanding its results. When Mr. SAMUEL J. TILDEN assumes a protectorate over a railway company, the result is that in a brief space of time all the stock of the company is stowed away in Mr. TILDEN'S strong box, and the original stockholders are wandering over the country hunting for a lost railroad. In like manner, when the British Government becomes the protector of an Indian or Polynesian nation, that nation's property immediately passes into the hands of British agents, and the natives are notified to call at the Collector's office and pay their taxes. It will thus be seen that there is a wide difference between protecting and conquering a country, and good men are delighted to find that the former course is now uniformly preferred to the latter by the British Government.

As has been said, the Fiji Islands have passed under the protection of Great Britain, and as one of the consequences of this political change, the Fijian King has been relieved to some extent of the duty of personally eating his plumper subjects. Being thus at leisure, and needing to distract his attention from the emptiness of his larder he has investigated the workings of the missionary system in his dominions, and has become filled with admiration for the noble and devoted missionaries. In the days when he was well fed, this monarch cared nothing for the average missionary, and was accustomed to remark that the presence that a missionary had a peculiarly delicate flavor was all nonsense, and that for his part he preferred the simple citizen of his own country, roasted by a native cook, to the best of the high-priced British or American viands that self-styled epicures pretended to admire. Now, however, he looks upon the missionary with hungry and unprejudiced eyes, and perceives that the men who have sacrificed everything to come and teach his savage subjects are deserving of the utmost gratitude and honor that he can give them. Especially does he admire the efforts of the London Missionary Society, which, in his opinion, sends out a finer quality of missionary than any other society has sent; and as a proof of his high opinion of this noble organization he has just sent to its Chairman seven young and valuable wives, accompanied by a polite note begging the Chairman's acceptance of the trifling gift.

Of course, there are those who will suspect that the Fijian King entertains a vague hope of throwing off the British protectorate, and that he wants to provide himself with materials for a banquet in celebration of that event. There is, however, really no sufficient reason for thus doubting the disinterested motives of the King. He says that he admires the London Missionary Society, and feels kindly toward its Chairman. It would be unkind to look seven gift wives in the mouth, and to impute a hungry, instead of an honorable, motive to the giver; and it would be grossly discourteous to intimate that a King does not tell the truth.

If, as is alleged, these seven young and confiding wives are now on their way to London, the question arises what will the Chairman of the society do when they reach him? If they are delivered at his door by the express company during his absence from home, his original wife will probably have them standing in the hall to await his return, and will promptly betake herself to her father's house, a prey to poignant doubts as to the real results of missionary labor. If the Chairman is at home, and receives the seven wives himself, he will find it a difficult task to explain matters to his wife's satisfaction, even if he takes refuge in prevarication and alleges that the wives have been consigned to him purely for instruction, or that they are intended for Mr. SPURGEON, or some other friend. No matter how astutely he endeavors to smooth over the matter, he cannot expect a British matron to believe that when her husband has a package of seven wives openly delivered at his front door, he is conducting himself in a way that deserves her affection and respect.

If the unhappy Chairman refuses to receive the King's present, and leaves the seven young Fijians upon the hands of the express company, he will be guilty of exposing his heathen fellow-creatures to misery and starvation. The express company will not undertake to support seven hungry young women, and the Police will never permit them to appear on the streets clad in the simple garb of their native land. The Chairman of a missionary society who ignores the Fijian at his own front door cannot, with any consistency, pretend to care for the Fijian ten thousand miles away. Either he must accept the King's present at the price of the ruin of his domestic peace, or he must refuse it and ruin his reputation as a consistent supporter of the missionary cause. It is seldom that an excellent and deserving man is put in so perplexing and dangerous a predicament.

It is said that the Fijian King was duly warned by the British Admiral that the Chairman of the London Missionary Society would not be permitted to marry the seven gratuitous wives. "Then let him eat them," was the generous monarch's reply. Of course, the Chairman cannot do this without creating remark, and perhaps incurring the condemnation of the stricter part of the press. There really seems to be no way out of his difficulties except that of immediate flight to some region where the express business is unknown. Let him take his family and instantly emigrate to Greenland. There he can cool his excited brain, and pass the remainder of his days in striving to forgive the generous but inconsiderate monarch who has buried his reputation under an avalanche of wives.

"SOUTHERN CLAIMS."

WHAT THE ELECTION IN WEST VIRGINIA HAS DEMONSTRATED—THE "BOTTOM FACT" AS TO THE DEMOCRATIC VICTORY—THE COMING REBEL RAID ON THE NATIONAL TREASURY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The late election in this State, when fully considered, teaches a most valuable lesson to the country. As a teaching it is of more importance than the election in Ohio or Indiana. Ohio is shown to be reliably Republican; Indiana is shown to be so close that a third party with little strength can cause the defeat of the Republicans; West Virginia is shown to be, for the present at any rate, firmly fixed in her adhesion to the "solid South." The reasons for this, and especially the principal reason of all—the "bottom fact" in the case—are of general interest. They cannot be too well known, nor too carefully considered by all the people of the North.

In the late election the Republicans gained very largely in several counties and very handsomely in others, making an aggregate gain of nearly three thousand votes in ten or a dozen counties. All these gains were in the northern portion of the State and in counties which have heretofore been close or reliably Republican. They were utterly and greatly overborne by Democratic gains in the counties bordering on old Virginia and those adjacent thereto, and in those of "the Kanawha district" generally. In the counties where the Republicans did actually gain their enthusiasm was so great, their meetings so large, their canvassing so thorough, that they really believed they would give the Democracy a tremendous scare, if not a downright drubbing.

And they had many good reasons to anticipate an encouraging result. They had an excellent State ticket, and the Democrats had a poor one, headed by an ex-rebel Colonel. The State under Democratic administration has been extravagantly, corruptly governed. No "carpet-bag" State was ever worse governed than West Virginia has been governed by the Democracy. All the argument was on the side of the Republicans and against the Democracy. This was so apparent that Democratic candidates refused to meet the Republicans in joint discussion on the stump, except in a few instances where they could not with decency decline, and wherever these debates did take place there were Republican gains. And yet, though all the genuine arguments and all the enthusiasm were with the Republicans, they were unmercifully beaten at the polls. The principal, the paramount reason for this lies in a fact which it is of the utmost importance for the people of the North to understand. And it is because of that fact that the lesson of the West Virginia election is of more value than that of Ohio or Indiana. Small though the State is, it has shown the true meaning of Democracy so plainly that no man need mistake.

The Democratic victory in West Virginia was based upon the confident faith that the success of the party in November, the election of Tilden, would insure the payment by the General Government of what are now commonly called "the Southern claims,"—all those general and private claims, that is, which rest upon the losses of the Southern people, by Federal taxation or otherwise, in consequence of the war for the Union. These claims, as is well known, which have already been presented in Congress, amount to about as much as the whole national debt. Millions on millions more are to come. This State has many hundreds of them, amounting to millions which have never yet been presented. In order to show what a powerful influence these monstrous claims exerted in the late election, it will be well to recur to the facts of history. All will recollect that what is now West Virginia was the first considerable battle-field of the war. It was here that Gen. McClellan won his first laurels, chiefly through the achievements of his lieutenant, Rosecrans. There were many combats, many notable affairs, innumerable marchings and countermarchings in what is now West Virginia. Later, there was continual partisan warfare, and no end of raids. Large numbers of citizens left the State and united their fortunes with the Confederacy. They left their homes in the care of women and children, and men too old for military service. Now these same fellows come to the front again, hundreds of them with "claims"—claims for hen-roosts, for fences destroyed, for timber cut down, for horses and mules, for agricultural products, for buildings torn down, for pretty much everything, including slaves emancipated. I know of one man in this county who proposes to press a claim for fifteen slaves which belonged to his now deceased mother—his "man," as he calls her. On account of the nature of the war in West Virginia there are very many of these "claims" in the State. They, in fact, represent several millions of dollars. With Hayes elected they are not worth a penny, but with Tilden President they would at once command money in the market, and, as the West Virginia Democrats religiously believe, would speedily be paid in the shape of interest-bearing bonds, on which the cash could be realized.

It was the noiseless but most industrious and efficient labors of the men holding these claims which gave the Democracy so large a majority in West Virginia. Of course they fought shy of the Republican counties, doing their main work in counties notoriously rebel, and now overwhelmingly Democratic. They played their game with great shrewdness and reticence, but their triumph was so great, and they are now so confident, since the Indiana election, of electing Tilden, that they have, in many instances divulged the secret of their success, so that there can be no doubt of it. There is no more doubt that the great reason why West Virginia joined the "solid South" in the late election was on account of this scheme of the payment of Southern claims than there is that the sun shines by day or the stars twinkle by night. It is "the bottom fact" clearly and perfectly explaining the whole thing. And it is the only fact which can clearly and perfectly explain the whole thing. It is, moreover, part and parcel of the general Democratic policy. When the business of these Southern claims were presented at the last session of Congress were they rejected? Not one of them. There was a simple plan adopted—"wait." Pardon, the removal of disabilities, metamorphosed, according to the logic of Democratic committees, a rebel into a Union man. Thus the last bulwark of defense against these claims was demolished. That is not all. Large numbers of Government employés, clerks, &c., were dispensed with, and the salaries of others were reduced. But were the taxes reduced? Not one farthing, either through the tariff or internal revenue. Why not? The receipts, with the old salaries and all the old employés were in excess of the expenditures, and we were largely reducing the public debt. Why, with the reduction of expenditures, was there not a reduction of taxation? There can be but one answer to this question. Either the reduction of expenditures was a fraud and a sham, got up for electioneering purposes, or the failure to reduce taxation was intended as a part of the policy of the payment of "Southern claims." This is what the West Virginia Democrats thought, and they worked and voted accordingly.

I give you the plain facts. It is not for me to comment on them. I know, however, that if the people of the North generally knew now certain it is that a Democratic victory means the payment of these immense Southern claims, not one Northern State would vote for Tilden. Thus, the election in West Virginia completely demonstrates, in the entertainment to which you of the North are invited. The question as to doing it for you to decide. We are utterly helpless. A WEST VIRGINIA REPUBLICAN.

GRAFTON, West Va., Monday, Oct. 16, 1876.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The Democratic ticket for State officers in South Carolina is made up of three Generals, two Colonels, one Major, and two Captains—all ex-rebels.

The Petersburg (Va.) Index-Appeal calls the Liberty Street Bureau a nuisance, and wants no more of its trash, saying it is not worth the space it would occupy.

Gen. M. C. Butler, Gen. Gary, Gen. McGowan, Gen. Kershaw, Gen. Chesnut, and Gen. Robert Toombs are on the stump for Gen. Wade Hampton in South Carolina.

Speaking of a Democratic Congressional Convention in Massachusetts, the Springfield Republican says that "the opening prayer was dispensed with, but a collection was taken up for the expenses."

The difficulties over the Republican nomination for the Assembly in the Second District of Rensselaer County have been removed, and Mr. Eugene L. Demers pledges his support to Mr. Filkins, the regular nominee, and urges his friends to join him.

Poor Holman! Even the New-Orleans Times, usually so mild-mannered when Democrats are mentioned, goes so far as to say that if any one of the Indiana Democratic Congressmen was to be sacrificed, it had as lief see Holman go by the board as anybody.

The Democrats of the Tenth District of Massachusetts first nominated Judge David Aiken for Congress. He refused to run, and then they filled the aching void with Mr. S. O. Lamb, a Greenfield lawyer, who did not want the nomination, but took it.

Jubal Early was called upon for a speech in Abingdon, Va., a few days ago, but refused upon the ground that this was not the time for him to make a speech. Early believes in the still hunt. After the election will be, or will not be, his time, as the contest may result.

There is something striking about the Congressional elections. The Democrats began with a confident hope of gaining two in Maine. They gained none. In Ohio and Indiana they lost nine altogether. And in neither did they gain a single district which had been Republican.

The Chicago Tribune of Tuesday says: "The Republicans of West Virginia made a strong effort to elect a Congressman in the Wheeling district." As the people of West Virginia will not elect their Congressmen until November, the Tribune must not become impatient because "the returns of the district are not yet all in."

At a Democratic meeting in Nashville, Tenn., ex-Gov Neill S. Brown commended "Blue Jeans" Williams' "economy," and in illustration of it, said: "He saw that every committee-room had twelve towels furnished it. He thought that was too much. Why, he said that one towel would do a family down in Indiana a whole week."

Dr. William R. Wilmer has withdrawn his acceptance of the independent reform nomination for Congress in the Fifth District of Maryland, is not having been indorsed by the Republican convention. He urges all the reformers to vote for Hayes and Wheeler, the ticket which is the embodiment of honesty, and for the Republican candidate for Congress.

The Republicans of the Fifth District of Georgia have every inducement to exert themselves to secure the election of William Markham, their candidate for Congress. It is the reluctant admission of the Democrats that he is worthy of the trust. He is an old and respected citizen of Atlanta, was a Union man, and since the war has been a Republican. He is a man of wealth, of high social position and reputable character, and many of his fellow-citizens of Democratic antecedents are saying: "He is of our city, a good enough man, and no harm can come of voting for him. Give him a trial."

Hon. Sobieski Ross, declining a re-election to Congress from Pennsylvania, said: "I am deeply sensible of the honor you have conferred upon me in unanimously nominating me for a third term in Congress, and I accept this mark of confidence on the part of the Republicans of the Sixteenth District with unfeigned gratitude. But while serving the people to the best of my ability at Washington my private affairs have been more or less neglected, and the completion of the Jersey Shore, Pine Creek and Buffalo Railroad, a work of supreme importance to the interests of a part of this district, will demand more of my time and attention than I could give in, if I should accept again the public position so generously tendered to me."

IMPUDENCE OF SITTING BULL.

HIS PROPOSITION TO BE ALLOWED TO COME TO AN AGENCY TO TRADE FOR AMMUNITION REFUSED—INDIAN TALES OF THE CUSTER FIGHT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The Commissioner of Indian Affairs to-day received a letter from Indian Agent Mitchell, dated Fort Peck, Montana, Sept. 25, conveying the surprising intelligence that Sitting Bull coolly asks permission for his warriors to come to that agency to trade for ammunition. The letter also gives some interesting information concerning other matters. Agent Mitchell writes as follows: "Little Buck-Elk, an Uncapapa, Chief of the Soldiers' Band, arrived here on the evening of the 23d inst., six nights out from Sitting Bull's camp, bearing a message from him to myself. Sitting Bull sent him to ascertain whether I would allow the hostiles to come in and trade for ammunition. I dispatched a messenger to his camp, informing him that they should get no ammunition here or on this reservation, but if they desired to come in and surrender their arms and all Government property in their possession, I would treat them kindly and provide for them until I could receive instructions from you. I will receive a reply from Sitting Bull within ten days or two weeks. Little Buck-Elk stated that he was in the fight in which Gen. Custer and all his men were slaughtered, and that eleven different tribes were engaged in the fight. He said the Indians were as thick as bees at the fight, and that there were so many of them that they could not all take part in it; that the soldiers were all brave men and fought well; that some of them, when they found themselves surrounded and overpowered, broke through the lines and tried to make their escape, but were pursued and killed, miles from the battle ground. One soldier, who had a faster horse than the rest, made his escape into the bad lands, and after he had ridden seven or eight miles accidentally ran into a war party of Indians and was killed by them. This soldier rode a big horse with flaxen mane, and had a Government saddle and gray saddle blanket, but it is not known whether he was an officer or not. He also stated that they captured six battle flags, and that no soldiers were taken alive; but after the fight the women went among the dead bodies and robbed and mutilated them. There were plenty of watches and money taken from them, which the young warriors are now wearing in their shirts and belts. Little Buck-Elk promised Agent Mitchell that if the watch belonging to Lieut. Crittenden could

THE NATIONAL CONTEST.

THE SITUATION IN THIS STATE.

A LIBERAL STRONGHOLD THAT WILL GIVE A LARGE REPUBLICAN MAJORITY—MR. APGAR'S GAMBLING DEBTS—HEWITT'S "MULES" FEARED BY THE REPUBLICANS OF SCHUYLER COUNTY.

From Our Special Correspondent.

ITHACA, Tuesday, Oct. 17, 1876.

There is probably a larger percentage of Liberals in Tompkins County who still continue to affiliate with the Democracy than in any part of the State. Early in the campaign George W. Schuyler, who resides in Ithaca, called a conference of the brethren, with a view to persuading them to indorse Tilden in a body. He succeeded after a good deal of discussion in getting a resolution to that effect adopted by a vote of 14 to 13, and went back to Albany and told his master, Tilden, that he had "fixed" the Liberal Party of Tompkins County for Tilden and reform beyond peradventure. But he was greatly mistaken. Even in this county less than one-third of the Liberals of 1872 will vote for Tilden. None of them are working for him, unless it be a few who have been bought up with an office, like Schuyler. The Republicans expect to poll a larger majority for Hayes and Wheeler than has been cast in this county for many years. The canvass that has been made thus far indicates that this will be the case. The people are getting aroused since the October elections, and the boasting of the Democrats over what they claim as a great victory, coupled with the bare possibility that the Government of the country for the next four years may be turned over to the late rebels, will have the effect to bring every man out to the polls in November. Samuel H. Wilcox, Chairman of the Republican County Committee, Senator Selkreg, and other leading Republicans, estimate the majority in the county this Fall at from 500 to 800 on the Presidential ticket. On local officers there is more uncertainty. S. H. Halliday, Democrat, who represented the county in the Assembly last year, it is thought, may be re-elected. He is a graduate of Cornell University, and receives the support of nearly all the students who are entitled to a vote. Last year he ran 600 ahead of his party; but party lines will be more strictly drawn this Fall, and with a fuller Republican vote he may be defeated. The Republicans have nominated Silas R. Wikes, of Trumansburg, a new man, said to be very popular in his neighborhood, but not much known through the county. The Republicans are holding meetings every night in all parts of the county, and the speakers report a large attendance and unusual interest in the canvass. Among the local speakers here are Major Tyler, Senator Selkreg, Mr. Dwight, the candidate for Congress from this district. Dr. Newcomb, and others. The Democrats had spouting around this county and Tioga during the past week the notorious little E. K. Apgar, who is supposed to be serving the State as Deputy Secretary under that eminent civil service reformer John Bigelow. Apgar hails from Ithaca, that is to say, he was born here; but his townsmen say he left the county for the county's good. He is not in very good odor here, even with the Democracy, but they say he is glib-tongued and makes a good speech, and does well enough to sound the praises of Sam Tilden. That is a business that does not require much character anyway, in the opinion of some Democrats hereabouts, and Apgar answers as well as anybody else. His gambling debts are at a discount here as well as in Albany. It is said that an eminent Democrat of Watkins, Schuyler County, has $12,000 worth of them that he would like to dispose of cheap.

Lucina Robinson will not draw any votes outside of his party in Tompkins, Tioga, Broome, or Schuyler County. There are a few Democrats who will not vote for Tilden who may vote for Robinson, but he will get no Republican votes. A canvass of Cornell University shows more than three-fourths of the students and professors in favor of the Republican ticket for President. There are about six hundred students, and about half of them will vote here in November. President Andrew D. White sailed for Europe last week, but he took the precaution to "pair off" with a Democrat on the vote for President before leaving. Had he not been able to do so, he declared he would not have gone to Europe till after the election. If all the Republicans in the State had the same estimate of the right to vote, and would exercise the privilege, Democracy would have a poor show in New-York.

Schuyler County is the only county in this Congressional District that may possibly give a majority for Tilden. The Republicans, however, estimate from 200 to 300 majority for Hayes and Wheeler. There is a good deal of disaffection in the Democratic ranks in this county at the nomination of Tilden, and one of the most prominent and influential Democrats in the county, George McGee, of Watkins, openly declares he will not vote for the "old fraud." The Republicans of Schuyler have renominated Dr. Gulick for the Assembly, and he will probably be elected. The Republicans say that the only thing to be dreaded in Schuyler County is Hewitt's "mules." Keep them away and they say they will carry the county by 500 majority.

THE OHIO CAMPAIGN.

DEMOCRATIC REPRESENTATIVES INDULGING IN MUTUAL CONDOLENCES—THE REPUBLICAN PARTY STRONGLY UNITED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 18.—There was a meeting of representative Democrats and "reformers" here to-day, from different parts of the State, for the purpose of indulging in mutual condolence over the late elections, and to devise plans for keeping up the Democratic thunder till November for outside effect. Tilden's Ohio barrel having been exhausted, it was decided to resort to proclamations, and one was accordingly agreed upon and will be published to-morrow.

The Republican State Committee is receiving assurances from all parts of the State that the Republican vote in November will greatly exceed that of October. An active canvass is still being made throughout the State, and will be maintained till the end. The President's South Carolina proclamation is universally indorsed by Republicans, and will invigorate the party.

CONGRESSIONAL NOMINATIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Oct. 18.—The Democratic Congressional Convention held here this afternoon was all at sea for a candidate till within a half hour of organizing. Four men were hotly pressed, one after another, to take the nomination, but positively refused. At last J. Mansfield Davies, of Fishkill, cheerfully, as he termed it, accepted the honor, and his nomination has fallen like a wet blanket on the party. The delegates have gone home conceding that John H. Ketchum will be elected by an overwhelming majority. The nomination of Davies and the convention were the greatest farce ever enacted in this district. Dutchess County will surely elect two Republican members of Assembly and the district a Republican Congressman, and the county will beat Tilden 2,000.

MIDDLETOWN, Oct. 18.—At the Republican Convention of the Fourteenth New-York District, which was held here to-day, Michael H. Hirschelberg, of Newburg, Orange County, was nominated for Congress.

NEWARK Oct. 18.—The Sixth District Congressional Democratic Convention nominated William A. Righter for Congress to-day.

THE KINGS COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

CONFERENCE WITH THE INDEPENDENT DEMOCRATS—A TICKET WHICH IS SURE OF BEING ELECTED—EVERY CITIZEN IN FAVOR OF HONEST GOVERNMENT WILL VOTE FOR IT.

The Kings County Republican Convention was held yesterday at the Republican Headquarters on Court, near Montague street, Brooklyn. At 2 o'clock the convention was called to order by the Hon. W. W. Goodrich, who made an effective speech on the issues of the campaign. At the conclusion of Mr. Goodrich's address, which was received with applause, Charles Small and Col. L. H. Rowan were, on motion of Mr. John F Henry, appointed temporary secretaries. The credentials of the delegates were then handed in, and after the roll had been called, Albert Daggett was elected Chairman on motion of Mr. Reeves, of the Fourth Ward. Mr. Daggett briefly returned thanks for his election, and asked the pleasure of the convention. Mr. Charles McLaughlin, a delegate from the Independent Democratic Convention, then in session, handed up the following communication, which was read:

ROOMS OF THE KINGS COUNTY DEMOCRATIC GENERAL COMMITTEE, NOS. 177 AND 179 MONTAGUE ST., BROOKLYN, OCT 18, 1876.

To the Chairman and Members of the Kings County Republican Convention:

GENTLEMEN: I have the honor to communicate to your body that the Convention called by the Kings County Democratic General Committee for the purpose of nominating candidates for county officers, is now in session, and has appointed a committee to confer with you upon the propriety of nominating a joint ticket for local officers and securing a better county government.

Yours respectfully,
GEORGE B. BROWER, President.

On motion of Mr. Dutcher, a committee of seven to confer with the Democrats was appointed, and the convention, to give opportunity for the conference, adjourned until 3:30 o'clock. The committee was appointed as follows: S. B. Dutcher, A. B. Thorne, Samuel Richards, W. H. Leacraft, A. Requa, J. Gridley, and Charles Jones. Mr. Daggett was, on motion, added to the committee.

When the convention reassembled, Silas B. Dutcher, from the Conference Committee, reported that, after consultation with the committee from the Democratic convention, they had agreed to concede the place of Surrogate on the County ticket to the Independents. Mr. Dutcher moved the adoption of the report. Mr. Williams, of the Seventeenth Ward, said he hoped the report would not be adopted. He was glad that a body of men had at last assembled who could deal with the question of coalition. He had heard it talked of for weeks, and had seen it mentioned in the newspapers, but now it was to be settled. Many of his friends had tried to persuade him that coalition was wise, but he was still unconvinced. He doubted the alleged strength of the Independents. To coalesce with them was, in his opinion, to embrace a shadow. He did not see why Republicans should stand aside as a Republican Convention for any Democrat. The party had elected in the past a Mayor, Sheriff, and Board of Aldermen, and he could see no reason why straight Republican nominations should not be made. Mr. Williams concluded his speech with a strong appeal to the delegates to reject the report.

Mr. Silas B. Dutcher reminded the convention that Brooklyn was a Democratic city, and that it was only by the aid of the honest men in that party they could expect to elect an honest city and county Government. Without the aid of the Independent Democrats, the speaker said, a Republican Mayor could not have been elected last year.

Ex-Sheriff Williams thought the Independents asked too much. He was willing that they should have the position of Charity Commissioner.

Mr. Van Kleeck, of the Third Ward, moved to give the position of Register to the Democrats, but the motion was lost. Messrs. Wintringham and Reeves spoke in favor of adopting the report. Col. Rowan said that he understood that the Independents would present the name of ex-Gov. Low, of Maryland, a man who had been on the staff of Jefferson Davis during the rebellion. After some further debate a committee of three was appointed to wait on the convention of Independents and suggest that they name the person whom they intended to indorse for the office of Surrogate.

When the committee left the room Mr. W. H. Curtis nominated John W. Coe for Register. Mr. Erastus Cook placed the name of Col. James Cavanagh in nomination. Mr. Francis Eisenbrandt nominated Corporal James Tanner. After the balloting had proceeded for some time it became evident that Corporal Tanner would receive the nomination. In order to save time the names of Messrs. Coe and Cavanagh were withdrawn, and Corporal Tanner was nominated by acclamation, amid a scene of the wildest enthusiasm. The nomination was entirely spontaneous, and nobody was more surprised than the nominee. So little did Mr. Tanner expect to be nominated for the office of Register that he had announced himself yesterday as a candidate for Justice in the First District. After the nominee had returned thanks for the honor conferred on him in a brief but feeling speech the committee of three appointed by the convention of Independent Democrats reported the name of Walter L. Livingstone as the choice of the Independents for the office of Surrogate. The nomination, on motion of Mr. Reeves, was ratified unanimously, the delegates rising and cheering for several minutes. The convention next proceeded to name candidates for the position of County Clerk. Mr. John F. Henry nominated George Thomas, and the nomination was seconded by Silas B. Dutcher. Mr. Davis Williams nominated Hon. Jacob Worth. Mr. Eugene D. Berri was nominated by E. R. Kennedy, of the Seventh Ward, and Capt. William A. B. Steers was nominated by Gen. E. B. Fowler. After two ballots had been taken Mr. Berri obtained the votes of a majority of delegates and his nomination was on motion of Mr. Henry made unanimous. Mr. John Cunningham was then nominated for the position of County Commissioner. Mr. John L. Ryder was also placed in nomination, and the roll was being called when Mr. Dwight Johnson informed the convention that he had just covered the investigating the Charity Commission with Dr. Ormsbee that Mr. Cunningham had persistently opposed corruption in that department of the county government, and that it was mainly through him that the fraude commissioners of Midas and the other Commissioners were exposed. Mr. McFall then withdrew the name of Mr. Ryder and Mr. Cunningham was unanimously nominated. Messrs. Wickham and Wolfert were placed in nomination for the position of Associate Justice. Mr. Wickham received a majority of the ballots, and his nomination was made unanimous.

The Chairman next read a communication from the Convention of Independents announcing the fact that they had just nominated John Cunningham for County Commissioner. A resolution was passed directing the Chairman to inform the Democratic Convention of the action taken by the Republicans, after which the convention adjourned.

Register—Corporal Tanner.
Surrogate—Walter L. Livingstone.
County Clerk—Eugene D. Berri.
Charity Commissioner—John Cunningham.
Associate Justice—William Wickham.

All the county nominations make by the Republicans were indorsed by the Convention of Independent Democrats, in session corner of Clinton and Montague streets.

THE CITY CONVENTION.

The Brooklyn Republican City Convention met last evening at the Republican Head-quarters, Ex-Mayor Booth presiding, but adjourned until Saturday evening without making nominations.

BROOKLYN ALDERMANIC NOMINATIONS.

First Ward—Clarence L. Barnes.
Third Ward—William F. Aitken.
Seventh Ward—A. Stewart Rowley.
Eleventh Ward—Stephen M. Griswold.
Thirteenth Ward—William H. Ray.
Fifteenth Ward—John Davies.
Seventeenth Ward—Alderman Cottrill.
Nineteenth Ward—Andrew D. Baird.
Twenty first Ward—Frederick Sigrist.
Twenty-third Ward—Francis B. Fisher.

REPUBLICANS OF WESTFIELD, N. J.

The Hayes and Wheeler Club of Westfield, N. J., is doing a grand work for the good cause in that town. At the very outset of the campaign a large hall on Broad street was decorated and furnished as a Republican head-quarters. Public meetings have been held, and there have also been torch-light processions and other demonstrations in favor of the right ticket. The officers of the club are as follows: President, Anson F. Grant; Secretary, James Townley; Treasurer, George W. Tice; Executive Committee—Charles E. Leverage, (Chairman;) W. A. Macquoid, Daniel F. Fink, W. W. Connolly, Otis G. Webb, James T. Pierson, Evert M. Pierson, Charles F. Conant, Effingham Embree, G. Little, G. W. Von Boskirk, Theodore Folsom, Norman Dunn, F. T. Baker, James L. Miller, Anson F. Grant, G. W. Tice, H. L. Webb, A. D. Shephard, J. H. Townley, H. J. Webb, B. J. Crosby, William Gale, James Simpson, W. T. Peck, Dr. Sherman Cooper, J. McCloskey, Newton Huffman, W. C. Hall.

WILL NOT SUPPORT TILDEN.

MR. M. M. POMEROY URGED TO SELL HIS INFLUENCE AND THAT OF HIS PAPER TO TILDEN, BUT REFUSES—HE DOES NOT BELIEVE THE DEMOCRATIC "REFORMER" AN HONEST MAN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I am in receipt of several letters from persons in your City informing me that it has been published in New-York papers that for a certain sum I had or have offered to support Samuel J. Tilden for the Presidency. Will you permit me room in your issue to say that all such statements are absolutely false? I have never, at any time or place, for any sum of money or other consideration, offered to support Mr. Tilden for the Presidency by voice, pen, presses or vote. I have been asked to do so; have been offered various sums of money to do so; have been asked to sell my office to Mr. Tilden's use, and to give to his cause my services as editor of the Democrat. In July, 1876, I offered to sell to friends of Mr. Tilden the Democrat office for $25,000, providing I could publish one editorial in the issue announcing the sale, and in that refusing to support him, and transfer my list of subscribers to the Democrat to the new paper I had started, the Great Campaign, and in the latter-named paper continue my work in opposition to the combination for whom Mr. Tilden is agent.

Mr. Tilden's friends then in Chicago replied that it was not my office machinery they wanted but the influence of the editor of the Democrat and his work in that paper for Mr. Tilden. The horses in my stable, the machinery of my office, are for sale at any time for cash, but the influence of my newspaper, and the friendship of its many thousands of supporters is not for sale, as Mr. Tilden's intimate friends well know, and as the course of the paper proves. I am a Democrat, but not a believer in Mr. Tilden's honesty, a supporter of his financial schemes, or a worker for or a believer in the possibility of his election. For Cooper and Cary,

M. M. POMEROY.

AMUSEMENTS.

LOCAL AND MISCELLANEOUS GOSSIP.

Miss Neilson is expected by the Celtic, due at this port on Sunday.

Mrs. Pomeroy acts in "The Lady of Lyons" at the Lyceum Theatre, this evening.

Mme. Di Murska is now en route for California, where she will be heard in opera, next month, under the management of Signor De Vivo.

One week's dramatic performances occur at the Olympic Theatre, commencing on Monday next. Miss Katie Putnam will then appear as Little Nell in "The Old Curiosity Shop."

Mr. McVicker's term of occupancy of the Lyceum Theatre will commence toward Nov. 14, when Mr. Edwin Booth will appear in "Hamlet," Mrs. Clara Jennings being the Ophelia.

The sale of seats for Mlle. Aimée's opera bouffe performances at the Academy of Music, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of next week, opens at the Academy of Music, this morning.

The New-York Mozart Club will give its first concert at Steinway Hall this evening. Beethoven's E flat quintet, Fesca's septet in C minor, and some solos by Miss Drasdil and Mr. Arnold, are to constitute the programme.

Miss Kellogg's season of English opera at the Philadelphia Academy of Music commenced on Monday evening, when "Lucia" attracted an overflowing audience. Apropos of the recent difficulty with the chorus of the company, we are advised that the affair concerned Mr. Hess and some members of his chorus only. Miss Kellogg was not served with papers in the case, and is in no way connected with it.

A tenor new to local audiences, Mr. George Werrenrath by name, made his début in the concert given by Mr. Thomas at Steinway Hall, last evening. Although a Dane, we believe, by birth, Mr. Werrenrath is a German in voice and style. His tones are strong but throaty, and his method is as distant from the bel canto as can be imagined. The singer's prayer from "Rienzi" was a very mediocre performance; the songs by Rubinstein were interpreted with some sentimen., but without charm.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The Paris Opera Comique has been reopened with "Piccinino," Mme. Galli-Marié sustaining the principal role.

The Bayreuth performances have, it is officially stated, resulted in a loss of nearly £1,000. The municipality of Bayreuth have taken the debt on their own shoulders, and intend to recoup themselves by toe proceeds of a free-n series of performances next August.

Mlle. Etelka Gerster must be a curious sort of vocalist. She bolted from the Vienna opera to that of Paris, for which little escapade she had to pay 5,000 florins fine, and now she wishes to throw over Paris for the opera of Madrid.

"La Belle Hélène" has been revived at the Paris Variété, with Mme. Judic in Mme. Schneider's part. The revival was exceedingly successful.

One specimen of the score of the "Nibelungen," by Herr Wagner, has been secured for London, and will be heard at the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts; it is the Death March in "Siegfried."

"Rome Vaincue" is the seventy-fourth work which has been mounted at the Francais during the current year. During the twenty-eight days which elapsed between Sept. 1 and 28, the Francais has represented thirty-one pieces; that is to say, ten works of the classic and twenty-one of the contemporary repertory.

THE WEATHER.

PROBABILITIES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19—1 A. M.—For the Middle and Eastern States, rising, followed by falling barometer, warmer and generally clear weather with easterly or southerly winds in the former, and northwesterly winds shifting to southerly in the latter.

"SEE WHAT A GOODLY OUTSIDE FALSEHOOD HATH."

The Parisian Diamonds are not real gems; if they were they could not be sold so cheap; but their "goodly outside" makes them pass current as real everywhere. For sale only at Humphrey's jewelry store, No. 779 Broadway, opposite Stewart's, New-York.—Exchange.

DECEIT IS ONE of the greatest of evils, being the subtle dry rot of social and commercial life. An example of this is found in the various scented toilet soaps. B. T. BABBITT, the soap manufacturer, has recently produced a soap perfectly pure, and admirably adapted for old and young, an indispensible adjunct to toilet and bath-room when once known. It is known as B. T. BABBITT'S BABY SOAP.—Advertisement.

So speaks oftentimes the sufferer from dyspepsia. After eating it seems as if there was a veritable ball of fire rumbling up and down through his stomach. He eats much he feels it; if he don't eat much he feels it. It destroys his enjoyment of life. If the doctor be really desirous of curing a patient he will not experiment with the sufferer; he should recommend him to use PERUVIAN SYRUP, whose merits have been tested so long and always satisfactorily. Balls of fire in the stomach and PERUVIAN SYRUP can't dwell together. Send to your druggist, he keeps it always ready, and try it. It will work like a charm.

A public singer, and a member of the "British Operatic Association," London, England, writes:

"I have derived greater benefit from BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES than from anything I ever tried."

should be in every family for silver and polishing the silver-ware and house-hold utensils. It is free from any injurious chemicals or grit. It saves labor and keeps the ware as bright as new. Sold by druggists, house-furnishers, jewelers, and grocers.

Pretty lips should have pearly teeth behind them. To make the teeth pearly, and to keep them so, there is nothing like fragrant SOZODONT. It neutralizes every element of impurity that affects the soundness or whiteness of the enamel which sheathes the dental bone. Moreover, it prevents gum-boil and canker.

Gray hair and baldness may both be prevented by reasonable care at the proper time. Use PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM whenever the hair is gray or decaying, and you will be pleased with the result.

LAW REPORTS.

THE CITY'S RIGHT TO THE BATTERY.

INTERESTING HISTORICAL REMINISCENCES IN THE SUIT OF SPADER AGAINST THE NEW-YORK ELEVATED RAILROAD COMPANY—THE GRANTS OF FORT JAMES OR FORT GEORGE BY THE OLD CITY CHARTERS.

The trial of the suit of Jeremiah V. Spader against the New-York Elevated Railroad Company was begun before Chief Justice Curtis, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday. In this action, it will be remembered, the plaintiff seeks to restrain the company from putting up its road over the Battery. John E. Parsons appears for the plaintiff, and ex-Judge James Emott, Aaron J. Vanderpoel, and E. C. Delavan represent the defendants. The suit brings up some very curious facts, of interest to antiquarians and others, in regard to the ownership and history of the Battery itself and much of the surrounding land. The plaintiff shows his right to a standing in court in a rather peculiar way, claiming to prove that, though his property does not front on the Battery, yet he has a right, by virtue of the ownership of the property in Bridge street, to prevent any use of the Battery for other than park purposes. Prior to May 26, 1812, the block bounded by State, Bridge, and Whitehall streets and the Bowling Green, constituted what was known as the Government House grounds. On the date in question an act was passed permitting the State Commissioners to sell and convey in fee simple, the Government House and the grounds adjoining, to the Mayor, &c., of this City. The property was then conveyed to the City and a survey was made of it by the latter. A map was prepared and the block laid down in lots which were sold. The plaintiff's property was known as lot No. 15 in that map. It was sold for $5,200 to one Edmund Smith, in 1815. The deed and the deed of the other lots contained a covenant on the part of the grantors, the City, "that the vacant grounds then belonging to the grantors, in the vicinity of the premises, by the said deed granted, and commonly called the Battery and the Bowling Green, should never be appropriated by the grantors or their successors, to private uses." At the time of the sale by the City the Battery was a public pleasure ground, and was a place much frequented by the wealthy burghers of the time, who were fond of promenading there with their wives and children on pleasant evenings. There it was that the fashions of the day were displayed, and that susceptible swains whispered to their sweethearts the story of their love and made their vows of constancy. The attractions of the Battery in those days were such as to cause the value of property in the neighborhood to be greatly enhanced, and so it came about that such covenants as the one above given were inserted in deeds. The City obtained title to the Battery itself from the people of the State, but in the act of 1790 conveying the Battery, it was declared that this pleasure resort was "to remain for the purpose of erecting public buildings and works of defense thereon, but without any power to dispose thereof for any other use or purpose whatsoever, and without any power of selling any part thereof." The defendants propose to construct their railroad over the Battery at a place which was principally within the strip between high and low water marks; at one point, however, touching the original upland. This strip, the defendant's claim, passed to the City by the Dongan and Montgomerie charters, and so was not within the protection of the act of 1790. The plaintiff says, however, that the Dongan charter in 1686 expressly saved to the Crown all its right, use, title, and authority in all the liberties, boundaries, extents, and privileges of Fort James." The Montgomerie charter of 1730 confirmed the grant made by Gov. Dongan, but in like manner excepted "our Fort George" and the grounds, &c., adjoining. It is not disputed that so much of the Battery as was originally upland—above high-water mark—was within the inclosure of the fort known in 1656 as Fort James and in 1730 as Fort George. The defendants claim, however, that the strip between high and low-water marks passed to the City under a general grant of all waste lands, &c., without being hampered with any conditions as to the use to which it should be put. The construction of the old charters and grants is, therefore, an important feature of the case. The company claims to have obtained the right to extend its line along the edge of the Battery, from the Rapid-Transit Commissioners, and also from the Park Commissioners. The plaintiff, however, maintains that both sets of Commissioners had no such powers. He insists further that he must be presumed to have paid an enhanced price for his premises in view of his right at all times to compel the Battery to remain as a public park. There could be no more effectual violation of this right than that a railroad, and particularly a railroad on stilts, should be built between his property and the bay. It may safely be inferred, he says, that the attempts of defendants to cross the Battery is but a prelude to the design to use the Battery for depot purposes. The principle being established that the Battery may be used by a railroad, it is for the proper authorities of the City or New-York to determine the measure and extent of such use, and private property-holders need expect no protection from the action of the corporate authorities. The plaintiff insists that he is entitled to the interference of the court to protect him in rights which rest upon contract and which are not within the control of the Legislature.

Among the documents put in evidence at the trial yesterday were Irwin's map of 1728, Rhinelander's map of 1767, Major Hull's map of 1776, Goerke's survey in 1797, the Corning map, the survey by Gerhard Bancker, and two of the Government offices, dated 1813 and 1815, respectively. The trial will be resumed to-day.

THE CITY'S LIABILITY FOR SUPPLIES.

The case of Charles A. Harrington against the Mayor, &c., tried before Judge Lawrence and a jury, in Part II. of the Supreme Court, yesterday, was a somewhat singular one. It appeared that the plaintiff had a contract with the Dock Department, entered into on Oct. 1, 1873, for supplying broken stone, rip-rap, and sand for one year. The quantities, as estimated in the advertisements, proposals, and contract, were 3,000 cubic yards of broken stone, more or less; 3,000 cubic yards of rip-rap, more or less; 2,000 cubic yards of sand, more or less. Instead of these quantities, however, the plaintiff delivered, up to Oct. 1, 1874, 9,025 cubic yards of broken stone and 707 cubic yards of sand in excess of the estimates. Subsequently he delivered still further quantities upon requisitions issued by the Commissioner of Public Works. At the time of commencing his action Harrington had been paid $57,000 on a contract which had been estimated at $14,000. He sued to recover a balance due for a part of the materials furnished, the remainder having been paid for. The facts were not disputed. The City did not suggest any fraud, but claimed that the officers of the Dock Department had no authority to call for more than a reasonable excess over the estimates; that such an enormous excess as in the present case was unreasonable, and that it was, therefore, not delivered under the contract of Oct. 1, 1873, and that as no other contract was entered into according to law by sealed bids and proposals was offered to cover the excess, the plaintiff could not recover. Judge Lawrence said that he had always believed this to be the law in this State. The recent decision, however, in the Nelson case had lessened the former rule of law on this point, and the rule now is that where the City receives and uses goods furnished in good faith, at just prices and without any fraud on the part of its officers it is bound upon a quantum meruit, to pay the reasonable worth of the goods. He, therefore, directed a verdict for the plaintiff for $5,000 12. Messrs. Grigg and Signor appeared for the plaintiff, and A. J. Requier and E. H. Lacombe for the City.

THE CITY SUED FOR RENT.

The cases of Mary A. Schanck and the New-York Dispensary, against the Mayor, &c., were brought up before Judge Lawrence in Supreme Court, Circuit, Part II, yesterday. The same point being involved in both suits, only one of them—that of Mary A. Schanck—was taken up for trial. The action is to recover for rent of a portion of No. 27 Chambers street, which was leased by the Common Council, and was used by the Marine Court. The City's defense to the suit is that under the Charter the Common Council were forbidden to make a lease at any other than reasonable prices, and the rent in this instance was exorbitant. A witness was put on the stand to prove the rental value of the premises in question, but objection was made by the plaintiff to any such testimony, on the ground that the finding of the Common Council in making the lease was conclusive as to the rent being reasonable. The trial of the case was suspended and the point was argued at length, Judge Lawrence reserving his decision.

DAMAGES FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

The trial of the suit of George Newcombe against John R. Terry was had before Judge Sanford and a jury, in Part I. of the Superior Court yesterday. The plaintiff, it seems, hired a furnished house on Union square from the defendant for one year from Sept. 1, 1868. The house was to be used as a hotel or boarding-house, and it was agreed that the furniture was to be returned and articles missing were to be paid for. On Sept. 1, 1869, the plaintiff moved from the premises and a new tenant came in. At this time two letters were sent by Terry to Newcombe in which the former said that a number of articles of furniture were missing. Terry, on Sept. 20, 1869, went to Newcombe's residence and told him verbally about the missing articles. Newcombe thereupon told Terry to search the house for them. Terry began to search and found about six dollars' worth of small articles. He made some threats against Newcombe, to which the latter replied rather sharply. Terry then went out, obtained an officer, and had Newcombe arrested. The latter was indicted for grand larceny, tried, and acquitted. He then brought this action for malicious prosecution, claiming $20,000 damages. The jury yesterday gave him $500. Townsend & Weed appeared for the plaintiff, and Albert Cardoz for the defendant.

COURT NOTES.

Patrick Finnegan, of No. 322 Pearl street, was brought before United States Commissioner Betts yesterday charged with fraudulent naturalization. He was held for examination next Saturday in $1,000 bail.

John Wood, a Bowery pickpocket, who stole $33 from Mrs. Mary E. Barnes, of No. 40 West Eleventh street, on the 12th inst., pleaded guilty yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to two years in State Prison.

Cora Seymour was arraigned at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday on a charge of robbing her employer, Minnie J. Brooks, of No. 576 Lexington avenue, of $2,000 worth of wearing apparel and jewelry. A dress, valued at $200, was found on her person. She admitted her guilt, and was committed for trial.

Frank Jordan, a sneak thief, of No. 225 West Fifteenth street, stole a gold watch from the store of Emil Bayer, No. 735 Broadway, on the 14th inst. In Part II of the Court of General Sessions yesterday Assistant District Attorney Russell accepted a plea of guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the thief to two years in State Prison.

On the 11th inst. Thomas Hennessy, of No. 220 Delancey street, and John Williams, of No. 226 East Forty-seventh street, stole a box containing six cloaks from the wagon of Rotnschild & Brother, No. 58 Baker street. In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday the thieves pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced them to two years and six months each in the Penitentiary.

Mr. William H. Mundy, counselor at law, in his efforts to obtain a construction of the Excise law, has made complaint before the Grand Jury against the Excise Commissioners for granting licenses to saloon-keepers for the sale of strong and spirituous liquors and wines, excepting beer and ale, in quantities less than five gallons, to be drank on the premises. Mr. Mundy contends that the granting of such licenses is in violation of the law, and has therefore brought the matter before the Grand Jury.

Officer Duncan, of the Eighteenth Precinct, yesterday attempted to arrest Patrick Purcell, of No. 340 East Thirty-fifth street, who was threatening to kill his daughter with a cotton-hook, when a struggle ensued, in the course of which Purcell struck the officer in the hand with a cotton-hook, lacerating it in a shocking manner. Roundsman Martin came to the officer's assistance, and after he had inflicted several severe blows on the roundsman, Purcell was arrested. At the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday he was committed.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Russell accepted pleas of guilty from Mary Bauer, a demented woman who stole clothing and jewelry, valued at $150 from her mistress, Martha W. Ferrer, of No. 265 West Twenty-fifth street, and Ellis Henderson, a negro waiter, who stole a dress and shawl, the property of Elizabeth Dearien, of No. 254 West Twenty-first street, the lady in whose employment he was. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the woman Bauer to two years and six months, and Henderson to two years in State Prison.

Patrick Leville, of No. 74 King street, was arrested yesterday by United States Deputy Marshals Newcomb and Harris, charged with obstructing an officer in the performance of his duties. It is stated that Leville presented himself for registration in the Fifth Assembly District, handing in his certificate of citizenship. This, he alleges, was retained by Inspector Boomer, who was afterward arrested on a charge of petit larceny. The warrant in the case was issued by Supervisor Davenport, and the accused, waiving examination, was held in $2,500 bail, to await the action of the Grand Jury.

At 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning as Mr. John A. Olsen, whose place of business is at No. 1,276 Broadway, was walking up Sixth avenue, he was accosted by Thomas Degnan, of No. 132 West Thirty-first street, who seized him around the waist, pinning his arms to his side with one hand and with the other attempted to rob him of his pocket-book. Mr. Olsen's cries for help attracted the attention of Police Captain Williams, who came to his assistance and succeeded in arresting Degnan. Yesterday the prisoner was brought before Justice Kassmire, in the Washington Place Police Court, and committed in default of $2,000 bail to answer at the General Sessions.

HAVING PROPERTY BUT YET DESTITUTE.

A very peculiar case, showing how, in one manner at least, a person may be in real want while actually possessing property, was brought up by petition before Chief Justice Curtis, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday. The action is brought by Sarah Bond against Susan McNiff and others. The petition referred to was presented by the plaintiff, who avers that she is a widow, upward of sixty-six years of age, and residing at Mobile, Ala., though at present temporarily in this City. The suit was begun on June 4, 1873, and is simply for the partition or sale of the house and lot at No. 358 Grand street, in this City. The trial of the action, however, involved the construction of the last will and testament of Philip McNiff, the plaintiff's father, who died in 1823. On the pleadings and trial the plaintiff claimed to be entitled to a life estate and fee in a one-quarter part and parcel of the estate of her brother Philip McNiff, Jr., which happened on July 4, 1872. During the latter's lifetime she received one-quarter of the income of the property. The case finally came on for trial before the late Chief Justice Monell, and judgment of partition and sale was entered on Oct. 13, 1875, whereby it was decided that the plaintiff was entitled to one-fourth of the property, a Referee was appointed, on the application of the defendants, to collect the rents. He had now in his hands $5,000 from this source. Of this amount the plaintiff is indisputably entitled to one-fourth, yet she has received in all only $200, that being paid her in June, 1875, in order to liquidate some disbursements in the case. After narrating these facts, the petitioner went on to say that she has no income, and has two very minor grandchildren dependent on her for support. She is largely indebted to friends for borrowed money and necessaries, and is unable to return home for want of means. She applied to the Receiver for $300, but he refused to give her any money. She asked the court for an accounting, and that her share of the funds in the Receiver's possession be paid over to her. On the other hand, the defendant, Susan McNiff, made affidavit that the action is a vexatious one, and that she had no security that the plaintiff will pay the costs of the litigation. She therefore desired the funds to remain in the Receiver's hands until the final determination and accounting in the action. Chief Justice Curtis granted an order directing the Receiver to pay the plaintiff $300.

DAMAGES FOR THE BITE OF A DOG.

A suit brought by a young and rather prepossessing girl named Julia Lynch to recover $2,500 for injuries received by the bite of a dog was tried before Judge Van Brunt and a jury in Part II. of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The defendant was Patrick McNally, the proprietor of a store on Grand street. It appeared from the evidence that Miss Lynch, accompanied by two other girls, was on her way home at about 9 P. M. on March 1 last. As they passed McNally's store, they saw the latter's dog, a big Newfoundland, sitting in front of the door, and the plaintiff playfully patted the brute on the head. The dog immediately sprang upon her, and fastening his teeth in her arm above the elbow inflicted an ugly wound. The girl was taken to the station-house, where her wounds were dressed by a surgeon, and she was then conveyed to her home. She was confined to her bed for three months in consequence of her injuries. At the trial yesterday, Dr. Ensign, who attended the girl, gave testimony as to the wound she had received and hinted at the possibility of hydrophobia setting in. The plaintiff herself was put on the stand, and baring her arm showed a large scar still remaining from the bite. Several policemen testified that the dog had bitten other persons besides the plaintiff. The defendant claimed that the dog was of good-natured and inoffensive except when molested or worried by strangers. The jury, after a short deliberation, returned a verdict in the plaintiff's favor for $1,500. Frank J. Dunighac appeared for the plaintiff and Malcom Campbell for the defendant.

THE HOUSE OF BLAZES.

The suit of Anna Rose against the New-York Gas-light Company was brought to trial before Judge Larremore and a jury in the Supreme Court, Part III., yesterday. The plaintiff sues to recover $3,000 for damages sustained by reason of a nuisance. She is the owner of the house and lot at No. 404 East Twenty-first street, which adjoin the works of the defendant's company. The plaintiff says her premises were greatly damaged by the infiltration of water from the gas-works which was saturated with the foul gases and noxious waste products of the gas manufacture. The water permeated the walls of the building and flooded the cellar. The pools of foul water would flash up when a lighted match was brought near. The building was in great measure rendered untenable, and the rental declined from $1,600 to $800. This state of affairs continued for two years, when the Board of Health interfered and put a stop to the nuisance. The case is still on. One of the witnesses called yesterday testified that the house was known as the "House of Blazes."

A TAMMANY ALDERMAN IN TROUBLE.

A judgment was recently obtained by Messrs. Culver and Wright against Alderman Michael Tuomey, and the execution issued was returned unsatisfied, there being no property found by the Sheriff belonging to Tuomey. Supplementary proceedings were taken ont and Tuomey was yesterday examined before Chief Justice Shea in the Marine Court. Tuomey swore yesterday that he possesses no property or any kind whatsoever, and had no claims excepting one for his salary of $333 33 for the month of September. The money is still in the Controller's hands. Tuomey testified that he is engaged in no business excepting as an Alderman, and has no income other than that received for salary in his office.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18.—The following cases have been argued in the United States Supreme Court:

No. 35. The Chemung Canal Bank vs. Lowery et al.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Western District of Wisconsin. The question in this case is whether a State may limit the right of action on a judgment of another State to persons who are citizens of the State at the time the cause of action accrued. The court sustained a demurrer raising this objection, and it is here contended that this was error, and it is said that this court has recognized the right of States to limit the time within which suits may be brought on foreign judgments, and sustained such statutes when the time was limited even to two years. But this court has not sustained any law which denied to citizens of other States the same right to sue in the courts of the State enjoyed by its own citizens. W. P. Lynde for plaintiff in error; S. R. Putney for defendant.

No. 41.—Birdsall and Saugrty vs. Coolidge.—Error to the Circuit Court for the District of Nevada. This suit was brought by Coolidge to recover for an infringement of a patent for an improvement in amalgamating fans, claimed by him to have been invented by Z na Wheeler, whose right he holds, the patent for which was granted in November, 1863. The defense was that the instrument used did not have the same adjuncts described in Wheeler's specification. The decision below sustained the case, and it is here claimed that the court erred in the instructions to the jury concerning the technical claims of the parties. Beaty & Denson, for plaintiffs in error; A. G. Evans for defendant.

No. 42.—French vs. Fyan.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.—This was an action of ejectment for a tract of land claimed by French under the grant made to Missouri by act of Congress for the use of the Pacific Railroad, and which the defendant in error claims under the swamp land grant to the State in 1850. The tract is among the lands certified to the State by the Commissioner of the General Land Office in 1854 for railroad purposes. Proof was offered by the plaintiff to show that it is and was not swamp land at the date of the Swamp Land act, but the court rejected it, holding, also, the swamp land patent to show a better title than that under the certificate for railroad purposes, although of later date. It is here contended that this was error, and that the action of the General Land Office in certifying the land for railroad purposes was a conclusive decision by the proper department that the land was not swamp land, and that this decision controls the case here. D. T. Jewell for plaintiff in error, M. Barr for defendant.

No. 51.—Ryan et al. vs. D. K. Carter et al.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.—This is also an action of ejectment for a tract of land in the County of St. Louis. The parties claimed from a common source or title, from one Dodier, to whom the land was confirmed in 1810, and who subsequently conveyed to one Lebourne. Lebourne died in 1821, leaving the property to his wife, through whom the title passed to the defendant in error Carter. Carter had been in possession over thirty-five years before the suit was commenced, and his title was sustained by the court. It is here contended that by the decision made the court disregarded a deed of partition, and the rights of the plaintiffs accruing under it, made between Lebourne and the heirs of Dodier in 1818, which, if properly considered, will reverse the judgment. D. T. Jewell for plaintiffs in error, M. Blair for defendants.

A WIFE-MURDERER ON TRIAL.

The trial of Francis McGuire for the murder of his wife, Ann, in which a jury was obtained on Tuesday, was continued before Judge Sutherland yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. The prosecution was conducted by Assistant District Attorney Ball, and the prisoner was defended by Messrs. A. Oakey Hall and William F. Kinsling. McGuire is a brutal-looking fellow, about thirty-two years of age, and a laborer by occupation. On Sunday evening, Aug. 15, McGuire, who had been out all day, returned to his apartments on the third floor of the tenement house, No. 330 East Thirty-fifth street, where his wife kept a few women boarders, and boarded up the proceeds of her industry. Mrs. McGuire offered to get supper ready for the prisoner, but he declined the offer, whereupon she taunted him with being out enjoying himself all day, and used a remark about a woman in the basement which showed that she was jealous. He cautioned her against making use of such expressions, threatening if she did so to kill her, even though he should hang for it. A quarrel then ensued, in the course of which McGuire smashed the crockery, and in a few minutes afterward Mrs. McGuire cried out, "I am stabbed." Mary Rigney and Mary McLaughlin, the women boarders, rushed to the assistance of the injured woman, and found that she was suffering from a horrible wound in the abdomen, from which the intestines protruded. Mrs. McGuire was removed to Bellevue Hospital, where she died next day. McGuire fled from the house, but subsequently returned and was arrested while rummaging the effects of his wife, and admitted that a large meat knife found concealed in the kitchen was the weapon with which he did the stabbing. He expressed no regret for his crime; but on the contrary said that he was sorry he had not cut her throat. Messrs. Hall and Kinsling contend that the prisoner's crime is no higher than manslaughter in the second degree. The case will be given to the jury to-day.

A VERDICT AGAINST THE SHERIFF.

The trial of the case of Henry C. Snebley against the Sheriff, which has occupied three days before Judge Larremore and a jury, in Part III of the Supreme Court, was concluded yesterday. The plaintiff claimed that in June, 1874 by virtue of a bill of sale from Frederick C. Lomileno, he became the owner of the furniture in the Maltby House, a hotel then kept by one George R. Nash in Great Jones street. Nash had leased the furniture from Lomileno. This furniture was sold by the Sheriff under an execution issued from the Supreme Court upon a judgment in favor of Anastasia Williams against Lomileno. The plaintiff in the present suit sought to recover the value of the furniture thus sold. In support of this claim, Snebley testified that in June, 1874, he took a transfer from Lomileno of the property in question, as part payment for certain cash advances previously made by him to Lomileno, and in behalf of the latter as counsel in the prosecution of a certain claim for insurance in Antwerp, Belgium. Lomileo, however, who had lately returned from California, after an absence of two years, was produced as a witness by the defendant, and he denied that he had ever intentionally transferred the title of the property in question to Snebley. He acknowledged his signature to the bill of sale, but stated that he had signed it simply in order to enable Snebley, as his attorney, to collect the rent up n the furniture during his absence, and not as a bona fide evidence of sale. The jury awarded the plaintiff $2,500.

THREE BURGLARS SENTENCED.

On the night of the 15th inst. the tailor's store of Jacob Ulrich, No. 492 Broome street, was broken open and robbed of clothing valued at $300. Capt. McDonnell, of the Eighth Precinct, went to work on the case and arrested a Swede named George Wilhams, living at No. 209 South Fifth avenue, from whom he extracted information which led to the arrest of Joseph Joralemo and Joseph Mazen, two Italians, Williams' accomplices. The Captain recovered and restored the property stolen from Mr. Ulrich, and the three prisoners were indicted for burglary in the first degree. In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday the three burglars were tried and convicted. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced Joralemo, who was the instigator of the burglary, to the full penalty—ten years in the State Prison. Mazen received a sentence of eight years' imprisonment, and Williams, who gave the information which led to the arrest of the others, was sentenced to five years in prison. All three prisoners laughed outright and made a low bow to the Judge on hearing their sentence, and appeared to look upon the matter as a first-class joke.

COUNTERFEITERS ON TRIAL.

In the United States Circuit Court, criminal branch, yesterday, before Judge Benedict, a further disposition was made of the arrests made at the time of the raid on the counterfeiting establishment of the Congdon brothers, in Brooklyn, several months ago. Ransom D. Warner and Edgar K. Griffin were arrested at that time and indicted for passing counterfeit money. Warner was looked upon as the principal operator, he contracting for the entire issue of the Congdon brothers and selling it at a percentage to others. Griffin was one of these agents or "boodle carriers." When called yesterday morning in this court both of the above pleaded guilty and were remanded for sentence. Another of the gang, F. W. Jenkins, alias D. A. Craig, arrested at the same time, called for a trial, and the evidence on the part of the Government was heard, after which, in order to allow the accused an opportunity of making a proper defense, the case was continued until this morning.

ONE MORE VOTE FOR TILDEN.

The term of John E. Simmons, who was convicted in February, 1874, of the murder of Nicholas Duryea, a polley-dealer, and sentenced to three years and six months in the State Prison, expired yesterday. The prisoner was released in the morning, and by noon his lawyer had obtained the record of his conviction and prepared the usual papers for the restoration of Simmons' citizenship. The petition is to be presented to Gov. Tilden at once, and a favorable answer is confidently expected before election day.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

MRS. HOUSE ACQUITTED.

THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S PLEA FOR CONVICTION—JUDGE BEASLEY'S CHARGE—THE JURY AFTER SEVERAL HOURS' DELIBERATION RETURN A VERDICT OF "NOT GUILTY."

The trial of Mrs. Irene A. V. House, for the killing of her husband, Orson Alonzo House, at Trenton, N. J., came to an end last evening, the result being the acquittal of the accused. The jury rendered a verdict of "not guilty," by which it was understood that they pronounced the killing of Mr. House a case of justifiable homicide. The court-room was crowded during the morning session, when the argument of the Attorney General and the charge of the presiding Justice were delivered.

The Attorney General's plea lasted two hours, and was a fair consideration of the question whether or not the accused or her son was in danger of death at the hands of the murdered man at the time he was shot. He claimed that there was no danger of death to either. There was trouble, he would admit. A fight was in progress between House, Mrs. House, and Willie Anderson, but it was an ordinary quarrel, such as the accused herself admitted were of common occurrence. It was nothing more than one of their ordinary cat-and-dog fights. There were a half dozen witnesses of the fight. Did they believe there was any danger that Mr. House would kill either his wife or his step-son? Their actions were a sufficient answer. All of them either looked on unconcernedly or strolled away to attend to their private business. They certainly would not have acted thus if they had had any idea that Mr. House was meditating murder. Did Willie Anderson believe that his mother was in danger of death? By no means, for he did not even cry out for help to the people who were close by. There were two grown-up men within calling distance, but Willie Anderson didn't ask them to help him save his mother. Did Mrs. House think that either she or her son were in danger of death from Mr. House? Nothing of the kind. She was in no more danger of being killed than she was of going to heaven. But even if it could be proved that Mrs. House was fearful of being murdered by her husband, did she have no way of escaping? Was there no room in which she could have taken refuge? Yes, there were ample means of escape. But Mrs. House did not want to get away from her husband. It was the last thing she wanted. She was anxious for a fight. Her blood was thoroughly up. She was enraged. There could be no clearer case of murder from anger. The motive was as transparent as glass. It was rage, revenge. The defense had been trying to make out a terrible case of assault upon Mrs. House. She had been beaten and kicked and pounded against trunks. But which one of the witnesses had testified to the fact that Mrs. House was bruised in any way? Not one. The defense had not been able to show a slight bruise upon her forehead. The plea of justifiable homicide was too weak and nonsensical to be entertained by intelligent men.

Judge Beasley, in his charge to the jury, laid stress upon the duty of the jurors to act as judges under the law. They must be on their guard against the influence of their sympathies. The question was not whether Mrs. House was beaten by Mr. House, nor whether Mr. House deserved to be killed for beating Mrs. House. The question was whether the accused was justified in putting her husband to death. The abuse which Mr. House inflicted upon his wife had been considered right enough by the Grand Jury as a provocation to the crime that had been committed, and for that reason the indictment had charged Mrs. House with manslaughter rather than with murder. But the fact that Mrs. House was provoked to kill her husband was no defense. It must be shown that one or both of the persons engaged with Mr. House were in imminent jeopardy of their lives. The question was, whether the accused had reasonably the right to infer that she or her son was in danger of death? Asking the jurors to bear in mind the fact that what they must find in order to acquit the accused was that she acted under necessity, the Judge invited them to review with him the principal points in the testimony.

The jury retired at 12:30 o'clock. Soon after the court adjourned till 2 o'clock. On reassembling at 2 o'clock, the jury was still out. A new case was therefore called and put on trial, subject to interruption upon the agreement of the jury in the House case. Mrs. House remained in the court-room with her attorney from the hour of adjournment. She had grown decidedly nervous during the argument of the Attorney General and the charge of Judge Beasley. She had apparently lost the confidence which she seemed to entertain the previous evening, and when the case had been given to the jury she shared in the common impression that the most she could hope for was a disagreement of the jury. The prospect of an acquittal had been considerably lessened by the argument of the Attorney General. Soon after 5 o'clock the court adjourned and the ward-rooms was soon cleared. A few were allowed to leave, but the majority seemed to think that there was no reasonable prospect of an agreement of the jury for hours to come. At 6:30 o'clock, however, the jury sent word that it had agreed upon a verdict, and the officers of the court were summoned, as was also Mrs. House. Mrs. House came in with her father. She was met by the Clerk of the Court, who told her that she had probably been acquitted. She said "I knew it; God told me so in my prayers." The Judge arrived at 7 o'clock, and the jury were at once summoned.

"Gentlemen of the jury," asked the Clerk, "have you agreed upon a verdict?" "We have," was the reply.

"Who shall say for you?" asked the Clerk.

"The foreman," replied the jurymen.

"Mr. Foreman, what say you of the prisoner at the bar, is she guilty or not guilty?" "Not guilty," said the foreman.

A murmur of applause ran through the court-room as the verdict was given. Mrs. House then arose from her seat and stepped forward to greet the jurors as they passed from their places. She took each by the hand and breathed out a fervent expression of thanks. Five minutes later the court-house lights were all out and the news of the acquittal had gone all over the City of Trenton.

THE APPROACHING ELECTION.

GENERAL ORDER OF THE POLICE BOARD TO THE CAPTAINS OF THE VARIOUS PRECINCTS.

The Police Board yesterday instructed Superintendent Walling to issue the following general order to the Police Captains concerning the forthcoming election:

"Tuesday, the 7th day of November, is assigned for holding an election in the City of New-York. The polls of election are required by law to be opened at 6 A. M. and closed at 4 P. M. On that day you will order the whole of your command on duty. Except those who are specially detailed by the Superintendent for that day, excuse no member of your command who is able to do patrol duty. You will detail two members of your force to duty at each of the polling places from 6 o'clock A. M. until the completion of the canvassing of votes and counting, with such tours of duty as you shall deem proper. You will instruct the members of your force to keep order in the streets, and especially in the vicinity of the polls and about the election booths or boxes; to promptly arrest all persons violating the provisions of the election law, and charge them with the offense committed; to enforce the observance of the provisions of the Excise law, prohibiting the selling or giving away of intoxicating liquors on the day when any election is held" within a quarter of a mile of the place where the election is held. You will see that your telegraph instrument is in order, and in charge of a competent officer, subject to your order to work it, from 6 A. M. until the completion of the canvass. In case you require assistance on election day, call on the adjoining precincts for their reserve, and furnish the required aid when called on by any police precinct. If you can spare the force; and if the disorder assumes a serious aspect, telegraph to this office. You will see that your ballot-boxes, locks and keys are in order, the ballot-boxes made of or panelled in maple, and properly distributed to the several police places in your precinct, and delivered to the Inspectors of election at 6 o'clock on the morning of election day. You will notify this office promptly of the absence of Inspectors of election of your precincts from the police places in your precinct.

You will instruct the members of your force to protect all persons who may be legally acting in an orderly manner as challengers at any poll or election within your precinct, and to prevent the crowding of, and to remove if erected, any box, booth, or structure for distributing ballots within 150 feet of any polling place. Your attention is particularly called to section 47 of the election laws of 1872, which provides that "each candidate for any office to be filled at the election, may by certificate in writing signed by him, designate one person for each election district in which he is a candidate, to be present at the canvass of the ballots containing the names of the persons designated for that office. The Inspectors of election and the Police or other officers attending at such election district specified in said certificate, shall make a passage for such person to the said Inspectors, and the said Inspectors shall permit him to be present at the canvass of all the ballots in the box containing the ballots for the office specified in the said certificate, and to see if to him that he can see that such canvass and the statement required of the votes found in each box are correctly made. And no Inspector of Election, or Board of Inspectors, or police or other officer, shall allow such person to be molested or removed during the canvass of such ballots, or until such statement has been made, completed, and signed, unless he shall be personally guilty of fraudulent or disorderly conduct." Inspectors of election are now by law canvassers of the votes cast at elections. You will, therefore, under all circumstances, protect them in the undisturbed possession of the ballot-boxes, and repress all improper interference with them while canvassing the votes and completing the canvass.

"The United States Supervisors of election have also the (Section 5) right to be present at all times after the polls are opened until the canvass be wholly completed, and the proper returns made; and to personally scrutinize, count, and canvass each and every ballot cast in his or their respective election districts for Representative in Congress, whatever may be the endorsement on said ballot, or in whatever box it may have been placed or found, 'to the end (as the act of Congress declares) that each candidate for the office of Representative in Congress shall obtain the benefit of every vote for him cast.'

"When the canvass has been completed, you will take charge of the ballot-boxes and keys, and return them to the station-house."

The Superintendent also directed to promulgate the subjoined order:

"It is an offense against the laws of the United States to obstruct or interfere with the Supervisors of Elections, or United States Deputy Marshals, in the performance of their duty, or to refuse proper aid or assistance when required by them. They are about to verify the lists of persons who have registered, and have the right to verify them by proper inquiry and examination at the respective places assigned by registered persons as their residences, and to call upon you for proper aid or assistance."

THE MAYORALTY.

A DEPUTATION OF COLORED CITIZENS WAIT UPON CONTROLLER GREEN AND PROMISE HIM THEIR SUPPORT.

Controller Green was visited yesterday by a committee representing the independent colored citizens of the Eighth Congressional District, consisting of George W. Myers, D. K. Jackson, Samuel Cook, John J. Butler, Andrew Parker, Aaron Riley, John Augustus, Augustus Jeffery, and A. A. Luca, who presented him with the following resolutions.

Resolved, That in the selection of a candidate for the chief magistracy of this Empire City we, the representatives of the political spirit of the colored voters of the Eighth Congressional District, recognize the peculiar fitness of Andrew H. Green as the one most deserving our suffrage, and we hearty indorse his nomination by the independent voters of the City at Cooper Institute, Oct. 7, as a candidate eminently fitted to give the citizens an honest administration.

Resolved, That during his occupancy of the Controllership he has demonstrated fully the possession of those qualities necessary in conducting the complicated machinery of our City Government, and his well-known integrity, coupled with a superior experience, places him far in advance of any other claimant for our votes.

Resolved, That, in the event of his accepting the nomination, we pledge ours lives to the most earnest effort to secure the election of Andrew H. Green as Mayor of the City, ignoring, in so doing, all partisan or party feeling, but hoping simply to put the right man in the right place.

In presenting these resolutions, Mr. George W. Myers, the Chairman, said: In tendering you, Sir, these resolutions, although we represent a body of voters who have been but lately identified with the politics of the City, yet we feel and have always felt a keen interest in all that appertains to the good government of the City. We have scrutinized your conduct since you have been in office, and most heartily indorse the course you have pursued. You succeeded one who had prostituted his official position, and who, with others, had injured the City credit by fraud and robbery of the Treasury. You have faithfully endeavored to correct their wrong-doing and restore the City credit, which today stands in the highest estimation. We are not partisans, but simply citizens who desire good government, and we feel assured that this will be secured by your election to the Mayoralty of this City.

The Controller responded as follows: I feel very grateful for your very kind resolutions and for the complimentary remarks that have been addressed to me by your Chairman. Few of the delegations which have called upon me with respect to the office of Mayor have given me more gratification than the delegation, so respectable, of colored citizens of New-York. I am well aware what trouble and what trials have surrounded your struggle to reach the full enjoyment of American citizenship, local, in the State, and in the nation. The restrictions upon your actions as citizens have fallen away, and we stand together in the common rights of American citizenship, all being desirous to do our duty to the country and the City. In times past, in a very quiet way, when no persons were particularly observant of my modest calling, it fell to my lot to be instrumental in fostering certain enterprises that involved to a very eminent degree at that time very much of interest and very much of opposition. It fell to my lot to be the means of establishing some institutions here in which the whole of the colored population of the City took a very great interest. That was more than twenty years ago. I had almost forgotten it myself until somebody kindly reminded me of it, and it has given me at any rate some right to a friendly recognition on the part of the colored people of the City. You have your business and interests here like all of us, and are deeply concerned in the election of a man who would as Chief Magistrate of the City recognize your rights to their fullest extent, and you know that about these election times politicians are quite ready to recognize your rights and to extend the right hand of fellowship to secure your votes. I have never been a demagogue myself, and while it is not essential to my happiness to be Mayor, I am glad to see this expression of your interest in the nomination and election of a good man. If elected I should endeavor to discharge my duties satisfactorily with due respect to the rights of all classes.

HOW PARDONS ARE SECURED.

A CONVICT WHO WAS SENTENCED TO FIVE YEARS' IMPRISONMENT RELEASED AFTER A FEW MONTHS—THE PARDON PURCHASED BY THE PRISONER'S RELATIVES.

Among the many outrageous cases of convict-pardoning which have occurred during the past few months, none has created more general indignation than that of Otto Hupfeldt, a druggist doing business at No. 122 Forsyth street. The history of Hupfeldt's crime is as follows: From December, 1874, to March, 1876, Samuel O. A. Murphy, wholesale druggist, of No. 56 Barclay street, missed property, consisting of drugs, medicines, perfumes, &c., to the amount of over two thousand do lars, and failed to discover the thief. Finally he was compelled to invoke the aid of the police, and Detective Pullip Reilly, of Police Headquarters, was detailed to work up the case. After watching for some time, the detective became convinced that the thief was a young man named Andrew Cassidy, a clerk in the employ of Mr. Murphy. A watch was kept on Cassidy's movements, and he was seen on different occasions to convey parcels from the store of his employer to that of Hupfeldt, who invariably secreted them beneath the counter. After he had, in his opinion, established a case against Hupfeldt, Reilly arrested both him and Cassidy. The latter admitted that he had been robbing his employer for years, and had sold the stolen property to Hupfeldt, who agreed to pay him about half the market price for them. On these facts three indictments for receiving stolen goods were found against Hupfeldt, and he was brought to trial on one of them on June 20 last. The case had been carefully prepared by Assistant District Attorney Russell, and after hearing the testimony of Cassidy, the thief, who was used as State's evidence, Detective Reilly, and the other witnesses for the prosecution, the jury promptly rendered a verdict of guilty. On this conviction Recorder Hackett sentenced Hupfeldt to five years' imprisonment in the State Prison, and great satisfaction a the result was expressed by merchants and others interested in the punishment of receivers, who, as a rule, are held to be even more guilty than the thieves. No steps were taken to appeal the case, but the friends of the prisoner commenced working in another, and what has since proved to be a more successful, direction, to obtain his release. On Aug. 24, but two months after the conviction, District Attorney Phelps was astounded to receive a letter from Edward Miggael, the Pardon Clerk at Albany, asking that the Governor had received an application for the pardon of Hupfeldt and requesting information in relation to the case. Mr. Phelps replied immediately, setting forth the facts, and stating in language that could not be misunderstood that Hupfeldt had been properly convicted on one of the three indictments against him, and that there could be no question as to his guilt. These representations, however, appear to have had no effect, for in a little more than a month Mr. Phelps received another letter from the Pardon Clerk, stating that Gov. Tilden had pardoned Hupfeldt. A day or two afterward the ex-convict resumed his accustomed place behind the counter of his drug store, and on being asked by his neighbors how he had obtained his release, said without the slightest reserve that the operation, though unusually speedy, had cost him a large sum of money.

The case, of course, elicited general comment, and from the facts which came to the surface it was evident that money had been used to secure the pardon of Hupfeldt. It appears that ex-Assistant Alderman George J. Kraus, living at No. 124 Orchard street, represented to the mother of Hupfeldt that he was the Private Secretary of Senator Joan Morrissey, had great influence at Albany, and could secure the pardon of her son if his terms were agreed to. The lady, it is stated, promptly paid him a large sum of money, and he set about fulfilling his portion of the contract. He ordered a copy of the fee money in the case from the stenographer of the Court of General Sessions, obtained the record of the conviction, and drew up a petition to the Governor. He then mined a horse and wagon, drove through the thickly-populated German districts on the east side, and had no difficulty in securing an imposing array of signatures to the petition. It is also stated that he obtained the signatures of Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, Chairman of the National Democratic Committee, ex-Assemblyman Thomas Cooper Campbell, and other influences in the trade of Gov. Tilden. The petition was presented in due season, and judging from its success the friends of the convicted druggist can have no reason to regret the manner in which their money was expended. They admit having paid a large sum, but decline to state who was the recipient of it. The neighbors of Hupfeldt assert that $1,000 was paid to Kraus, a considerable portion of which, however, they are of opinion he had to divide with others whose co-operation was necessary to the success of the scheme. It is also stated that the division of the money has not been fairly made, and that the dissatisfaction of some of the parties may lead to a thorough exposure of the discreditable transaction.

DUNCAN SHERMAN & CO.'S ARREST.

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday heard a motion by Joseph Larocque, who appeared for Messrs. Duncan Sherman & Co., for a stay of proceedings in the suit of Roebling and others, pending an appeal to the Court of Appeals from the decision of the General Term of the Supreme Court denying the motion to vacate the orders of arrest obtained against the members of the bankrupt firm. The counsel argued that he desired the determination of the highest court in the State on the question whether, when a person is insolvent and has knowledge of the insolvency, but has not made any disposition of his property or closed up his business, his conduct in not disclosing the true condition of his affairs is such a case of fraud as to sustain an order of arrest. Judge Barrett granted the stay.

THE SCANTY WATER SUPPLY.

LETTER FROM COMMISSIONER ALLAN CAMPBELL—CAUSES OF THE PRESENT SCARCITY OF CROTON—ADDITIONAL SUPPLIES PROCURED DURING THE SUMMER—A NEW AQUEDUCT AT A COST OF $20,000,000 ADVOCATED.

The following letter on the subject of the scarcity of Croton water has been addressed to the editor of THE TIMES by Mr. Allan Campbell, Commissioner of Public Works:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS,
COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE Oct. 13, 1876.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

SIR: I am induced by the numerous complaints of citizens and the comments of the public press, in regard to the limited supply of Croton water in this City, to make an "official statement" on the condition of the water supply and the causes of its present limitation. In my report to the Mayor for the quarter ending June 30, the general question of the water supply was discussed and a statement made of the works completed and in progress at the sources of the Croton, for storing water in order to meet the demand when the natural flow of the Croton, by reason of drought, fails to furnish a sufficient quantity. In that report it was stated, first, that the aqueduct has sufficient capacity to afford a liberal supply to the present population, if inexcusable waste can be avoided; and, second, that the water-shed of the Croton valley has an area adequate, with proper storage of its drainage, and by the aid of additional conduits to meet the demands of the City for generations to come. Also stated that the steady and rapid growth of New-York would soon call either for the early construction of a new aqueduct, the maximum capacity of the existing one having been reached, taking the rate of present consumption as a guide, or a resort to meters to restrict the use, the latter remedy being in my opinion objectionable in many respects. Although the public generally are aware of the unusual drought during the past Summer, it is probably not known that from June until the present time, a period of over four months, the drought in the Croton Valley and its tributaries has been unexampled within the past fifty years. Since the 22d of June no water has run over the Croton Dam, except for the short space of two days. The Croton River itself has dwindled to the dimensions of a mere brook, and resort has necessarily been had to the artificial reservoirs at Boyd's Corners and to the natural lakes of Westchester and Putnam Counties. During this period of unprecedented drouth, 4,470,000,000 gallons of water have been drawn from the water-shed up in these basins, through which every one of the benefits it will afford, provided they can be assured that the money will be honestly expended.

From what has now been stated, the cause of the present short supply of water will be apparent. The ordinary daily consumption at this season would be 100,000,000 gallons, whereas the present supply is but 70,000,000 gallons, more than one-half of which is drawn from the reservoirs in Putnam County and Westchester County. This supply is under the control of the department, and it is deemed prudent, in view of the limited quantity still in store, and the possibility of a continuance of the drought, to restrict the supply to the amount stated, although it is to be hoped, and there is reason to believe, that relief will come from rains at any day. It is better by economy to suffer at present partial evil, than by extravagance to run the hazard of a still greater infliction. The department is now engaged in securing additional present supplies from the lakes by further purchases and by depressing still more the outlets of those which will bear it, and, notwithstanding the grave aspect of the question, I am in hopes, that the serious evil of a total failure will be averted. That the water does not rise as high as usual in many houses is due to the lower level of the City reservoirs, consequent upon the reduced supply from the Croton River and Valley, and can only be remedied by copious rainfalls. The high service supply, which is intended to accommodate elevated parts of the City, is very beneficial and useful. I have caused an examination to be made of the whole City, and I propose to extend the high service system to other elevated portions not now thus accommodated. The expense will be insignificant in comparison with the advantages to be attained.

It is proper to add that the question of a new aqueduct was in connection with the present limited supply, as the existing aqueduct is now only limited to about two-thirds of its capacity. The deficiency arises from the extraordinary drought, and not from defficiency of conduits. The views I have presented on the subject of a new aqueduct have reference to the necessities of a growing population and an increase in commerce and manufacture.

ALLAN CAMPBELL,
Commissioner of Public Works.

MEXICAN VETERANS.

The regular annual meeting of the New-York Association of Veterans of the Mexican War was held yesterday at the Armory, corner of Broadway and Forty-fifth street, Col. William Lyna Tidball in the chair. Several notable persons were present. The election resulted in the choice of the following officers: President, Col. William Lyne Tidball; Vice Presidents, Gen. Winfield S. Hancock, Gen. Horatio G. Gibson, Gen. John C. Robinson, Capt. S. B. H. Vance, Vice Admiral S. C. Rowan, Rear Admiral Henry Walke, Col. John L. Broome, Gen. Thomas W. Sweeny, Gen. Francis E. Pinto, and Gen. Mansfield Lovell; Treasurer, William Colligan; Corresponding Secretary, Col. G. W. M. Leonard; Recording Secretary, James Van Duser; Financial Secretary, William H. Maxwell; Marshal, Gen. J. H. Hobart Ward; Sergeant at Arms, Capt. William Wade. After the election a beautiful gold badge or medal was presented to the President elect by the members of the association.

GOLD BADGES FOR ALDERMEN.

One feature of the case of Warren A. Sillcocks against the Mayor, &c., argued on appeal before the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, was rather amusing. The plaintiff sues to recover $4,900 for gold badges furnished the members of the Common Council in 1870, in accordance with a resolution of the municipal legislators. In the court below the complaint was dismissed on the ground that the materials should have been supplied by contract, and also that there was no appropriation set aside from which to pay the claim. The counsel for the plaintiff in his argument yesterday claimed among other things that these objections applied only to contracts for improvements. The natural inference, though not so stated by counsel, seemed to be that the badges could not be considered an improvement in any sense—in inference that may possibly be a true one. Decision was reserved by the General Term.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

"W. M. S." is informed that he is entitled to vote in New-York.

Neil McKenna, who gave his residence as No. 24 Jackson street, was arrested yesterday for a violation of the Registration laws.

George C. Tamlyn, merchant tailor, of No. 268 West Thirty-fourth street, made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors to William C. Heath yesterday.

Archer White, a Scotchman, residing at No. 16 Suffolk street, fell into the hold of the steam-ship Caledonia, lying at Pier No. 21 North River, yesterday, and received a fracture of the skull.

William A. Butler, the Receiver of the Manufacturers' and Builders' Bank, was another sad yesterday to begin the payment of a second dividend of twenty per cent. to depositors of the institution.

Owing to the heavy Centennial travel the Hudson River day boats will run until the close of the Exhibition. As the foliage is now undergoing a change, this can be seen to its greatest beauty.

The new Columbia College boat-house on the Harlem River will be formally opened to-morrow afternoon. A students' regatta, consisting of six-oared and four-oared shell and single-scull races, will be held, beginning at 3 o'clock.

Burglars on Monday night forced an entrance into the basement of the Church of the Redeemer, at Eighty-second street and Fourth avenue, through a basement window, and stole the carpet from the floor, a clock, and several other articles, valued in all at $45.

At a meeting of the Park Commissioners yesterday, specifications and plans were ordered for a new iron bridge to span the Harlem River, about two blocks above the railroad bridge. Messrs. Decker & Quinard were awarded contracts for improvements on Riverside avenue.

A novel feature at the fair in progress at St. Peter's Church, Barclay street, will be a rifle match this evening be ween twelve young ladies. The prizes are an elegant silver cake basket, a solid silver cup, and a silver napkin ring. The ladies have been practicing for some time, and are said to be capital shots.

THE TIMES has received from Mr. C. James $1, to be used in relieving the sufferings of Gustave Ballion, the French gunsmith, of No. 16 Spring street, who, on Sunday morning last, was stabbed in the abdomen while endeavoring to prevent the escape of John Sullivan, a sneak thief. Ballion is in almost destitute circumstances.

A regular meeting of the Fire Commissioners was held yesterday, at which a resolution was adopted requesting the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to prescribe the condition under which 20,000 feet of hose could be procured for the use of the department. Quite a number of transfers were made, and several firemen of different companies were fined for misconduct.

The steam-boat Black Bird, of Starin's Ferry Line, while on her 2:30 P. M. trip yesterday from New-Brighton, Staten Island, struck on a spile off the Jersey Shore, between the light-house and Bedloe's Island, knocking a hole in her bottom. She was beached south of Bedloe's Island, where she now lies, with two tugs in attendance. Her passengers were transferred to the steamer H. M. Wells and brought to the City.

The Ladies' Fair for the benefit of St. Stephen's Church, now in progress in the basement of the church, East Twenty-ninth street, between Lexington and Third avenues, is highly successful. There is a brilliant display of useful and ornamental articles, a cellar, refreshment, and art department, and a promenade concert every evening. Next week the Dions will play a match game of billiards in the interest of the fair.

BROOKLYN.

There were 158 deaths in Brooklyn last week, which is ten less than the total number reported the week before.

The trial of William A. Fowler, the suspended President of the Brooklyn Board of City Works, was yesterday further postponed till 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Naturalization papers have been granted to 4,000 persons this Fall by the Naturalization Bureau of Kings County. About one-third of these are Germans.

The Third Congressional District Democratic Convention met last evening in the rooms of the Democratic General Committee on Court street, and after calling the roll adjourned until Monday evening.

A bar-tender named Adam Kramer, residing at the corner of Scholes and Leonard streets, Eastern Division, attempted to commit suicide on Tuesday, while under the influence of liquor, by cutting his throat with a razor.

The Church of Our Father, (Universalist,) in Clermont avenue, near Atlantic, was entered by thieves yesterday morning, who stole thirty yards of the best carpet they could find. They gained admission by prying open a side window.

Mrs. Phillips, of No. 258 Tompkins avenue, was awakened on Tuesday night by the noise made by a burglar who had gained an entrance to her room. The fellow, finding himself discovered, fled from the apartment and escaped from the house without taking any property.

The tenth annual session of the Long Island Baptist Association was continued yesterday in the Washington Avenue Baptist Church, Eastern District. The Centennial Baptist Church, which was organized in January last by Rev. Justin D. Fulton, was yesterday admitted into the association.

August Bragman, a German, forty-one years of age, of No. 370 Eighteenth street, attempted to commit suicide, last night, by taking Paris green. He was taken to the Long Island College Hospital, where the physicians in attendance gave it as their opinion that he cannot recover. Domestic trouble is given as the cause of the act.

An illicit distillery, of 200 gallons capacity, was seized yesterday in a shed at No. 119 Imlay street, South Brooklyn, by three deputies from United States Marshal Harlow's office. The apparatus was nearly new, and was taken charge of by the officers. The mash, barrels, and 1,000 gallons of mash were destroyed. No arrests were made.

James Kelly, a private watchman, and Thomas Laird, a bartender in the saloon of Stephen Kratzenberg, No. 204 Fulton avenue, had a quarrel yesterday morning, during which Kelly pulled a revolver out of his pocket and shot at Laird. The ball missed Laird's head and passed through the snow window. The watchman was arrested and locked up.

George, the Count Joannes, yesterday argued before Judge Gilbert, in the Supreme Court of Kings County, in support of a motion asking that the plaintiff in the suit of William Hilderbrand against William B Ogden, for criminal conversation and $100,000 damages, be allowed to sue in forma pauperis. Judge Gilbert was of opinion that the case in its present form was only a repetition of another suit already before the court in another shape, but the Count politely informed the court that it was mistaken, and the order was granted.

NEW-JERSEY.

The property and franchises of the Newark and Clinton Railway Company will be sold at auction on Friday morning.

The annual fair for the benefit of St. Joseph's Church, Jersey City Heights, will be opened this evening in the spacious basement of the church. Several gentlemen from neighboring cities have kindly offered their services in "off-rent entertainments, consisting of readings, rehearsals, and musical receptions.

A rifle match between selected teams of the New-York and New-Jersey Schuetzen Corps took place yesterday in the Schuetzen Park at Union Hill. Each team consisted of twenty-two men and they had ten shots each. New-Jersey won by a score of 3,493 to 3,379 for New-York. A banquet was given after the match.

The Episcopal Convocations of Newark and Jersey City met in joint session yesterday in Christ Church, Newark, Dean Abercrombie, of Jersey City, presiding. In the morning the sacrament of the Holy Communion was administered, and the time after that was taken up with the transaction of routine business. In the evening "The Evil Effects of Congregationalism on the Church" were discussed.

Samuel Hartley, one of the three boys who are accused of having committed a highway robbery on a boy named William Clements, had an examination yesterday morning before Justice Keese, in the First District Police Court, in Jersey City, and was committed for trial. Clements was attacked by Hartley and two other boys, named respectively Johnson and Bell. Hartley took a $2 bill out of his pocket, and Johnson snatched it and ran away. Bell was discharged, there being no evidence that he had participated in the robbery.

Thomas Ryan was arraigned in the First District Police Court in Jersey City yesterday morning, on a charge of disorderly conduct. On Tuesday night Ryan forced his way into the basement of Gov. Bowe's residence, in Sussex place. He demanded money, and on being refused acted in a very disorderly manner. He finally went up stairs, where he was met by Mrs. Bedle, who ordered him out. His violent language and demeanor caused Mrs. Bedle considerable alarm. Mrs. Bedle's son summoned a policeman and the intruder was taken into custody. Justice Reese committed him to the County Jail for ninety days.

John McGaw, a contractor on the Bull's Ferry Road, Guttenberg, has been missing for two weeks. He and James Johnson had taken the contract to construct one section of the road and had almost completed the work. Two weeks ago he collected $2,000 in cash and $4,000 in improvement certificates, and in addition to this he had $3,000 in improvement certificates in his possession. The last seen of him he was on his way to New-York to negotiate some of the improvement certificates, and it has since been ascertained that he succeeded in converting about one-half of them into cash. Opinions as to the cause of his disappearance are varied. Some think that he ran away with the money, while others are under the impression that he has been waylaid, murdered, and robbed.

Catharine Stanton, residing on Third street, Hoboken, is lying at the point of death from burns received a few days ago. Her child died on Saturday, and Sunday night the casket containing the remains was placed on a table and surrounded by lighted candles. Mrs. Stanton was sitting by the side of the body, and when it grew late she became drowsy and fell asleep. She was awakened by a burning sensation, and starting up found that she was all on fire. She had fallen over against the candles, the flame from which communicated with her clothing. Mrs. Stanton lost her presence of mind and ran out, thus fanning the flames. Some neighbors caught her, and wrapping her in blankets, succeeded in putting the fire out. She attended the funeral of her child next day, but on returning home she was obliged to go to bed. She has since become so much worse that she has been taken to the hospital.

THE SHOT-GUN CANVASS.

ANOTHER ENCOUNTER BETWEEN BLACKS AND WHITES.

A SPEECH URGING THE ELECTION OF HAYES AND WHEELER AND HAMPTON—FIGHT BETWEEN A PARTY OF WHITES AND BLACKS—ONE MAN KILLED AND TWO WOUNDED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBIA, Oct. 19.—The Democratic shot-gun policy which was inaugurated in Edgefield resulted yesterday in another murder. A Democratic mass-meeting was held during the day and addressed by Gen. Hampton and Judge Mackey, the latter urging the election of Hayes and Wheeler and Hampton. The people laughed at him. In the evening, after the meeting, a party of six white men started for their home, which was at some distance from the Court-house. On the way they fell in with a party of negroes. A difficulty ensued; two negroes were wounded and one of the white men was killed. His friends went back to the Court-house and reported the affair, and immediately several hundred members of the rifle clubs were under arms and preparing to "clean out the niggers," as they expressed it. Gens. Butler and Gary advised them to keep the peace, however, and they obeyed. Major Klein, who is in command of the United States troops at Edgefield, sent a squad of men to the scene of the disturbance, and no further trouble is anticipated. Eight companies of United States troops will be sent into the State next week. Their presence will doubtless be sufficient to keep the peace.

THE RIFLE CLUBS "DIVIDING TIME."

GEN. BUTLER'S FORCES AT A REPUBLICAN MEETING—WHAT THEY DID AND WHAT THE MEETING PROVED—THE POWER OF UNITED STATES TROOPS—THE MEN WHO SHOUT FOR TILDEN AND REFORM.

From Our Special Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Sunday, Oct. 15, 1876.

Since Gov. Chamberlain issued his proclamation disbanding the South Carolina rifle and sabre clubs, which were organized since the opening of the political campaign, the Democratic newspapers of this State have been filled with inflammatory articles calling upon "the brave men of the South" to protect their honor; to preserve their organization; never to obey the orders of "the upstart from the North," and to "defy the power of the Radical usurper." At the same time these same journals have tried to prove by repeated assertions that the clubs which the Governor has ordered to disband had done nothing to disturb the peace of the State; that they had not been organized for political purposes; that they never attended political meetings, and that they were not armed and drilled like regular soldiers. A meeting of Republicans held at Edgefield Court-house yesterday proves beyond all question that these assertions were false in every particular. As it is perhaps unnecessary to state at this late date, Edgefield County originated "the shot-gun policy" in South Carolina. The man who is known as "Hamburg Massacre Butler" lives in Edgefield—in short, it is inhabited by some of the most desperate and lawless Democrats in the whole South. In every fair election held since the war the county has gone Republican by very large majorities, but this year because of the slaughter at Hamburg, and the many acts of intimidation and violence which followed, and which are still continued, the leading men of the Republican Party who lived in the county were obliged to leave their homes, caring for their lives, and the negro voters became disorganized and disheartened. Wade Hampton's friends, seeing their advantage, continued their violence, and declared that the Republicans should hold no more public meetings in the county. In spite of these threats, however, the Republican Executive Committee announced that a meeting of Republican voters and all those who sympathized with them would be held at Edgefield Court-house on Saturday, the 14th inst. Upon this the Edgefield Advertiser—Wade Hampton's organ—published an order for the postponement of all the Democratic meetings which were to be held in the county upon that day, and all the rifle clubs were directed to assemble at the Court house to attend the Republican meeting. It was under these circumstances and with a full knowledge of these facts that Robert Smalls, the brave colored Congressman, Col. Fillebrown, Mr. Brayton, and other Republican speakers, together with a few friends, left Columbia for Edgefield. Gov. Chamberlain desired to accompany them, but at the earnest solicitation of a number of friends and of a few Democrats, who warned him that his life would be in danger, he did not go. The event proved that this action on his part prevented a repetition of the bloody massacres at Eleuton and Hamburg.

Soon after the train containing Smalls and his friends came within the confines of Edgefield, "the county that has never been reconstructed," it was met by a party of about one hundred men on horseback, who were uniformed in red shirts and black slouch hats. As the train passed this company it was saluted by "the rebel yell" and by the firing of guns and pistols. I must state that these were discharged in the air, not at the train. When the train stopped at the little station called Ridge Spring fourteen men, uniformed in the same way as those who had first saluted the train, and armed with at least two and in some cases three or four heavy navy revolvers, came into the car where the Republican speakers were seated, and one of them who appeared to be the leader cried out, "Where is that dirty little dog, Dan Chamberlain? We have come to shoot his bald head off." Then the whole party drew their pistols and passed down the car until they came to where Congressman Smalls was seated. Here they paused for a moment, and one of them exclaimed, "Hello; here's that yellow pup, Smalls." "Yes," said another, "and if he knows what's good for a half-blood nigger he won't go to Edgefield." Finding that Gov. Chamberlain was not in the car, they contented themselves with cursing and abusing the other Republicans in the most approved fashion of the Southern chivalry, and then, as they could find no one foolhardy enough to answer them, they left the train. Scenes like this were repeated at every station until Pine House was reached. Here the party was unexpectedly met by two companies of the Second United States Infantry, who were on their way to Edgefield. Declining, for obvious reasons, the company of the military, Smalls and his party proceeded in wagons to the Court-house. Here they were met by at least two thousand white men in red shirts, armed with rifles and pistols, and all well mounted. They were in command of Gen. Butler, and at the order from him, "Now, boys, give the Radicals a cheer," greeted the little band of Republicans with oaths, hoots, jeers, and yells of the most offensive—and, to people with weak nerves, of the most terrifying—description. This demonstration was, of course, intended to keep the negroes from attending the Republican meeting, and for a time it seemed as if it would be entirely successful, for the colored men and women stood in groups by themselves on the side of the street opposite the rifle clubs. They had no word of welcome for their friends, and leaders, they were silent and afraid. Suddenly, however, they saw the two companies of United States troops marching toward the barracks, with the flag of the Union at their head, and then, almost as if by magic, they began to dance and cheer and shout. I have never seen so sudden a change in a crowd. It seemed for a time as if the poor people would go wild with joy. They knew that no harm could come to them in the presence of the troops, and their gladness knew no bounds. They acted just about as they do at a camp-meeting, and among the shouts for Hayes and Wheeler were mingled the cries of "We'll vote, now, honey!" "Our Jesus have come!" "Uncle Sam boys am da!" "How is you, Mr. Rifle Club!" and "To be sure, dat's a fact, no more nigger killin' now." The rifle clubs were almost equally excited. They pretended to be very glad to see the troops, however, and then quietly rode away at the word of command. The soldiers went to their quarters, where they were kept under arms during the day, and the negroes, secure in a knowledge of their presence, proceeded to a large open space just out of the village and prepared to hold their meeting. At the same time the rifle clubs and a vast crowd of Democrats gathered about the Court-house and were addressed by Gens. Butler and Gary, both of whom said that as Chamberlain was afraid to come to Edgefield and as additional United States troops had arrived in the town, it would be best not to attempt to "divide time" with the Radicals. Butler's words were: "Gentlemen, the chief of the Radical thieves—the man who may be Governor of South Carolina, but who is not the ruler of Edgefield—is afraid to come among us; he is not here, and we do not care to interfere with such inferiors as Smalls and Brayton. We will not attempt to divide time with them."

While these speeches were being made by the Democratic leaders, the Republicans opened their meeting. While it was in progress, Gen. Butler rode up to United States Marshal Low, who was present, and said, "My men want to march around your meeting and give it a cheer, just to wake it up, you know; I suppose you have no objection." Col. Low replied, "Our objection would be to no purpose, Sir. You must act upon your own responsibility." At this Butler rode away, and shortly after the head of the rifle club column could be seen coming down the hill from the town. The men rode four abreast and were evidently well disciplined and drilled. Gen. Butler rode to a point near the Republican meeting, and the men, passing in review saluted their commander in the military fashion. Then they rode slowly around and around the Republicans, cheering for Tilden and Hampton, and yelling at the top of their voices. In this way the meeting was broken up for nearly an hour. It adjourned soon after, and on the way to the town the Republican speakers were again subjected to the vilest insults at the hands of the rifle clubs. On the way to Columbia the scenes of the morning were repeated. At Ridge Spring a large party of uniformed roughs came into the car in which Congressman Smalls was seated and said they wanted a lock of his hair, he was "such a nice nigger." One of these pleasant gentlemen said to Mr. Brayton, "You may carry South Carolina, but by —— we will get Edgefield in spite of your nigger majority and all the Yankee troops in the world." After many insults of the same character the party arrived in Columbia.

The events of the day proved a number of things. In the first place, they demonstrated that the rifle clubs of Edgefield are thoroughly armed and disciplined. They obey their leaders without question. If Gen. Butler had ordered them to fire upon the negro meeting, they would have done so without a word. He commanded them to refrain from personal violence, and they obeyed. These men, two thousand strong, assembled in direct defiance of the State authorities. They held those authorities in contempt. In Germany, England, or France they would be treated as insurrectionists. Even in Mexico Gen. Butler's command could only be regarded as a revolutionary army, but in South Carolina they are called "reformers." They shout for Tilden and Hampton.

OPINIONS IN WASHINGTON.

THE PRESIDENT REGRETS THE NECESSITY OF SENDING TROOPS TO SOUTH CAROLINA—NO INTERFERENCE WITH VOTERS INTENDED—THE PRESIDENT AND SENATOR ROBERTSON HOPEFUL OF A PEACEFUL ELECTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—Senator Robertson, of South Carolina, had an interview with the President to-day in relation to affairs in that State. In reply to Senator Robertson's inquiries, the President informed him that he had heard of no new developments in the situation, and expressed gratification with the intelligence that the rifle clubs and other armed organizations have disbanded. The President said he regretted the necessity which required him to order troops to South Carolina, and in taking this step his purpose was simply to assist the State authorities in enforcing the laws and according to every citizen a full measure of protection. He assured Senator Robertson that the troops will not be permitted, in any manner, or under any pretense, to interfere with the election in South Carolina, or to be used to influence any class of voters in the expression of their feelings by means of the ballot. A sufficient force will be sent to the State to insure the public peace and to protect alike Democrats and Republicans against all attempts at intimidation or undue interference. He further assured the Senator that no law-abiding citizen has anything to fear from the presence of United States troops, and whether the troops will be required to leave their garrisons will depend entirely upon the conduct of the people of South Carolina themselves. The troops are sent to South Carolina to protect all the people of that State, and not to oppress any class or to interfere with any party.

Senator Robertson will leave here for South Carolina in a day or two, and sought this interview in order that he might be able to inform his constituents authoritatively of the views and purposes of the President. The Senator says he apprehends no collision between any portion of the people of South Carolina and United States troops, and expresses the conviction that the election will be orderly and quiet. He speaks of United States Marshal Wallace as a very discreet and cool-headed man, who is not likely to perform any act calculated to work injustice to any party. The Marshal is a native of South Carolina.

Democratic newspapers have labored to create the impression that a high state of feeling prevails here in consequence of the President's proclamation. There is no excitement whatever here over the matter. The proclamation receives only passing discussion, and is generally regarded as a simple act of executive duty which the formal requisition of Gov. Chamberlin imposed upon the President. The report that Judge Black and other Democrats held a meeting here and denounced the action of the President is not true. No such meeting was held nor was such a meeting contemplated.

OSWEGO, Oct. 19.—Company F, Third Artillery, stationed at Fort Ontario, has been ordered to South Carolina, and will leave to-night.

THE CENTENNIAL SOUTHERN DAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 19.—This was another of the great days of the Centennial Exhibition—made so by the fact that Maryland, Delaware, and Virginia held their State celebrations, the latter in spite of the protest made by Gov. Kemper. As far as Virginia and West Virginia were concerned, it was merely a house-warming, where the residents of the State here present marched into the building, registered their names, and made quick exits. Delaware did better, for Gov. Cochrane, accompanied by the American Rifles, of Wilmington, marched into the Centennial grounds about 10:30 and proceeded to the Delaware State building. A half hour later Gov. Carroll, of Maryland, and staff, accompanied by the famous Fifth Maryland and the Sixth Regiment of National Guards of that State, was admitted at gate A, and marched to their building, where a reception was held. Gen. Hawley making an address of welcome, to which Gov. Carroll responded, after which S. W. L. Findlay, of Baltimore, delivered an address, prospective and retrospective, Thomas Wilson, of Washington, speaking afterward for the District of Columbia, which was included in this celebration. The little Diamond State authorities also held a reception, when Gen. Hawley did the welcoming honors, and Gov. Cochrane responded, thanking the commission for their courtesies and calling attention to the fact that this day was the anniversary of the surrender of Yorktown, and to the part that Delaware soldiers bore in that battle. An oration was delivered by Hon. W. G. Whiteley, after which the vast audience dispersed to view the more amusing portion of the day's ceremonies. This consisted of a tilting tournament by the Knights of the Red Cross, they being gentlemen of the South, experienced in the art, who caused the country people to gape in wonderment at their skill, both in horsemanship and in the use of the lance. This was a new idea here, and attracted an immense crowd, the admissions for the day numbering not less than 170,000, making this the second largest day so far, as regards attendance, exceeding New-York day by about twenty thousand.

The ceremonies took place on the plateau at the foot of George's Hill, and were in charge of Col. S. Taylor Suit, of Maryland. The hurdle and tilting arches erected were on a roadway some six hundred feet in length. The arches were about fifteen feet in height, and pendent from the centre was an iron bar, at the extreme end of which was placed a ring, one and one-eighth inches in diameter, suspended on a wire. The arches were placed about ninety feet apart, there being three of them. The test of skill consisted in the riders passing through the arches at a good speed and catching the ring on the tip of their lances, lifting it from the wire which supported it. In the evening the judges' pavilion was well filled to witness the crowning of the Queen of Love and Beauty by the Knight who won the first prize. The ceremonies were preceded by a great deal of pomp which was pleasing, and an oration by J. J. Stewart, of Baltimore. The queen was Miss Parke P. Perkins, of Virginia, a tall, handsome dark-blonde, who bore her honors with ease and grace. After the Queen had been crowned, the remaining four Knights conferred the same honor upon the Maids of Honor. To give effect to the scene, a party of plantation darkies rendered a song in true Southern style, in salutation to the Queen, after which the audience paid their respects to her Majesty and concluded the evening's enjoyment by dancing, at the conclusion of which the prizes were awarded.

CHINA AND JAPAN.

INDIGNATION OF BRITISH RESIDENTS OVER THE SETTLEMENT OF THE MARGARY AFFAIR—THE CHINESE INSURRECTIONS—JAPANESE NOTES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 19.—The Pacific Mail steam-ship Alaska, from China and Japan, arrived last night, bringing advices from Hong Kong and Shanghai to Sept. 17.

Much indignation is expressed by British residents in China at the terms agreed to by Sir Thomas Wade, the British Minister, for the settlement of the Margary affair. The result is generally pronounced unsatisfactory to English feeling, and as a triumph for Chinese diplomacy.

The insurrections are spreading in various provinces. Yakub Beg is reported to have crossed the extreme western boundary of China proper, the imperial troops retreating before him to Lan-Chan-fu, capital of the Province of Kansuh.

The United States steamer Alert arrived at Hong Kong Sept. 11 to replace the Saco in Asiatic waters.

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Sept. 27.—The great demand for silk continues, and 3,000 bales have been exported since July 1.

Three ships of war are about to sail for England, with crews for the iron-clads just built for the Japanese Government.

The Mikado will visit the old capital, Kioto, at the end of October, and will preside at the opening of the railway between Kioto and Osaka.

Applications have been received by Japanese officials and private Japanese capitalists, from the Chinese Government, for loans and for advances of produce.

An arsenal is to be founded at Hakodadi.

THE WEATHER.

PROBABILITIES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20—1 A. THE CHARLEY ROSS ABDUCTION CASE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 19.—In the Court of Quarter Sessions to-day the case of Samuel Beuners, charged with being concerned in the abduction of Charley Ross, was brought to the attention of the court, a writ of habeas corpus having been taken out for the accused by his counsel, who charged that Beuners had been arrested without a warrant, had not been permitted to see his counsel, and that the prisoner was illegally held. The Judge said that counsel had the right to have an interview with his client, and the writ was thereupon withdrawn. What information the authorities have concerning Beuners' connection with the Ross case has not yet been learned, but it is believed that there are good grounds for his detention.

THE NATIONAL MILITARY HOME.

FORTRESS MONROE, Oct. 19.—The veterans of the National Military Asylum, near Hampton, having seen some articles in Northern papers reflecting on the management of their home, held an indignation meeting to-day, and after a full and free discussion of the matter adopted a series of resolutions indorsing the management of the Home under Gov. Woodin, and pronouncing the statements which have been published false in every particular.

PEACE OR WAR IN EUROPE?

ACTION OF THE BRITISH CABINET.

WAR BETWEEN RUSSIA AND TURKEY CONSIDERED UNAVOIDABLE — INTERFERENCE BY ENGLAND NOT DEMANDED BY THE RELATIONS OF THE BELLIGERENTS—NO PROSPECT OF RESISTANCE TO RUSSIAN POWER FROM AUSTRIA OR GERMANY—THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE ESTABLISHED.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The Cabinet met yesterday. All the Ministers were present. The Times says the meeting was rendered necessary by the critical state of affairs in Europe, for the negotiations which have occupied the last twelve months are virtually at an end and war between Russia and Turkey is supposed to be unavoidable. Every resolution at a time like this is momentous. Even the conclusion that nothing remains to be done is one which a single Minister might decline to be responsible for. The Ministers met only to confirm by common accord the conclusions at which the country had arrived. If the result be only negative as far as present action is concerned, this only represents the almost unanimous desire of the nation. There is to be no ultimatum or contingent declaration of war. There will, moreover, be no Autumn session of Parliament. The Cabinet did nothing which can justify prevailing fears of British participation in the war. It will be understood this result does not involve a positive decision respecting events which are still uncertain, and the position will change continually. It amounts only to this: that the existence of virtual war between Russia and the Porte does not create a state of things calling for our interference; that we are not called upon either by the text of treaties or by moral obligation to defend one of those Empires against the other. The nation reserves full liberty of action should the compromising of her interests ever call for interference. All we can see at present is that a war of race and religion, sufficiently formidable, is likely to ensue in Eastern Europe. If it was permissible policy to wait and see what would come of the struggle between the Turks and their rebellious subjects, it is not now wrong to stand aside and see the development of the same contest. England has never undertaken to interfere in the concerns of the Continent without Continental allies. There is no good ground for believing that we should have real support from any power in a war for the defense of the Turkish State. Effectual resistance to Russian power must proceed from Austria and Germany. It appears unlikely that either of them will take a hostile position toward Russia, all having finally returned to the triple alliance.

The Queen will hold a Council next Monday.

WHAT TURKEY MUST SUBMIT TO.

ACCORD BETWEEN AUSTRIA, GERMANY, AND RUSSIA—INDEPENDENCE OF SERVIA AND MONTENEGRO AND ADMINISTRATIVE AUTONOMY OF BOSNIA AND OTHER PROVINCES—NO PROSPECT OF EUROPEAN AID FOR TURKEY.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The Berlin correspondent of the Times telegraphs: It is understood that the Austrian reply to the Czar's second letter while promising neutrality in the event of a Russian invasion of Bulgaria, practically reserves for Austria the right of operating in any other part of Turkey.

The Times' correspondent at Paris says there is no doubt of complete accord between Russia, Germany, and Austria. It can be easily seen that England and France will not break their neutrality. Therefore Russia only has Turkey to face. The only Minister of the Ottoman Cabinet who believed that Turkey might defend herself and receive European aid has fallen. The Cabinet are now convinced that Turkey cannot count on the accord of Europe in her favor, and that Turkey cannot longer maintain complete dominion of the Balkan Peninsula. If they hesitate about the six weeks' armistice it is because they wish to know the conditions to which they will have to submit. What Russia wants is now known, and the Ottoman Cabinet will probably resign themselves to it. Russia wishes the absolute independence of Servia; the recognized independence of Montenegro, with an extension of territory, and the annexation of the port of Spissia and the political and administrative autonomy of Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria. She wishes to strip off Bessarabia, taken from her in 1856, and to have the liberty of the Dardanelles established.

RUSSIA HESITATING TO ACT ALONE.

DIFFERENT VIEWS AMONG THE POWERS ON THE QUESTION OF THE DURATION OF THE PROPOSED ARMISTICE—THE CZAREWITCH TO VISIT VIENNA, BERLIN, AND LONDON TO PROMOTE UNANIMOUS ACTION OF THE POWERS IN SOLVING THE EASTERN QUESTION.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—It is impossible to draw conclusions from the mass of conflicting telegrams about the intention of Russia and the position of the other powers. The correspondents who are usually the best informed are at fault now, and any assertions of pretended facts which may find their way to the United States should be regarded with great caution. Every capital in Europe is telegraphing to every other capital the inquiry, "Is it peace or war?" and nobody who will is able to answer the question. The news of the reconstitution of the triple alliance is unconfirmed, but as yet it is uncontradicted. The publication of Russia's note refusing to agree to a six months' armistice, in the Berlin Imperial Advertiser, which is Germany's official gazette, is considered an indication of Germany's resolution to agree with Russia. On the other hand, the correspondent of the Times at Vienna, usually a most trustworthy authority, especially on diplomatic matters, repeats the assertion that England, France, and Italy declared to the Porte their acceptance of the six months' armistice, and that Austria expressed herself from the first in its favor. She refrained from promising definitely before knowing the views of Russia and Germany, but has frankly informed them that, in her opinion, Turkey's proposals are such as can be accepted. The correspondent confidently believes that in view of public opinion, which is decidedly in favor of the longest possible armistice, and the probable attitude of the Austro-Hungarian Parliament, it will be very difficult for the Government to reject the Turkish proposal. Now that England, France, and Italy have accepted it officially in Constantinople, Austria can scarcely remain behind them long. Austria's interests and antagonisms are such as to render these statements of the Times correspondent highly probable, but not more probable than an agreement with Russia and Germany for putting an end to the war. In the latter case the question of peace or war depends upon England. If the Times correspondent is right the question of peace or war depends upon Russia.

A Reuter dispatch from Berlin says: "At the present moment the great powers are supporting the proposals which Russia has made to the Porte in exactly the same terms as previously adopted by England. Russia prefers to avoid isolated action as long as possible, and in reply to all overtures intended to weaken the triple alliance, has intimated her intention to adhere thereto, and has further pointed out to one power that the supposition that a misunderstanding might arise between Austria and herself is in no way justified by the state of affairs."

A Reuter dispatch from St. Petersburg says: "Lord Loftus, the British Ambassador to Russia, will shortly proceed to Livadia. This is regarded as a symptom of a possible understanding between England and Russia."

A dispatch from Berlin, says the semi-official North German Gazette, this evening announces that it learns from a good source in St. Petersburg that the Czarewitch will shortly leave Livadia for Vienna, Berlin, and London for the purpose of personally promoting unanimous action of the great powers in the interest of a satisfactory solution of the Eastern question. According to assurances given in St. Petersburg circles, the Czar still adheres to his resolution not to act singly or abandon his alliances.

The Vienna Tagblatt announces that Servia and Montenegro have resolved to accept no armistice.

A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Constantinople announces that Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Ambassador to Turkey, who had been on leave of absence, returned to that city last night.

The St. Petersburg Golos yesterday published an article violently attacking Lord Beaconsfield, the British Premier. The semi-official Journal de St. Petersburg to-day expresses regret for the unseemly character of the article.

WARLIKE PREPARATIONS.

GREECE PROPOSING TO CALL OUT 60,000 MEN AND TO CONTRACT A LOAN—BRITISH TROOPS FOR INDIA TO AWAIT ORDERS AT GIBRALTAR OR MALTA.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The Vienna newspapers publish intelligence from Athens announcing that the Greek Government will submit to the Chamber of Deputies proposals for calling out 60,000 men and demanding a credit of 50,000,000 drachmas, and authority to contract a loan of 10,000,000 drachmas.

Her Majesty's Indian troop-ship Jumna left Portsmouth yesterday, for India, with 934 artillerymen, and upward of seventy officers, surgeons, &c. She will embark another battery of artillery at Plymouth. The departure of the troops from Woolwich, for Portsmouth, was witnessed by vast crowds, and the excitement displayed was the greatest since the Crimean war. The Times announces that the Jumna has been ordered to call at Gibraltar and Malta for orders in case circumstances should necessitate a change in the destination of the troops.

PORTSMOUTH, Oct. 19.—The latest addition to the English Navy, the Bacchante, an iron steam corvette cased with wood, 3,932 tons displacement, and 5,250 horse power, was launched at the Royal Dock-yard here to-day. The Bacchante will mount sixteen guns.

PLYMOUTH, Oct. 20.—Orders have been received at the Devonport Dockyard to complete the repairs on the four-turret steam-ships Cyclops, Hydra, Gorgon, and Hecate, each carrying four guns, and on the ironclad steamer Agincourt, carrying twenty-eight guns. Three composite gun vessels are building here, and two others in private yards are being prepared for commission.

THE EFFECT ON BUSINESS.

WAR RISKS DEMANDED BY INSURANCE COMPANIES—THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE AND THE CONTINENTAL BOURSES.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—This morning's Financier says: "A war risk of five shillings per cent. was required yesterday by Lloyds and various insurance companies on British vessels trading between England, Australia, and the East. No business is yet reported in risks on Russian, Austrian, and Italian vessels, but the rates on these would, of course, be higher."

The Stock Exchange this morning opened freer from a panicky feeling than yesterday, and most stocks were slightly firmer. Consols were at last night's closing price. Russians and Egyptians were about one per cent., and Turkish fractionally higher, but Hungarians were one per cent. lower. The absence of definite news merely checked sales. There were no indications of a recovery of confidence. At 6:30 P. M., however, the stock market and the Continental Bourses closed more settled. Prices were slightly firmer, but there was no marked recovery.

EFFECT ON THE AMERICAN LOAN.

OUR FOUR-AND-A-HALF PER CENTS FIRM IN LONDON—HOW A RUSSIAN LOAN MIGHT IMPEDE REFUNDING WITHOUT AFFECTING PRICES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The threatening aspect of the Eastern question has excited much interest here for two days, but has caused no intense excitement as in cities where commercial affairs are more dependent upon peace or war. The Treasury officers have anxiously watched the news and carefully scanned the prospects. They ask two questions: Will there be war? and if there should be war how will it affect the sale of our four-and-a-half per cent. bonds abroad? The prevalent opinion as to the first question seems to be that there will be no general war. By some, the independence of the Turkish provinces is looked for through the intervention of Russia, without opposition from the other powers. It is pointed out that Germany and Austria seem to have an understanding with Russia; that France is indifferent and England undetermined, and that none of the powers show a disposition to defend Turkey. But, of course, opinions are various. The Treasury Department is gratified at the fact that the four-and-a-half per cents have maintained their highest quotations in London in spite of the general unsettling of values in European securities. There is hope that this condition might continue through a European war. In that case, only one cause of interruption in the refunding of our bonds can be discovered. If there is war some of the powers must raise money by loans. This is notably true of Russia. It might happen that to dispose of bonds Russia might make such attractive inducements that capital would be diverted in that direction. It might seem better to wealthy money-lenders to buy Russian bonds at seventy-five or eighty, or even ninety, than American bonds at par. Thus the character of American securities might remain unimpaired, and yet the subscriptions stop because of the absorption of capital, for a time, in lower-priced bonds of other countries.

THE WAR EXCITEMENT IN CHICAGO.

FURTHER ADVANCE IN GRAIN AND PRODUCE — TWO FAILURES — OPERATORS IN THE "SHORT" INTEREST SUFFERING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 19.—On 'Change to-day, during the early session, Wheat opened with a rush at $1 15, cash, or seller October. It speedily rose to $1 16 on same terms. It ranged from $1 15⅝@$1 18¾, selling down to $1 16 and a fraction for seller November, and from $1 17¼@$1 19¾ for seller December, closing at $1 17¾. Corn kept pace with wheat in its quotations, selling, No. 2, at 48⅞ cents to 45¼ cents, cash, an increase of 1 to 1½ cents. Oats advanced ½ cent and rye 1 cent. Flour went up 12½ to 25 cents per barrel, with no anxiety to sell. Mess pork advanced 20 to 25 cents per barrel; lard, 10 cents per 100 pounds, and cut meats, ¼ cent per pound.

The war bulletins from New-York appeared to have a quieting effect upon the market, but the general admissions from Liverpool, London, and New-York, that war with Russia was inevitable, kept up the excitement. Should to-morrow's telegrams indicate that England will throw her sword into the scale for Turkey, the excitement will rage at fever heat, and the news of the last few days will be quiet compared to what may then be expected to follow. Everybody appears to agree in one thing, that a general European war would be a godsend to us.

Late in the afternoon the telegraphic dispatches showing the war feeling to be still unabated in the Old World, pork and lard took a flight upward, but gradually settled down to their former condition. Early in the day it was announced that the firm of Whitney & Dutch had failed. This is a large firm, with extensive Eastern correspondence, and a branch in Liverpool. Later in the day the commission house of H. J. Sheldon was forced to suspend business by reason of their "short" dealings.

THE FEELING IN COMMERCIAL CIRCLES.

The excitement in the Produce Exchange caused by the rumors of a general war in Europe was much less yesterday than on the day before, although more or less irregularity was reported in prices. In breadstuffs and provisions there was not so much disposition on the part of export buyers to purchase at the higher rates claimed, but the sales for the home trade were comparatively liberal. The tendency to indulge in speculation was also less apparent in the general market. At the close of the day the feeling was of firmness, apart from wheat, which left off tamely and rather weak on most qualities.

INTOLERANCE IN SPAIN.

PERSECUTION OF PROTESTANTS — LORD DERBY APPEALED TO—THE BRITISH MINISTER TAKING STEPS TO SECURE LIBERTY TO PROTESTANTS.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—The missionary societies connected with Spain sent an address to Lord Derby, representing to him the dangers to which the Protestants in Spain were exposed in consequence of the intolerance of the clergy and authorities, and suggesting that he should invite the cooperation of other powers, especially Germany and the United States, to protest against the continued persecution of Protestants, and to afford them protection. In reply Lord Derby says: "Our Minister at Madrid is taking such steps as he properly can to induce the Spanish Government to put a lenient construction on the eleventh article of the Constitution so as to secure full religious liberty to Protestants in Spain."

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

AN APOLOGY FROM THE HOLY SEE TO SPAIN—THE LOSS OF THE EGYPTIANS IN ABYSSINIA.

LONDON, Oct. 19.—A special dispatch from Rome to the Daily News says: Cardinal Antonelli's Secretary has apologized to the Spanish Ambassador for the discourtesy shown him by the committee which superintended the reception of the Spanish Pilgrims by the Pope on Monday last, in refusing to admit him and his attachés, but the Ambassador having telegraphed an account of the affair to Madrid has received instructions to demand an explanation from the Holy See.

A rumor was circulated here yesterday that the Duke Decazes, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, was about to resign, to be succeeded by Count de Chandordy, but it is to-day pronounced to be without foundation.

Silver was quoted at 4:30 P. M. to-day at 52½d. per ounce.

ANTWERP, Oct. 19.—A collision occurred to-day off Flushing between the steamers Switzerland, from New-York, and Grebe, from Liverpool. The latter was so badly damaged that she sunk. The Switzerland has two holes in the bow above the water line; she is otherwise uninjured.

VIENNA, Oct. 19.—The Austrian Reichsrath reassembled to-day.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

BONDS DEPOSITED BY NATIONAL BANKS TO SECURE CIRCULATION—THE COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE THE CAUSE OF STEAM-BOILER EXPLOSIONS—THE TRANSPORTATION OF UNAPPRAISED DUTIABLE MERCHANDISE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The aggregate amount of four and one-half per cents thus far deposited with the United States Treasurer by national banks to secure their circulating notes is $9,408,300, of which amount the banks of the State of New-York have deposited only $826,000. The following statement will show the amount of these bonds deposited by the various national banks of New-York:

First National, New-York City	$50,000
Phœnix, New-York City	300,000
Mutu National, New-York City	100,000
First National, Rome	20,000
First National, Yonkers	10,000
First National, Greenport	20,000
First National, Ellenville	150,000
Canastota National	40,000
National of Pine Plains	29,000
Vilas, of Plattsburg	42,000
Manufacturers', of Amsterdam	60,000
National, of Granville	5,000

Prof. John D. Runkle, President of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the chairmanship of the United States Commission appointed to inquire into the causes of steam-boiler explosions. Prof. Runkle succeeds Prof. Bernard, of Columbia College, New-York, who resigned. The board now consists of Prof. Runkle, Charles W. Copeland, of New-York; Isaac V. Holmes, of Ohio, and J. R. Robinson, of Massachusetts. The vacancy caused by the resignation of Prof. R. H. Thurston, of New-Jersey, has not yet been filled. Owing to the lateness of the season and the fact that the appropriation made by Congress to enable the board to make experiments has been nearly exhausted, it is not probable that further tests will be made until next Spring. The experimental operations of the board will be submitted to Congress in a report.

THE UNIVERSALISTS' CONVENTION.

ROCHESTER, Oct. 19.—The General Convention of Universalists convened in this city yesterday. Rev. H. W. Rugg, of Providence, R. I., was elected President, and J. L. Grant, of Auburn, Vice President. The principal business of the afternoon session was the reading of the report of the Board of Trustees. The receipts for the year were $20,655 88, and the disbursements for missionary and other purposes were $19,639 34. The debt of the convention was reduced during the year by $4,000. Rev. Dr. Rexford, of San Francisco, preached in the evening to a large audience in the Universalist Church. The occasional sermon was delivered this morning before the convention by Rev. Dr. T. J. Sawyer, of Tufts College Divinity School, to a crowded audience, and was a very able production.

POLITICAL MISCELLANY.

TO THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

ADDRESS OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE—THE SATISFACTORY RESULT OF THE FALL ELECTIONS—THE NATIONAL CANDIDATES THE REPRESENTATIVES OF THE BEST SPIRIT OF REFORM.

HEAD-QUARTERS REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE, FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL, NEW-YORK, Oct. 19, 1876.

The Republican National Committee congratulate the party which they represent and the country upon the result of the Fall elections already held. In Maine, a Republican majority of less than five thousand has been increased to nearly sixteen thousand. In Vermont, the old ascendency has been fully maintained. In Colorado, a Democratic majority of two thousand has been overcome, and a Republican Governor and both branches of the Legislature elected, securing two United States Senators and three Presidential Electors. In Ohio, a Republican majority of 5,500 has been increased to between nine and ten thousand, and five Republican Congressmen have been gained. In Indiana, a Democratic majority of 17,000 has been reduced to 5,000, with a gain of four Republican Congressmen and the Legislature upon joint ballot. These highly gratifying results have been obtained in the face of frauds at the ballot-box and an unparalleled use of money by the opposition. They show the drift of popular sentiment, and clearly indicate a national victory for the Republican Party in November.

All that is now necessary is to continue the vigorous prosecution of the canvass, to secure protection for all citizens in the right of the ballot, to bring all legal voters to the polls, and to practice the utmost vigilance upon the day of election.

Fortunately for the country, our candidates represent the best spirit of reform, to which they are pledged by every act and utterance of their lives. Their success alone will insure honest administration and preserve the Government from the unfriendly hands of those who recently sought to destroy it, and who now seek to prey upon its resources.

DEATH OF FRANCIS P. BLAIR.

SKETCH OF THE VETERAN POLITICIAN AND JOURNALIST.

HIS EARLY LIFE—A SUPPORTER OF HENRY CLAY AND THEN OF GEN. JACKSON—THE ORIGIN OF THE WASHINGTON GLOBE—BLAIR A MEMBER OF JACKSON'S "KITCHEN CABINET."

Francis Preston Blair, father of the late Gen. Frank P. Blair and of Hon. Montgomery Blair, died on Wednesday night at Silver Spring, Md., five miles from Washington, after a long illness. Mr. Blair, who was born at Abingdon, Washington County, Va., April 12, 1791, was descended from a prominent Scotch family, of which the author and divine, Hugh Blair, was a member. Francis in early life moved to Kentucky, and was educated in the Transylvania University. He followed the legal profession for a time, became Clerk of the State Circuit Court, and was elected by the Legislature President of the Commonwealth Bank, a State institution at Frankfort. He was naturally a politician, and was ardently enlisted in the question of State taxation of the United States Bank. Blair was a contributor to the Frankfort Argus, the leading Democratic paper in Kentucky, edited by Amos Kendall. Kendall had been a tutor in Henry Clay's family, and both he and Blair supported Clay for President in 1824. When Jackson triumphed, however, the Argus went over to "Old Hickory." Mr. Blair owned a farm and a few slaves, but was heavily in debt and living narrowly upon his salaries as Court Clerk and Bank President, when a mere accident put him on the road to fame and power. The South Carolina Nullification war was waxing fierce, and Jackson was growling back at Calhoun in ominous thunder. Organs were the fashion in those days, and every party looked to its recognized newspaper for wisdom and guidance.

THE ORIGIN OF THE GLOBE.

The story of the origin of the Globe, (which was the making of Blair's fortunes,) as told in Benton's Thirty Years, is not quite correct. The real facts are elaborately set forth in Amos Kendall's autobiographical notes, and he knew more about it than any other man—more even than Blair himself. When Jackson was elected the Telegraph, published at Washington by the redoubtable Gen. Duff Green, was the leading Democratic organ. But Green was an uneasy and somewhat slippery man, and even before Jackson's Administration was organized the Telegraph was looked upon by many of Jackson's friends as untrustworthy. A majority of the Jackson men in the Senate of 1828-9 were averse to electing Green to be their printer. Amos Kendall, then and for sometime previous the editor of the Frankfort Argus, the State paper of Kentucky, was in Washington looking for an office. Major Eaton, who was Gen. Jackson's keeper and man of all work, told Kendall that he could have the Senate printing if he would take it. Amos toyed lovingly with this office; he could not think of accepting unless he first had Green's consent, but he would not see Green himself. Eaton saw Green and got a flat refusal. Then Kendall as flatly refused to be Printer—so he says. Congress met, and this strife of editors for office (Green for the printing, Kendall for Fourth Auditor of the Treasury, and Isaac Hill, of the New-Hampshire Patriot, for any good thing he could get) induced a combination against the whole lot of editors. Jackson had already appointed Kendall and Hill—the latter to be Second Controller of the Treasury and the former to be Auditor. Green told Hill that the refusal to confirm him was due to the Eaton-Van Buren influence in the Cabinet. This led Kendall to suspect that Green meant to kill off Van Buren and press Calhoun into the succession, as he was an ardent friend of the great South Carolinian. Green's plan was to have the editors rejected and sent home under the impression that Jackson's friends had sacrificed them, when they would be ready to sing praises to Calhoun. But Kendall told Green that he should not go back, though he should be rejected. To keep Kendall right he was confirmed by the casting vote of Calhoun, who was then Vice President. But Jackson saw that Green was secretly against him, and a more subservient organ than the Telegraph, which was already embarrassing the Administration, was imperatively needed. Jackson meant to have a second term, and to that end his friends wanted a special organ. It is said that when the project was laid before Jackson he disapproved of it, as he feared, doubtless from Green's known pugnacity, that the papers would go to fighting each other, and spoil the whole business. Kendall and the others, however, brought him over, and in the office-holders were canvassed to know which of them would give patronage to a new paper. Favorable responses were given, except by Van Buren, (Secretary of State,) who said he would not give the concern a dollar's worth of pap, because, whether he did or not, he would be charged with the responsibility of starting an opposition to Green, and he meant to be able to say that he had nothing to do with it.

But Jackson's friends were resolved, and William T. Barry, of Kentucky, the Postmaster General, suggested that Francis P. Blair, who was then doing most of the editorial work on Kendall's paper, at Frankfort, should be called to edit the new organ. Kendall wrote to Blair; Blair protested, but at last—on an assurance that Kendall would assume an equal share of the responsibility—he agreed to remove to Washington. Neither Kendall nor Blair put in much capital to invest in such an undertaking, and Blair stipulated that the project should be kept secret until he could compound with his creditors, and particularly with the United States Bank, to which he was heavily in debt. To make the paper self-sustaining, subscriptions were paid in advance, and a subscription list was secured by Kendall, so that when Blair arrived he would have only to say "yes" to everything, and go ahead. Only the name of the paper and some significant motto—as was the fashion at that day—were unsettled. Kendall and Blair concurred in calling the unborn baby the Globe, and Kendall worked out from his inner consciousness the motto: "The world is governed too much." Thomas Ewing, a Kentucky giant who was amazed on being told that the little man sitting in a corner and writing upon his knee was the great editor.

He arrived in Washington in sorry plight, almost penniless, with only one presentable coat, and that of the long-tailed frock pattern, and furthermore adorned, or rather disfigured, with a gash on his head, got in an upset of the stage-coach. When he entered the President's office Major Lewis could hardly conceal his disappointment. For weeks Mr. Blair had been the "coming man" to all the near friends of the Government, and whenever the Telegraph came out in attacks upon any of the Cabinet or party the reply was "Just wait till your head man Blair gets here; he'll give Duff Green a tartar." And now here was the Western wonder—a thin, mild-looking little man, in frock coat and court-plaster. "Mr. Blair," said Major Lewis, with a glance at the patch of plaster, "we want stout hearts and sound heads here."

Jackson took to Blair at once, and he returned the feeling most cordially. The President revealed to his protégé the state of affairs without reserve or hesitation. The difficulties in his own household; the machinations of the nullifiers; the devices of that arch-demon, Henry Clay; the social combination against Mrs. Eaton and her husband—all were set forth. The President also invited his prospective editor to dinner. When the time came the bashful Blair was horrified to find a large company of ambassadors and other great men in the East Room, all in full dinner costume. Ashamed of his frock coat and general unfitness for such company, he shrank into a corner as far as possible from sight; but Jackson found him out, made him take the seat of honor at his own right hand, and completed the conquest of Blair's fluttering heart. From that day until his death Jackson found not only a champion, but a loving and admiring friend in Francis P. Blair, who really believed, with Colbert, that Jackson was the greatest man that ever lived.

There are many anecdotes about Blair's lack of beauty, such as having the historical jack-knife presented to him by a stranger, and others. Rives, a gentleman used to say he thought they were the ugliest pair in the country. The fun-loving Major Noah, in recording a visit of editors to President Jackson, said: "We counted twenty-one editors, all prepared to sally out to visit Gen. Jackson, in February, 1829. Isaac Hill (a weasened, lean, and lame specimen) proposed that Noah should lead the squad. 'No,' said Noah, 'I'm too fat; if old Hickory sees me he will think we editors require no office. Our deputation must be headed by the worst-looking—the lean, the halt, and the blind.' Saying this the Major put Blair, Kendall, and Hill at the head of the procession."

The Globe became a power in politics, of course. Its editor was the confidant-priest of Jackson when that headstrong leader was in the height of his power. He was a daily visitor at all hours, and wrote or revised or took down at the President's dictation the whole body of Democratic law and gospel. Blair was soon known as the real keeper of the elephant, and his power was conceded and confirmed. The Globe was bold, aggressive, and given to plain speaking in very Jacksonian diction. Its violence of language was something unusual, and it became much talked about and quoted.

MR. BLAIR'S POLITICAL POWER.

Mr. Blair figured largely in political events thenceforward until Jackson's death. He was one of four men who managed the Democratic Convention of 1832 at Baltimore. The other three were Mayor William B. Lewis, Jackson's nearest old friend and supporter; Isaac Hill, the leading Democratic editor of New-Hampshire, and Amos Kendall, afterward Postmaster General. Mr. Blair was conspicuously hostile to the United States Bank, and even more bitter against it than was Jackson himself. The Globe urged the removal of the deposits, utterly regardless of the disastrous effect that such an act would have on business, and Jackson was equally inaccessible to reason in the matter. Nullification was fiercely opposed, the more vigorously because of Calhoun's political and personal hostility to Jackson. All the measures of the party were first submitted to Blair, and drafted in the Globe until ready for proposal. Mr. Blair was not only a member, but he was the member, of the famous personal body-guard of the President known as the "Kitchen Cauinet." He had keys to all secrets, and all doors were open to him. All ideas of personal advancement were unlelt, or at least suppressed, if felt, and everything was subordinate, in Mr. Blair's actions, to fidelity to his friend and idol, Gen. Jackson.

Mr. Blair was a firm believer in Van Buren, and utterly scouted the idea that the Little Magician was in any sense an intriguer. When Jackson was cramped for money, in 1842, he applied to Mr. Blair for a loan of $10,000. It is needless to say that the money was sent at once, but we must add that the old General would not accept it except upon conditions that would secure its return. Mr. Blair and his partner really desired to present the money to the General, but such a thing was not to be attempted with impunity. Gen. Jackson was always interested in Mr. Blair and the Globe. The time came, however, when the sacrifice of Blair was demanded by party necessity. The Democratic Party got along very well until the reverses following the panic of 1837; it was considerably shaken then in 1838, and quite overthrown in 1840 by the election of Harrison. Tyler, however by his double-dealing, revived the hopes of the party, and tried himself to wheedle from it the regular nomination for President. Failing in this he got himself nominated, and proposed to run, with not the ghost of a chance for a single electoral vote. He was a stumbling-block in the way of Polk, and Polk's friends were desirous of getting him out of the way. Calhoun was still a bitter enemy of Blair, and it is recorded that he, through a special messenger, agreed to secure the vote of South Carolina to Polk if Polk's friends would turn Blair out of the Globe. [South Carolina chose her electors by legislative ballot, and no doubt Calhoun could do as he said.] Polk agreed to get Blair out only on condition that Tyler should withdraw. Blair was obnoxious to Tyler because of the Globe's opposition to his administration and to himself personally. There was a great deal of underhand planning and bargaining, correspondence with Gen. Jackson, pleas of good of the party, of the necessity for a united front to beat Clay, and all that. The result was an agreement whereby Mr. Blair retired, selling the establishment to Thomias Ritchie and John P. Heiss for $35,000, the consideration being allowed for the "good will." Thus the Globe was wheeled off the track, and was two weeks afterward superseded by the Union. The Madisonian (Tyler's organ) came out for Polk, and Tyler abandoned the field. Blair had the offer of a foreign mission to Spain, but he declined. As soon as he found that Gen. Jackson had agreed to the sale of the Globe he made no question as to himself. Some of Jackson's letters on the subject are very spicy, and his opinions of certain political lights of the day were far more plain than complimentary.

These events made a great stir at the time. Independent newspapers were rare and of little account. Party organs were necessary, and such a transformation could not fail to excite interest. Mr. Blair's editorial life closed here, though he and his partner long continued to print the Congressional Globe, and amassed fortunes thereby.

MR. BLAIR BECOMES A REPUBLICAN.

Mr. Blair retired to his farm, called "Silver Spring," in Maryland, about five miles from Washington. There he spent long years in comparative retirement, though occasionally heard from in print or otherwise. He meddled very little in politics until the repeal of the Missouri Compromise signaled the end of the Democratic organization. Mr. Blair was alive to the coming danger, and was an early and zealous member of the Republican Party, in the formation of which he made his great experience and natural tact of much value. The notions of indissoluble union that he advocated in 1832 in opposing Calhoun's nullification were unchanged when the late rebellion came, and he labored firmly and actively on the loyal side, aiding with voice and pen and means in sustaining that Union which his great friend Jackson said "must and shall be preserved." His home at Silver Spring was long a sort of shrine whither wended long lines of Democratic pilgrims; but when the party fell out of its old traditions their visits fell away also. A more desirable class, however, of personal friends and old acquaintances made frequent journeys to the hospitable mansion, and spent pleasant hours in admiring the comfortable and elegant establishment and its surroundings.

Mr. Blair's two sons are well known to the public. The elder, Montgomery, was educated for the Army as West Point, but resigned and took up the law. He has been United States District Attorney for Missouri, and a Judge of the State courts. He was a Democrat until the Missouri Compromise, when he became a Republican, and was removed from his office of Solicitor for the Court of Claims by President Buchanan. He was Mr. Lincoln's Postmaster General from 1861 to 1864. Francis Preston Blair, brother of the preceding, who died July 8, 1875, was a soldier in the war with Mexico; was a Free Soil Democrat and supported Van Buren for President; edited the Missouri Democrat for a time; seated to Congress as a Republican in 1856, and again in 1860 and 1862; was appointed Brigadier General, and served in the Vicksburg campaign and Sherman's march to the sea. He went back to the Democrats in 1868, and ran for Vice President on the Seymour ticket in that year. He was Senator from Missouri to fill a vacancy from 1871 to 1873.

SALE OF VALUABLE REAL ESTATE.

The valuable real estate, consisting of two lots on the north-east corner of Fifth avenue and Sixty-first street, with a front of 54.9 feet by 100 feet deep, will be sold on Monday, Oct. 23, at 12 o'clock, at the Exchange Sales-room, by Mr. R. V. Harnett, under the direction of William S. Kieley, Referee. Under the direction of the same gentleman, two other lots on the north side of Sixty-first street, 100 feet from Fifth avenue, will be sold by Messrs. A. J. Bleecker & Son at the Sales-room on the same day at 12 o'clock. The latter lots together have a frontage of 50 feet and a depth of 100.5 feet. Maps of the above may be had at the office of the auctioneers. The property is to be sold by order of the Supreme Court.

THE FIRST CRADLE CABLE IN POSITION.

The "cradle" cable, placed in position on the East River Bridge towers on Wednesday, was yesterday released from the carrier cable from which it was suspended. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon two "buggies," each containing two men and controlled by messenger lines, were simultaneously lowered along the carrier from the summit of each tower, the men releasing the cable as they descended. The operation was concluded in twenty-five minutes, the buggies meeting in the middle of the river. They were then lashed together and drawn to the New-York side. A very large number of persons witnessed the operation.

ADOPTION OF AN ACROBAT.

J. B. Wright, President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, having been appointed guardian of the little interesting boy, only four years of age, rescued from California, is desirous to find parties, highly respectable, who would be willing to adopt him. For particulars inquire at No. 860 Broadway.

JOHN KELLY'S CONVENTION.

TAMMANY'S COUNTY TICKET.

THE "SLATE" AS PREPARED BY THE BOSS ADOPTED WITH THE EXCEPTION OF ONE NAME—RICHARD FLANAGAN DEFEATS ONE OF KELLY'S NOMINEES FOR CORONER.

The great centre of interest among all the Democratic politicians in the City yesterday was the proceedings in the Tammany Hall County Convention which had been called for 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Long before the hour fixed for opening the convention the bar-rooms in the vicinity of Tammany Hall were filled with thirsty Democrats discussing the situation, and wondering whether Kelly would feel strong enough to nominate Calvin for Surrogate and Croker for a Coronership. Their doubts were soon removed, however, when it leaked out that these men were certainly on the "slate" and would be "put through with a hurrah." In private rooms connected with the liquor-saloons were most of the candidates who had been "slated" by Kelly, and who were thus within easy distance of the hall, so that they would be able at a moment's notice to respond, if it should be deemed desirable, and give their thanks for the "unexpected, flattering, and spontaneous nominations tendered them by their indulgent fellow-citizens"—through the medium of John Kelly. It had been believed by many Tammany and Anti-Tammany Democrats, who thought that they had opportunities for correct information, that Kelly would certainly put two or three Anti-Tammanyites on his ticket, in order to repay Morrissey and his friends for their treachery to Anti-Tammany, and it was supposed Walsh might be the nominee for County Clerk, Koch for Judge of the Marine Court, and Shannon for a Coronership, but Kelly had evidently thought that it would be more prudent to reward the Anti-Tammany renegades in some other and more covert manner, as it would look less like a "sell out" by them, and so, in making up his ticket, he omitted to put the name of any Anti-Tammany man upon it. The Anti-Tammany adherents who had gathered at Irving Hall seemed well satisfied on learning that the following would be the "slate" presented by Kelly for ratification by his convention, saying that it would be easy to form a combination that would defeat it:

Mayor—Smith Ely, Jr.
Surrogate—Delano C. Calvin.
Judge of the Superior Court—John J. Freedman.
Justice Marine Court—James P. Sinnott.
Sheriff—Bernard Reilly.
County Clerk—Henry A. Gumbleton.
Coroners—Richard Croker, Henry Woltman, and Anthony Eickhoff.
Aldermen at Large—Samuel A. Lewis, Henry D. Purroy, Patrick H. Keenan, and William L. Cole.

It was generally thought that the "slate" would be strictly adhered to, but the Irish element proved too strong for Eickhoff as Coroner, and he was slaughtered to make room for Richard Flanagan. The following are the proceedings in detail.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

The convention met at 3:30 o'clock P. M. in the large hall of the Fourteenth street head-quarters, and was called to order by the Chairman, Henry L. Clinton. There were 849 delegates present, and 449 votes were necessary to make a choice. A resolution was offered by John Kelly, as follows:

Resolved, That the Assembly districts and the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards be called in their numerical order, and that the delegates representing the same proceed to nominate their candidates for the offices of Mayor, Surrogate of the City and County of New-York, one Justice of the Superior Court, one Justice of the Marine Court a Sheriff for the City and County of New-York, a County Clerk, three Coroners, and four Aldermen at Large, and that when three nominations are made that then the delegates of the convention proceed to cast their votes by Assembly districts, and the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards in their numerical order, voting as a unit or in parts of a unit, for the several candidates named.

Resolved, That the nominees receiving a majority of the votes of the whole number of the delegates of the convention shall be declared the candidates thereof and of the regular Democratic Party of the City and County of New-York.

Resolved, That in order to enable the members of the convention representing each of the Assembly districts and of the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards to confer, the convention do now take a recess for one-half hour.

This resolution was adopted without a dissenting voice, and it became very evident during the recess that the slate had been made before the meeting, and that it was to be one of the most striking examples of a "cut-and-dried" convention that had ever been held in this country. While the question was being taken on the adoption of the resolution of Kelly, a communication was received from Hon. William R. Roberts, who had been mentioned for some time as a candidate for County Clerk by a large number of Democrats, but no action could be taken upon it, under the ruling of the Chair, until after the recess.

When the convention reconvened the communication of Mr. Roberts, dated at the head-quarters of the Central Roberts Club, No. 7 West Third street, was read. It stated that delegates from 240 assembly districts pledged to the support of William R. Roberts for County Clerk were outside and desired to be heard in his favor. The request of Mr. Roberts' friends was laughed at by a large part of the convention, and the communication was laid on the table, although there were several stentorian shouts of "no!" in opposition to such a disposition of it.

Nominations being declared in order by the Chairman, Patrick G. Duffy, of the First Assembly District, who was destined to make his mark during the rest of the proceedings by placing in nomination nearly every candidate on the present ticket, arose, and in a long eulogistic speech named Augustus Schell for Mayor. Cheers were given for the "old war-horse of the democracy," and the Grand Sachem of the Tammany Society was forced to take his stand upon the rostrum. He said that he would do injustice to himself if he failed to respond to the honor which had been conferred upon him by a nomination for Mayor. He was greatly indebted to the kind friends who had for some time mentioned his name in connection with the office, but believed he was worthy of the ambition of any man. He could not accept the candidacy, however, if he was unanimously nominated. Business and other engagements would positively prevent him. There were distinguished men in the party who would fill the office with credit. He then went on to speak of the necessity of harmony and union to the Democratic ranks to insure success in the November elections, and assured his hearers that he would do all in his power to help the Democratic cause. [Applause.] Mr. Duffy again arose, and stated that he was instructed to say that his delegation regretted the declension of Mr. Schell, and he then proceeded to deliver an extended eulogy on the public character and services of a man he was about to nominate for Mayor, that man only second to Mr. Ely. The nomination was received with cheers, and the delegations from the rest of the Assembly districts and wards each named in succession Smith Ely, Jr., Timothy J. Campbell, of the Sixth District, promising 2,000 votes for the entire ticket in his own district.

The nomination of Surrogate was next in order, and Mr. Duffy again sprang to his feet, and placed in nomination for Surrogate, after a speech of eulogy, Delano C. Calvin. He was named by all the delegations as they were called successively, except by that of the Seventh, which named Frederick Smyth.

The next nomination made was that for Sheriff. Mr. Duffy named Bernard Reilly as the candidate of the First District, his announcement being followed by a shout from the centre of the hall, where the delegates from Reilly's own district, the Fourteenth, were seated. Duffy, who seemed to be eager to make himself conspicuous, did not lose the opportunity offered for a speech, and loaded Reilly with eulogiums which must have appeared irksome to his friends. The calling of the districts was then proceeded with, and when the Fourteenth District was reached Hon. Algernon S. Sullivan made a speech in favor of Reilly, and the districts and the two wards called afterward gave him their entire votes.

The nomination of a County Clerk was next in order, and P. G. Duffy's deep-toned voice was heard again. This time he named Henry Gumbleton, in behalf of the First District, and William Walsh for County Clerk, and when the Fifth Assembly District was called Peter Mitchell took the floor, and delivered a eulogy on the young candidate so flattering that it would have made him blush if he had been present. William A. Butler was nominated along with Gumbleton by the Seventh District, and all the other districts voted for the latter. A few delegates in other districts seemed to be in favor of Butler. After the vote had been declared by the Secretary the names of Walsh and Butler were withdrawn.

Next came the nominations for Coroners, and just here it became evident that there was to be a contest. The votes were cast for Richard Croker, Henry Woltman, and Anthony Eickhoff. The convention seemed to breathe a sigh of relief that everything was not to be conducted in the machine-like fashion which had so far characterized its proceedings. There was a bustle and commotion and a general anticipation of heated excitement, and it was a moment of almost breathless suspense, when Patrick G. Duffy, of the First Assembly District, arose to his feet, and after a long eulogy of Nick Muller, nominated him, Richard Flanagan, Eickhoff, Croker, and Woltman, in behalf of his delegation for Coroners. The calling of the rolls of the remaining districts and the two wards demonstrated the fact that there was another candidate in the field desirous of sitting in inquest on the bodies and the stray limbs and members of the dead that might be found in the limits of the City. The candidate named by the different delegates in addition to those mentioned—Muller, Eickhoff, Croker, Woltman, and Flanagan—was Isaac Somers, and he appeared to have an enthusiastic and considerable following. Ambrose E. Purdy, of the Twenty-third Ward, in nominating Richard Flanagan made a telling speech in his favor, and it had subsequently considerable influence on the voting. After the roll of districts and wards had been called for Coroner, Louis C. Waebner moved that the resolution adopted at the opening of the convention requiring that it should proceed to ballot after nominations had been made be so far modified that the candidate for Mayor could be nominated by acclamation. This motion was carried, and Patrick G. Duffy, of the First Assembly District, moved that Smith Ely, Jr., be declared the unanimous choice of the convention for Mayor, and it was done.

Orlando L. Stewart then moved that the resolution be modified in the same way to allow of the nomination of all candidates except those for Coroner by acclamation. John H. Freedman was thus nominated on motion of Mr. Stewart; James P. Sinnott on motion of Judge Quinn, and Bernard Reilly on motion of another delegate.

A dispute arose at this stage of the proceedings in regard to what the actual vote of the Twenty-first Assembly District was, several delegates, notably William A. Boyd, appearing to doubt the statement made in regard to it by the Chairman of the district. It was decided that the roll of the district should be called and each delegate record his vote. Flanagan scored a victory, and his friends cheered. Meanwhile the name of Isaac Somers had been withdrawn from the candidacy.

The vote for Coroner was finally announced as follows:

Richard Croker	658
Henry Woltman	595
Richard Flanagan	414
Anthony Eickhoff	350
Nicholas Muller	352½

John Kelly moved that, as Croker and Woltman had majorities, they were nominees of the convention; but as Richard Flanagan had not received the number of votes necessary to a choice, namely, 449, he moved that there be a ballot taken for the third Coroner to be nominated. The motion was carried, and there was great anxiety manifested by the friends of Flanagan, Eickhoff, and Muller, and there was a lively time. There was a row in the Fourteenth Assembly District delegation between the friends of Eickhoff and Flanagan, and it was found necessary by the Chairman of the convention to have the roll of that district called, despite the statement of its chairman that it was solid for Eickhoff. Flanagan scored another victory by a large vote in this delegation, and his friends were wild with enthusiasm. The vote on this second ballot was announced, and showed that Flanagan had received 510 of the votes of the convention, and Eickhoff only 338. The nomination was then made unanimous.

Samuel A. Lewis, Henry D. Purroy, Patrick H. Keenan, and William L. Cole, who were nominated by all the districts and the two wards for Aldermen at Large, were declared, on motion of George C. Dessar, to be the unanimous choice of the convention.

It was then moved that a committee of twenty-three be appointed to make arrangements for a grand mass-meeting to Tammany Hall to ratify the national, State, and County tickets, and that representatives from each district and ward be appointed to act as such committee. This motion was carried.

Henry R. David then moved that a committee of five be appointed by the Chairman to tender the nominations of the convention to the candidates selected. Henry R. David, Orlando L. Stewart, P. G. Duffy, Menzo Diefendorf, and John I. Gorman were appointed. The candidates, with the exception of Messrs. Cole, Lewis, Keenan, Croker, and Flanagan soon after appeared upon the rostrum, Smith Ely, Jr., Delano C. Calvin, Henry A. Gumbleton, Bernard Reilly, Henry D. Purroy and Henry Woltman returned thanks, all promising to discharge their duties well, and do honor to the party.

KELLY DEFENDS CROKER.

Before Mr. Gumbleton spoke, John Kelly was called for vociferously, and made a long speech, in which he eulogized the candidates selected, and said that they would be an honor to the convention which had nominated them. Referring to Croker, some people had said that Croker's nomination would injure the success of the ticket. It was due that the charges made against Croker should be now explained. In 1874 O'Brien was a candidate for Congress against Hewitt. O'Brien brought a crowd of roughs into the district to influence the election. Information reached Croker that old men were knocked down and the attendants at the polls driven away and the tickets destroyed. Most men would have stood back and shuddered sooner than to have come in conflict with these roughs. Did Croker do it? No. With two or three men he went to the polls and said to one of the gang, "You do not reside in this district," and told him to go home. While in conversation, O'Brien came up and struck him. "Would you," he said to his hearers, "not strike back? In the melee a man was killed. Is there a man in the hearing of my voice who believes that Croker shot that man? Gentlemen, Mr. Croker never carried a pistol in his life. The testimony in the case showed that he was not the man who fired the shot. The man who did was fully described. When Croker was arrested he charged O'Brien with assault, and O'Brien charged him with shooting the man. All the proceedings relating to Croker's prosecution were infamous. Kelly concluded by eulogizing Croker "as one of the noblest works of our Maker."

The convention soon after adjourned.

THE TICKET.

The following is the ticket nominated:

Mayor—Smith Ely, Jr.
Surrogate—Delano C. Calvin.
Judge of the Superior Court—John J. Freedman.
Judge of the Marine Court—James P. Sinnott.
Sheriff—Bernard Reilly.
County Clerk—Henry A. Gumbleton.
Coroners—Richard Croker, Henry Woltman, and Richard Flanagan.
Aldermen at Large—Samuel A. Lewis, Henry D. Purroy, Patrick H. Keenan, and William L. Cole.

SKETCHES OF THE CANDIDATES.

SMITH ELY, JR.

Smith Ely, Jr., the nominee for Mayor, was born in the State of New-Jersey in 1825. He was educated for the Bar, and was admitted to practice in 1846, but never pursued his profession, preferring to enter into mercantile pursuits, in which he has been engaged in this City during nearly twenty-five years. He was elected School Trustee in 1856, to the State Senate in 1857, and became a member of the Board of Supervisors of the County of New-York in 1860, retaining the position until the board was abolished in July, 1870. It is a notorious fact that that board opened the way for the prodigious robberies perpetrated by Tweed and his accomplices. Mr. Ely claimed that he was selected for the sole purpose of watching his colleagues in the board and protecting the City, but he was distinguished for his absence at the meetings where authority was given to make raids on the City Treasury. Here is an official record of Mr. Ely's attendance at and absence from the sessions of the Board of Supervisors in 1868, 1869, and 1870:

1868.—Jan. 2, present; Jan. 11, present; Jan. 18, absent; Jan. 27, absent; Feb. 19, present; March 30, present; June 10, present; June 22, absent; June 25, absent; June 30, present; July 6, present; Sept 9, absent; Sept. 10, present; Oct. 19, absent; Dec. 5, absent; Dec. 24, absent.

1869.—Jan. 7, absent; Feb. 13, absent; April 19, absent; May 13, absent; May 31, absent; July 5, absent; Sept. 17, absent; Nov. 24, present; Dec. 27, present.

1870.—Jan. 1, absent; May 26, absent.

Mr. Ely was a Commissioner of Public Instruction during the years 1873 and 1874, was a member of the Forty-second Congress, and is the present member of Congress from the Sixth District of this City, having received but a small majority over Col. Charles S. Spencer, the Republican candidate, in a strong Democratic district. He is Chairman of the House Committee on Expenditures of the Treasury Department. Mr. Ely is a partner in the leather firm of Ely, Vanderpoel & Kitchel, in the "Swamp," is a bachelor, and has a country residence at Livingston, N. J. He possesses an intimate acquaintance with the political machinery of the Tammany Hall party, and, although he recently announced that he was a candidate at the coming election for no other office than that of member of Congress, he has bowed to the decision of John Kelly, and consented to be his nominee for Mayor. No movement in his interests was made among the rank and file of the Democracy in the districts, until it became known that he was John Kelly's man, and then, although he is by no means popular with the Democratic masses, they immediately discovered that he was the "best man for the position," and they abandoned the previous choice of John Kelly, Grand Sachem Schell.

DELANO C. CALVIN.

Delano C. Calvin, the nominee for Surrogate, was born in Watertown, Jefferson County, N. Y. After filling the positions of County Judge and District Attorney in that county, he came to this City about ten years ago. At his home he was a warm personal and political friend of Horatio Seymour, through whose influence he was nominated for Surrogate of this County last Fall, but was badly defeated at the polls. On the death of Surrogate Van Schaick, the Board of Supervisors, at the instigation of John Kelly, selected Calvin to fill the vacancy until the last of next January. The election of Kelly excited a good deal of adverse criticism, on account of the unpopularity of Calvin, and later developments in reference to his questionable proceedings as a Referee, in allowing outrageous claims, did not increase his standing as a lawyer or as a judicial officer. He is disliked by the rank and file of the Democracy, who look upon him as an interloper, foisted upon them by John Kelly to gratify prominent Democrats in the interior of the State.

JOHN J. FREEDMAN.

John J. Freedman, the nominee for Judge of the Superior Court, is a German, who came to this country in his youth, and entered the law office of ex-Recorder James M. Smith, with whom he subsequently formed a law partnership. He was elected to a Judgeship of the Superior Court in the early days of the Tweed régime, when disgraceful incumbents of the Bench found it an easy matter to command enough of the votes of the "boys" to insure their election. Last Fall he was John Kelly's candidate for re-election, but was badly beaten. His manner toward counsel while he was on the bench was of the most brusque and supercilious nature, and he was very much disliked by many members of the Bar who suffered from this treatment. Before and since his judicial career he has been counsel for the liquor dealers in their attempts to override the provisions of the Excise laws, and he has done all in his power to enable them to succeed in their efforts.

JAMES P. SINNOTT.

James P. Sinnott, Kelly's nominee for Marine Court Judge, was born in this City, and graduated from the Free Academy, now known as the New-York College. He entered Gov. Tilden's office as a law clerk, and being thoroughly acquainted with all the private law business of Mr. Tilden, the latter knew his value, and made him his protégé, and used his influence to advance him by causing John Kelly to nominate him for Marine Court Judge last Fall, but Sinnott was defeated. On the death of Judge Spaulding, however, Gov. Tilden saw an opportunity of appointing Sinnott to fill the vacancy, which chance he hastened to improve with almost indecent celerity. The other Judges of the Marine Court, however, did not approve of this summary action of Gov. Tilden, and manifested their opposition in such a vigorous manner that it was not until a fierce legal battle had been fought that Sinnott secured his seat on the long-coveted Bench.

BERNARD REILLY.

Bernard Reilly, the nominee for Sheriff, was the only one of the Tammany nominees who seemed to have a real hearty following among the rank and file, who all know him as "Barney," and with all of whom he is "hail fellow well met" on all occasions. His nomination was actually forced by the "boys," and Kelly deemed it prudent not to refuse them one candidate. "Barney" was born in Ireland, and came to this City in 1846, when he was seventeen years old. After serving an apprenticeship at wood carving and working in a grocery store, he engaged in business for himself in 1849. He served in the Board of Councilmen in 1855 and 1856, and was subsequently Deputy Sheriff under Kelly, and continued in the Sheriff's office over twelve years. He was elected Alderman in 1866. He has resided in the Seventeenth Ward since 1847; has been a member of the Tammany General Committee since 1854, and is the Tammany leader in the Fourteenth Assembly District.

HENRY A. GUMBLETON.

Henry A. Gumbleton, Kelly's nominee for County Clerk, was born in this City and graduated at the Free Academy. When he was twenty-two years of age he entered the County Clerk's office under County Clerk William C. Conner, and served as Deputy Clerk under County Clerks Loew and Walsh until he was recently appointed Deputy Commissioner of Public Works. He is quite a young man, of pleasant address, but apparently has not force of character enough to act on his own judgment. His speech and manner before the convention conclusively showed that he was dazed by the greatness that was about to be thrust upon him, and that he believed that he owed more to the influences which had secured his nomination than to his ability to command it. He cannot afford to act independently, and must necessarily reflect John Kelly's wishes in all he does in the event of his being elected.

RICHARD FLANAGAN.

"Dick" Flanagan is the only nominee of the Tammany Convention who was not "slated." He is exceedingly popular with the "boys," who dislike Eickhoff, and thought that "one Dutchman was enough to nominate for Coroner;" and they went in with a will and broke the "slate," much to the disgust of Kelly and his prescribed henchman. "Dick" was born in this City, and is a power in the Thirteenth Assembly District. He was sent to the Assembly in 1870 and 1871, and in 1872 was elected to the Board of Aldermen, when most of the other Tammany nominees were defeated. He does not owe his nomination to Kelly, and will not be apt to submit to him.

HENRY WOLTMAN.

Henry Woltman, another of Kelly's nominees for the office of Coroner, was born in Bremen in 1831, and came to this City in 1846. He was elected a member of Assembly from the Twelfth District in 1866, and re-elected in 1868, and was a member of the Board of Aldermen in 1869. He was a candidate for Senator in 1871 and for Coroner in 1872, and was defeated on both occasions by the combinations then existing against Tammany Hall. In 1873 he was elected to the position of Coroner, which he now holds.

RICHARD CROKER.

The notorious "Dick" Croker is peculiarly Kelly's nominee for Coroner. Kelly stood by him during the whole time that Croker was placed in jeopardy on a charge of murder, and eventually, as the "boys" said, "pulled him through." Kelly paid particular personal attention to Croker's nomination being made unanimous, in the first instance, by all the districts, and the result showed his power in commanding unity of action. Not a delegate in that hall dared vote against the nomination of a man who had been charged with a capital offense, and Croker, the Coroner's ticket, and was afterward eulogized by Kelly in the warmest terms possible for a human being to employ. Croker was born in New-York, and has been a resident of the Twenty-first Ward for many years. In his youth he was a machinist in the employ of Commodore Vanderbilt. He embarked in politics, and was soon made Deputy Collector of City Revenue under Col. Thomas Dunlap by the influence of Mr. Kelly, and was subsequently elected to the Coronership, which he now holds.

SAMUEL A. LEWIS.

Samuel A. Lewis, one of Kelly's nominees for Alderman at Large, is a disappointed aspirant for the Mayoralty nomination, having gotten up all sorts of organizations to force the nomination, but without success. Mr. Lewis was born in this City, is of Hebrew parentage, and occupies a good social position. He has been a School Commissioner, has been twice elected an Alderman at Large. He is the present President of the Board of Aldermen, and is the editor of the Hebrew Leader. He is undoubtedly a candidate "with a grievance," being excessively annoyed at his failure to be nominated for Mayor.

HENRY D. PURROY.

Henry D. Purroy, another of Kelly's nominees for Alderman at Large, is, like William A. Boyd, one of the supple and pliant tools of Kelly who stood by him when he "reorganized" Tammany and ejected Morrissey and Hayes and their friends, who are now begging to return. Boyd was made Public Administrator, and Kelly has resolved to endeavor to have Purroy re-elected Alderman.

WILLIAM L. COLE.

William L. Cole, another of Kelly's nominees for Alderman at Large, was born in Ireland, is editor of the Irish-American, and has been Alderman two years.

PATRICK H. KEENAN.

Patrick H. Keenan, another of Kelly's nominees for Alderman at Large, was born in this City and brought up in the Eleventh Ward. He has been in the Assembly one year and the Board of Aldermen two years, and is one of Kelly's most faithful servants.

HOW THE NOMINATIONS WERE RECEIVED.

The nominations made by the Tammany County Convention are considered very weak by many members of the party, but they had to obey John Kelly's orders and carry them out. Old-time Democrats are wrath at the recklessness in the face of public opinion which nominated Barney Reilly for the important office of Sheriff. Harry Gumbleton for County Clerk, and Dick Croker, Woltman, and Flanagan for Coroners. The record of these

LAW REPORTS.

THE TWEED CASE ON APPEAL.

ARGUING AGAINST THE VERDICT IN THE $6,000,000 SUIT BEFORE THE SUPREME COURT, GENERAL TERM—DECISION RESERVED.

The appeal in the $6,000,000 suit against Tweed was argued before the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday. The action, it will be remembered, was brought in the name of the people of the State under the act of 1875. The complaint set up an act of April 26, 1870, which provides that claims against the City of New-York should be audited by the Mayor, the Controller, and the President of the Board of Supervisors. To this it adds that the defendant Tweed and one James Watson conspired together to have fraudulent claims set up, allowed, and paid; that pretended claims to the amount of $6,198,957 85 were certified to have been audited, which were all false, fictitious, and fraudulent, and did not represent any real or actual liabilities, and that the defendant and Watson obtained warrants for that sum, received the money thereon, and converted it to their own use. The amount demanded was $6,198,957, with interest from Sept. 1, 1870. The answer denied the conspiracy and the conversion of the money, but admitted the auditing of the County liabilities under the act. In addition to this it set up the pendency of the other suits against Tweed; the alleged settlement with persons who, it was claimed, had been sharers with Tweed in his ill-gotten gains; the collection of part of the stolen money from Keyser and the Watson estate; and the criminal punishment of Tweed. A struck jury was had, the array was challenged, and the challenge was found untrue. The jurors were all separately challenged. Ten only were accepted, and a tales was then ordered. To this an exception was taken. There was a challenge to the array upon the tales which was found untrue, and then these jurors were separately challenged, but two of them were accepted. The trial which followed resulted in a verdict in favor of the people for $6,537,177 38, being $4,719,940 35 of principal and $1,817,177 03 of interest. A motion for a new trial was made on the minutes and was denied, and an extra allowance of $60,000 was granted to the plaintiffs. Tweed's appeal is from the order denying the motion for a new trial, from the order granting an allowance, and from the judgment itself. On the argument before the General Term yesterday, Dudley Field, who appeared for Tweed, argued in favor of every one of the numerous objections made at the trial of the suit—the incompetency of the jurors, the summoning of talesmen, &c. Mr. Peckham argued in opposition, and the court took the papers, reserving its decision.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 19.—The following cases have been argued in the United States Supreme Court:

No. 47.—Steamboat Atlas vs. Phenix Insurance Company.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New-York.—The principal question in this case, upon which it was heard, is whether the owners of the cargo lost in this case of collision, to whose rights the libelants were subrogated, who, it was conceded were in no wise chargeable with the neglect imputed to the vessel at fault, and were innocent parties, could recover the entire loss sustained from them by the mutual fault of the vessels colliding. The court below ruled that by the Admiralty law apportioning damages in case of mutual fault they could recover only one-half of the actual loss sustained. This ruling is contested here and is argued as error. W. A. Butler for appellants; W. R. Beebe for appellees.

No. 34.—United States vs. Ferrany et al.—Error to the Circuit Court of the Eastern District of Tennessee.—This was an action against Ferrany and his sureties upon a distiller's bond, conditioned to comply with all the requirements of the law in relation to distillers and distilleries. A second survey of his distillery was made, and the question was whether it was brought to his knowledge so as to bind him as on the bond. The court instructed the jury that if the second report of survey was not actually made by the Assessor, or his designated assistant, in like manner with the original survey, then it was invalid; also, that if made and a copy of it was not furnished to the distiller, then the verdict must be for the defendants. The jury so found, and the verdict was in accordance with the instruction. This ruling of the court is assigned as error, the Government insisting that any knowledge of the survey had by the distiller was sufficient; and it is insisted that he did have a knowledge of the second survey, a copy of which was brought to his notice. Assistant Attorney General Smith for the Government; E. C. Camp for defendants.

SENTENCE OF A WIFE-MURDERER.

The trial of Francis McGuire for killing his wife Ann, in their apartments at No. 330 East Thirty-fifth street, was concluded yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. At the opening of court Assistant District Attorney Bell commenced his summing-up address for the prosecution, and spoke for an hour and a half in support of his assertion that the prisoner had willfully taken the life of his wife. Mr. Bell concluded an able argument by calling upon the jury to do their duty in stemming the appalling tide of homicides, and convict the prisoner of the offense charged. Judge Sutherland delivered a charge in which he defined the law and pointed out the duty of the jury in the case. The jury then retired, and after a short deliberation returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree—the offense charged in the indictment. Mr. William F. Kintzing, counsel for the defense, said, in answer to the usual questions, that he had nothing to say why judgment should not be pronounced upon the prisoner. Judge Sutherland said that it gave him great satisfaction to see the jury return the verdict they had, and sentenced McGuire to State Prison for the term of his natural life. The prisoner, who looks every inch a murderer, received his sentence without moving a muscle. It was lucky for him that the jury agreed upon a verdict, for had they disagreed he would have been indicted for the higher offense of murder in the first degree, the facts disclosed by the evidence on the trial having shown that it contained all the elements of that crime.

ODD SUIT FOR THE VALUE OF LUMBER.

A rather unusual series of facts was disclosed in the trial of the case of Henry Royce against Charles Watrous and others before Judge Joseph F. Daly and a jury in Part II. of the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. The plaintiff bought a lot of lumber from the defendants, giving therefor notes made by a third party. The defendants claimed that the notes had been merely left with them for investigation as to the standing of the maker. The plaintiff insisted that the notes were accepted by the defendants after investigation, and that they gave him a receipt but did not give him the lumber. At any rate the defendants had the plaintiff insisted for the missing property on false pretenses, thereby admitting the sale of the lumber. The plaintiff was tried on the indictment and was acquitted. He then brought the present action to recover the value of the lumber. The defendants on the stand as witnesses yesterday testified that the plaintiff had made false representations as to the standing of the maker of the notes. On cross-examination, however, the defendants said they had not believed such representations. On this testimony the plaintiff's counsel moved for judgment in his client's favor, and the motion was granted by the court, which directed a verdict for the plaintiff for $1,139 18.

A CHILD'S PREMATURE BIRTH.

A case that promises to give great glee to enthusiastic medical experts and to disclose some facts at present recondite, so far as the great mass of the people is concerned, was brought up before Judge Barrett yesterday. The action in question is brought by John J. Showler for a divorce from his wife, Adele L. Showler, on the ground of the latter's adultery. The wife returned to her husband's home on Feb. 27, 1876, after a prolonged absence. The parties lived together for 176 days, at the end of which time Mrs. Showler was delivered of a child, which was apparently of natural age at the time of its birth. On this Mr. Showler charged his wife with adultery, claiming that the child could not be his. He separated from her and began the present action for divorce. He still maintains his objection to her wife and provides her with $6 per week for her support, out of his own salary of $15. Mrs. Showler stoutly insists that she is innocent of all infidelity, and her counsel claimed on the hearing yesterday that the birth was a case of "early viability." By consent a reference was ordered to obtain the testimony of accoucheurs and medical experts in the matter.

THE BURGLARY AT H. B. CLAFLIN'S.

On the night of the 15th inst. two burglars effected an entrance into the warehouse of H. B. Claflin & Co. at Church and Leonard streets, and were in the act of robbing a case of rich silks and velvets when the burglar alarm attached to it sounded and notified Officer Cashman, of the Fifth Precinct, that something was wrong. The officer procured the key of the premises, entered noiselessly and surprised the burglars in the midst of their operations. The burglars' tools were also secured by the officer. The prisoners gave their names as John Williams, of No. 672 First avenue, and Henry P. Smith, of No. 213 Third street. When the case was called for trial by Assistant District Attorney Horace Russell yesterday, the prisoners pleaded guilty to burglary in the third degree. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the thieves to four years each in State Prison. The activity of the Police officer prevented the thieves from securing a rich harvest.

A SWINDLER SENT TO STATE PRISON.

On the 7th inst. James Fields, a swindler, who gave his address as 124th street and Second avenue, called at the apartments of John Johnson and his wife, at No. 23 Bleecker street, and represented to the girl in charge of the premises that Johnson, who at that time was an inmate of the Lunatic Asylum on Ward's Island, owed him for a pipe and revolver which he would find in the bedroom. Believing his statement the girl allowed him to take the property, and while her attention was otherwise directed he stole a quantity of jewelry valued at $150. The girl subsequently missed the property, and had Fields arrested. The case was called for trial by Assistant District Attorney Russell yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. On being arraigned Fields pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to two years and six months in State Prison.

COURT NOTES.

John Haight, charged with obstructing registration, was brought before United States Commissioner Davenport yesterday and held for examination.

L. F. Post, counsel for Van Hoven, the alleged Belgian forger, recently held for extradition, took out a writ of habeas corpus yesterday in the United States Circuit Court, returnable to-morrow before Judge Blatchford, when the proceedings in the case will be reviewed.

George W. Johnson, alias James Mitchell, a sneak-thief, who was detected on the 12th inst. in the act of stealing a valise from the room occupied by James W. Lawson in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the thief to five years in State Prison.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday Assistant District Attorney Russell accepted a plea of guilty from Michael Hogan, of No. 119 Baxter street, who snatched a pocket-book from Marcella Turner, of No. 162 West Twenty-fifth street. Judge Gildersleeve sentenced the prisoner to two years in State Prison.

The case against F. W. Jenkins, alias D. A. Craig, charged with passing counterfeit money, was concluded yesterday in the United States Circuit Court, the case being given to the jury early in the afternoon. At 5 o'clock they had not agreed upon a verdict, and were lott in charge of the Deputy Marshal, with leave to return a sealed verdict should they agree upon one during the night.

The "crooked whisky" indictments in the United States Circuit Court, criminal branch, were removed from the calendar of this term yesterday on motion of District Attorney Foster, he stating that on account of the resignation of District Attorney Roger, M. Sherman the bill of particulars required could not be immediately furnished.

The bankrupt case of Duncan, Sherman & Co. was brought up for examination yesterday at the office of Register Ketcham. F. N. Bangs, counsel for the defendants, moved for an adjournment of the proceedings, acting on the suggestion of Edward F. Brown, counsel for the creditors, the examination was adjourned to Wednesday next at 3 P. M.

Algernon S. Sullivan brought suit against the City in the Supreme Court, to recover the amount of the reduction of his salary while Assistant District Attorney. The reduction in question was made by the Board of Apportionment, and amounts to twenty per cent. The case came on for trial before Judge Lawrence and a jury in Part II. of the court yesterday, and a verdict was directed in favor of the plaintiff for $1,553 66.

The case of William D. Lent against the Mayor, &c., was brought to trial before Judge Lawrence, in Part II. of the Supreme Court, Circuit, yesterday. The plaintiff brought his action to recover the value of coupons due on $2,500 of bonds issued for street improvements by the town of West Farms prior to its annexation to this City, and which by the act of consolidation were made chargeable to this City. The City claimed, however, that the bonds were not properly issued. Judge Lawrence directed the jury to find for the plaintiff in $230 15.

Officer Wilson, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, at 1 o'clock yesterday morning accosted John Lowgensen at the corner of Twenty-third street and Fourth avenue. Lowgensen had in his possession a quantity of lace trimmings, buttons, &c., which he could not satisfactorily account for. The officer took him to the station-house, where he learned that a burglary had been committed at No. 336 Sixth avenue, in the fancy-goods store of Thomas C. McRea. A pane of glass in the window had been broken and the goods drawn out. Yesterday, before Justice Kasmire, the prisoner, in default of $2,000 bail, was committed to answer at the General Sessions.

The suit of William H. Lendrum against Erastus F. Mead and Thomas Clark was tried before Judge Lawrence and a jury, in Part II. of the Supreme Court, yesterday. The plaintiff sued to recover the value of three Wallkill Valley Railroad bonds bought by him from the defendants on Aug. 6, 1872, but not delivered to him, they being at the time in the possession of the Brooklyn Trust Company, by which they were held as collateral for a loan. The question involved was as to which of the defendants could be held responsible, and the court decided that both should be, and directed a verdict for the plaintiff for $785 73.

The suit of Martin Kobner against Joseph O. Higgins was brought to trial before Judge Sanford and a jury, in Part I. of the Superior Court, yesterday. The parties it appeared had made an agreement to exchange property, each piece of property being subject to mortgages. When the time came to complete the exchange Kobner tendered a deed, but the exchange fell through because Higgins' property was incumbered with a restriction as to nuisances. Kobner, therefore, brought the present action to recover damages for Higgins' failure to complete the bargain, but was nonsuited yesterday because the deed which he had offered contained a covenant that Higgins "assumed the payment" of the mortgages on the property, whereas in the agreement he merely covenanted that the property should be "subject to the mortgages."

THURSDAY, Oct. 19—P. M.

The upward movement in values on the Stock Exchange made further progress to-day, notwithstanding the large sales of yesterday to realize profits. The course of stock to-day shows that the market has a very firm undertone and elements of strength hardly anticipated even by those who have been steadfast believers for some time in an advance in prices. The favorable progress made in the negotiations for the settlement of the railroad war, in connection with the rise in breadstuffs and the active movement of grain at the West, is bringing into Wall street more outside buyers for stocks. The business for the day reached 172,135 shares, of which Lake Shore figured for 57,115, Delaware, Lackawanna and Western for 33,595, Western Union for 16,025, Northwestern for 13,700, St. Paul for 12,350, and New-Jersey Central for 11,700 shares. During the morning the market was buoyant, and prices advanced from ½ to 6 ₱ cent., the coal stocks leading, followed by New-York Central and North-western. After mid-day there were frequent reactions and rallies, but in most cases the market closed at an advance of ½ to 2 ₱ cent. over the latest official figures of yesterday. The widest fluctuations were in Delaware and Hudson Canal, which ranged between 74 and 80, closing at 77@77½. Delaware, Lackawanna and Western advanced from 77¼ to 81⅞ and closed at 78¾. New-Jersey Central advanced from 36½ to 39¼, with closing sales at 38. New-York Central rose from 103 to 105½ and reacted to 103⅞, the dealings in the stock being confined chiefly to the earlier hours of the day. Lake Shore ranged between 59½ and 60⅜, and closed at 59½@59⅝, the transactions having been large throughout the day. The North-western shares were more prominent than for some time past, the common rising from 38¼ to 40¼ and the preferred from 62¾ to 64¾. The former closed at 39⅞ and the latter at 63¾. St. Paul common advanced from 29¾ to 30¾, preferred from 60⅜ to 61⅞, the improvement being afterward partially lost. Erie rose from 11 to 12⅛, and reacted to 11⅜. Rock Island rose to 102¼, Michigan Central to 47⅞, Pittsburg to 89, and C., C., C. and I. to 41. Pacific Mail, after advancing to 25⅜, fell off to 24¾@25. Western Union was weak, and declined from 71½@71¾ at the opening to 70⅝. Illinois Central sold at 85, and Morris and Essex at 94¾@95. Express shares were quiet and firm.

In the money market to-day Stock Exchange borrowers supplied their requirements at 3@4 ₱ cent. until near the close, when loans were made at 2@2½ ₱ cent. The market has a hardening tendency in consequence of the continued remittances of currency to the West and South to move the crops, and the activity of general trade. Prime mercantile paper is quoted at 5 to 6 ₱ cent. The national bank notes received for redemption at Washington to-day aggregated $720,000. The following were the rates of domestic exchange on New-York to-day: Savannah, ¼ off; Charleston easy; ¼@5-16, ⅛@ par; Cincinnati steady, moderate demand; 100 discount; New-Orleans —Commercial, ⅜; bank, ¼; Chicago, 80 to 100 discount; St. Louis, 100 discount.

The feverishness which characterized the London market yesterday gave place to a steadier tone to-day, although the course of prices was irregular, and there is evidently still a feeling of apprehension over the present condition of affairs in Europe. The fact that the Bank of England Directors, at their regular weekly court to-day, made no change in the minimum rate of discount contributed, no doubt, to the firmness of the market in the early dealings. British Consols opened at 94⅜@94½, against 93⅞@94 at the close yesterday, but the final quotations were 94@94⅛. United States bonds were a fraction higher for old 1865s and new 5s, the former closing at 102⅞ and the latter at 105½; 1867s fell off to 107⅜@108, a decline of ⅜ ₱ cent.; 10-40s opened at 108¼@108⅜, against 107¾ yesterday, but subsequently were reported at 107⅛. Erie at the opening sold down to 10, but afterward advanced 1 ₱ cent. The preferred was ½ ₱ cent. higher, being quoted at 17½@18. The specie in the Bank of England decreased £738,000 for the week ending yesterday, the proportion of reserve to liabilities being 54⅜ ₱ cent., against 54½ last week. At Paris Rentes opened at 104f. 05c., against 103f. 22c. at the close yesterday; but fell off late in the day to 103f. 70c. The specie in the Bank of France increased 20,577,000 francs during the past week. At Frankfort there was a decline in United States new 5s to 101⅞.

The Sterling Exchange market opened quiet, with rates at $4 84½ for bankers' 60-day bills, and $4 86½ for demand, but a reduction was soon made to $4 84 and $4 86. The supply of bills steadily increased, and in the afternoon the asking rates were again lowered ½ cent, with business at $4 83 and $4 85. Commercial bills sold as low as $4 79½@$4 80. The active movement of produce to Europe has materially increased the supply of exchange, and the market closed weak.

In the Gold Room there was less activity than on yesterday, the partial recovery in securities at London, in connection with the weakness of exchange, had a depressing effect on the market at the opening, and sales were made from 110⅞ to 110½. The subsequent decline in Consols to an advance in gold to 111¼, but the price afterward fell off to 110⅞@111, which were the ruling quotations during the afternoon. Cash gold was less dear than on yesterday, and most of the business was done flat to 1-64 ₱ cent. ₱ diem for use. Some exceptional transactions were made at 1 ₱ cent. for carrying.

Government bonds were firm and prices were well maintained, but the transactions were small. In railroad mortgages the dealings amounted to only $103,000. The Western issues were generally firm, Milwaukee and St. Paul selling at 102¼ for LaCrosse Division, and at 89½ for Consolidated Sinking Funds, and Chicago and North-western at 104½ for Consolidated and at 95¼@95½ for do. gold coupons. New-York Central registered firsts brought 119½, and do. Sixes of 1887, 106¼. Hannibal and St. Joseph convertible fell off to 78¾. Sales of Union Pacific sinking funds were made at 91½@91¾. State bonds were dull and nominal.

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

The address of the Republican National Committee has the merit of brevity and clearness—qualities which place it in creditable contrast to the turgid rhetoric and untruthful bombast employed by Mr. TILDEN'S committee in a similar connection. The gains in Maine, Vermont, Colorado, Ohio, and Indiana are mentioned, not in terms of undue exultation, but as evidence of the drift of public sentiment, and as a foretaste of the victory which awaits the Republican cause next month. The call for continued vigilance and activity on the part of Republicans will not go unheeded. A glorious triumph is within reach, but to make sure of it, the details of work in every district must be attended to as sedulously as though on its vote the whole issue depended.

What freedom of discussion means, in the estimation of WADE HAMPTON'S "rifle clubs," the letter of our special correspondent in South Carolina, descriptive of proceedings in Edgefield County, sufficiently proves. This is the "unreconstructed county" of the State, and a delightful place it must be for law-abiding citizens who dare to think differently in regard to politics from the chivalrous ruffians who obey the hero of the Hamburg massacre. Imagine the scene transferred to New-York, and then say what measures could be too stern to break up the lawless organizations which do the work of the Democratic Party, and to insure the punishment of the responsible leaders. Railway trains are entered by armed men, who wait for but one word of provocation to commit wholesale murder. A public meeting is held under the cover of rebel pistols, the speakers being insulted and the crowd intimidated with impunity. The whole affair proves a nice commentary upon the protests of gentlemen hereabout, who would leave a whole State to the tender mercies of armed gangs, disciplined, and under the command of unscrupulous men. It is some consolation to know that, with all their bravado, they are not reckless enough to defy Federal troops.

We have no doubt that the Sun will duly appreciate the delicate attention paid to its counsel by Mr. JOHN KELLY. Last week the Sun reminded Mr. KELLY that it would be "injudicious to nominate for a Judicial office a man who has decided in favor of a clearly fraudulent claim," and the advice has been repeated several times since then. Mr. CALVIN, who is the man in question, has, nevertheless, been nominated by Mr. KELLY for Surrogate, and the Sun will probably conclude that its proper place this year is that which it occupied last year—a position of unwavering hostility to the one man dictation in City politics. It is just possible, however, that the Sun may take this rebuff as meekly as it did the disregard of its advice about the "nincompoops."

Mr. DONN PIATT has written a letter to the Cincinnati Enquirer relating to his connection with the fraudulent moth-exterminator contracts. Mr. PIATT thinks that Gen. MCCLELLAN'S contract and receipt of money is injurious to his father-in-law, Gen. MARCY. But he also considers it a shame that THE TIMES, in uncovering this business, should be so free in its allusions to DONN PIATT, and so reticent concerning Gen. INGALLS, who was a member of the military board which passed upon the merits of the moth-exterminator. The fact is that Mr. PIATT'S share in this business was proved by his own testimony. If there was any evidence against INGALLS, it was only by implication. Mr. PIATT, after exhibiting on the witness stand a disinclination to damage anybody's reputation but his own, now declares that INGALLS and MARCY ought to be court-martialed, and that COWLES and BREGA should be indicted. This is business-like. Mr. PIATT was in the ring, and knows what he is talking about. If he will make a clean breast of it, and furnish all the evidence in his possession against officers who corruptly used their influence in behalf of the moth-exterminator people, THE TIMES will stand by him in that laudable undertaking, no matter who is hurt. "The Metropolitan journal in favor of the highest reform," as Mr. PIATT accurately describes this paper, does not hesitate to expose fraud, whether it incidentally exposes MARCY, INGALLS, PIATT, or anybody else.

The Baltimore Gazette is a dreadful example of what happens to a newspaper too much addicted to using the "news" of the Tilden Literary Bureau. Only yesterday that journal announced that the official count of the vote of Indiana had been made public, and that it showed a Democratic majority of "a little over seven thousand." The official count shows nothing of the sort. WILLIAMS has 5,119 votes more than HARRISON; but the combined votes of HARRISON, Republican, and HARRINGTON, Independent, are greater than that of WILLIAMS, Democratic; and WILLIAMS is therefore elected merely by a plurality. From the same ingenious newspaper we learn that "the Democrats also had a plurality in the Congressional districts, from the First to the Thirteenth inclusive, with a single exception, the Eleventh." There are thirteen Congressional districts in Indiana. Of these, the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, and Thirteenth chose Republican Congressmen. How the bureau can possibly figure out a Democratic plurality in those districts is a problem which its misguided customers must solve for themselves. It is evident, however, that the policy of disseminating misinformation is to be kept up by the Liberty street "nincompoops" until after November.

PARTY PROSPECTS AND PUBLIC CREDIT.

There is nothing improbable in the report that foreign members of the funding syndicate refer with apprehension in their correspondence to the possible contingency of Democratic success and its effect upon the public credit. The report harmonizes so well with what was previously known upon the subject, that it cannot excite any reasonable surprise. So far, the success of the funding process has exceeded expectation. It operated slowly at first, because the conditions of confidence were not, in all respects, assured, and because, as a consequence of this, the arrangements were more or less experimental. The more complete understanding which has since been established between the Treasury and influential bankers and capitalists indicates not so much their own more perfect faith in our financial future as the growth of trust which is apparent among the investing communities of Europe. In Great Britain, in Holland, in Germany, the demand for our securities is best proved by the rapid absorption of the four-and-a-half per cent. loan, and by the recognized ability in due time to place the four per cent. bonds. The circumstance is rendered more striking by the acknowledged inability of the best houses to float in the European markets other securities yielding much higher rates of interest. We look in vain for signs of a demand for six or seven per cent. bonds issued in behalf of ordinary enterprises. The increase of confidence applies wholly to the loans of the Federal Government, which derives its improved financial ability from Republican administration and from the steadfast adherence of the Republican party to the policy with which it is honorably identified. About our ordinary partisan differences, foreign capitalists give themselves little or no concern. What does concern them is the fact that the Republican Party is by its acts pledged to the maintenance of the national credit unimpaired; that in hard times, as well as in prosperous times, it has continued the reduction of the debt; that it has committed itself irrevocably against repudiation or tampering in any form with the details of the contract between the country and its creditors, and that it recognizes as an urgent duty the making provision for an early resumption of specie payment. These features of the party's policy are too often underrated among ourselves. Abroad they are appreciated as proofs of the sagacity and integrity by which, in the main, its policy has been shaped. They have led foreign observers to the conclusion that its continued ascendency is essential to the public credit.

We cannot wonder, then, that the mere chance of the Democratic Party acquiring power impels European friends of the United States to pause in their financial operations and to point out the inevitable effect of the event upon the national securities. Any change which introduces uncertainty into great questions of policy necessarily awakens uneasiness. Capital shrinks from the risks of any political upheaval, and is apt to exaggerate risks which cannot be nicely weighed and adjusted in advance. There can, however, be no exaggeration of the possible consequences of the overthrow of the financial fabric built up by the Republicans. The dangers are specific and easily understood. The substitution of one party for another would in ordinary circumstances produce only a temporary increase of caution. The wheels of Government might be checked momentarily, but they would soon again run smooth as before. Not so in the present instance. The contest to be decided eighteen days hence involves the continuance or the reversal of the policy on which the public credit altogether depends. The issue between the parties upon this question is clearly defined. With a Democratic triumph would come, in the first place, a stoppage of all preparations for resumption in 1879. To so much the party is pledged. It would prolong indefinitely a depreciated and inconvertible currency. In the next place, it would reopen controversies looking to a further inflation of the currency; to the taxation of the Government bonds, in spite of the provision exempting them; and to the payment in paper, instead of gold, of portions of the outstanding debt. The latter cannot be called imaginary perils. They are measures cherished by the inflationists, who captured Mr. TILDEN at St. Louis, and who have grown more arrogant than ever since the partial Democratic success in Indiana. That occurrence has greatly strengthened Mr. HENDRICKS and the inflationist section of the party; and in the event of Presidential success they will control the financial policy of the party. Their plans might break down. They might be frustrated in the House, as during the last session, or they might be foiled by the Senate. But their efforts and demands would naturally unsettle everything. The public credit would be at the mercy of partisan votes. It might be undermined any day by sinister combinations that would render the repudiators and inflationists masters of the situation.

The "solid South" brings into prominence other considerations. There is quite enough to excite alarm in the schemes already known for enriching the South at the expense of the Union. Jot down the rebel claims, the refunding projects, the plans for squandering money for local purposes, and the doubling of the national debt becomes a result easily accomplished. The effect of that, or of anything approaching it, needs no elaboration. The industry and commerce of the country would stagger under the load. The public credit would be where it was twelve years ago. The funding process would be at an end for this generation, and Government securities would be below par. Even if the schemes ultimately failed, the knowledge that they were impending would disturb values, and frighten away the capital we shall once more need whenever the business depression passes away.

The public credit is, in fact, in greater jeopardy from the "solid South" than from the repudiators of Ohio or Indiana. As a body, the Southern Democrats are repudiators of all obligations or claims not held by themselves. They have been utterly indifferent to the public faith of their own States, and they cherish a malicious pleasure in contemplating injury to the holders of securities issued in connection with the prosecution of the war. Look at their financial record in States which were honest as long as Republicans ruled them under the Reconstruction acts, and which became defaulters and repudiators when the Democrats regained control. In Alabama, their plans for adjusting the debt amount to the absolute confiscation of nearly eighteen millions of dollars. The State debt is, in round figures, $27,000,000; the Democrats propose to reduce it to $9,000,000. Arkansas constructed about 450 miles of railroad, with money realized from the sale of $5,350,000 guaranteed bonds. The Democrats repudiate the guarantees; and having suspended the payment of interest, are squeezing the Northern and foreign creditors to compel a settlement on terms dictated by the State. Georgia is par excellence a Democratic State, and it has repudiated ten out of twelve millions of bonds guaranteed by the State, recognized by successive Legislatures, and issued in aid of railroads which contribute immensely to its prosperity. The North Carolina Democrats, again, have openly repudiated $11,000,000, and have impliedly repudiated nearly $24,000,000 more. They pay no interest on either of these amounts, which represent expenditures duly authorized by successive Legislatures. The Democrats of Tennessee have not actually repudiated the debt of the State, but they have so cut down the revenues as to make the payment of interest impossible. Democratic Virginia is as bad as the worst. It owes more than $40,000,000, of which all but six millions represents debt incurred before the war. On none of this does it now pay interest. These illustrations are sufficient to show how little confidence can be reposed in the financial integrity of a party whose councils are in any large degree influenced by the South. That section is the repudiating section of the United States; if is the section in which financial honor is at the lowest ebb, and which will be as unscrupulous in the administration of the National Treasury as in the repudiation of its own debts.

THE TAMMANY NOMINATIONS.

Mr. JOHN KELLY has presented his ticket for City and County officers of New-York. It has a respectable figure-head in the person of Mr. SMITH ELY, Jr., Representative of the Seventh Congressional District. Mr. ELY is best known as a member of the old Board of Supervisors of infamous memory, and has achieved a certain amount of reputation for his consistent hostility to the plans of that gang of Democratic and Republican thieves. No one will accuse Mr. ELY of having been privy to any of the schemes of plunder of that body, and it is matter of infinite regret that Mr. ELY'S engagements prevented him from keeping a very strict watch over the plundering schemes of the Supervisors during the years in which these schemes were most fatal to the public treasury. If we mistake not, Mr. ELY was absent from half the meetings of the board during 1868, from two-thirds of them during 1869, and he was in Europe during the greater part, if not the whole, of 1870. His presence at that critical period might have hastened the downfall of the Ring, and it was doubtless owing to circumstances beyond his control that he was not very prominently identified with the movement against TWEED and his fellow-conspirators.

The rest of the ticket consists of Tammany timber of a more or less rotten quality. Mr. KELLY has evidently made up his mind that Mr. DELANO C. CALVIN is the ideal candidate for Surrogate. Mr. CALVIN was beaten by a majority of 24,500 when he ran for the same office, under Mr. KELLY'S auspices, last year. To console Mr. CALVIN for his disappointment, his patron secured for him a number of highly remunerative references of City and other cases. The list of these is rather long to be presented here, but we shall publish it one of these days. One very remarkable award was made on a City claim of long standing by Mr. CALVIN in April last. This was a bill for services purporting to have been rendered by WILLIAM MCKEAG as Attorney to the Board of Excise between 1859 and 1866. MCKEAG claimed to have begun some 15,000 suits for violation of the Excise law, but never paid a dollar of the fines and penalties recovered into the City Treasury. He filed a claim for services amounting to $453,800. The claim, after being hawked about among the Ring officials, after failing to secure recognition from the Board of Supervisors, and being denied favorable notice by the Legislature and by Controller GREEN, was finally assigned to JOHN H. STARIN, Jr., and thus came to be referred to Mr. DELANO C. CALVIN, as Referee. Its items were as follows:

City and County of New-York
To WILLIAM MCKEAG, debtor:

14 915 suits commenced, at $10 each	$149,150
On 1,054 judgments obtained, at $25 each	26,350
On 7,225 suits defended by JAMES M. SMITH, at $25 each	180,635
On 587 suits defended by FREDERICK SMITH, at $25 each	14,675
On 395 suits defended by JOHN J. FREEDMAN, at $25 each	9,875
On 439 other suits, defended by various attorneys, at $25 each	10,975
On 1,243 cases on calendar, at $50 each	62,150
Total	$453,800

Commenced between May 19, 1859, and April 14, 1866.

On the trial before the Referee, some lawyers valued the services of MCKEAG at $1,000 a year, while others thought them worth $3,000 a year. Mr. CALVIN was more liberal. He thought $50,000 a year, with all the contingent fines and penalties added, quite a moderate estimate of the worth of MCKEAG'S services to the City, and gave judgment accordingly for the sum of $389,224. Mr. CALVIN is clearly out of place as a candidate for Surrogate of the City and County of New-York. He ought to be reserved for a place on the Southern Claims Commission, which will be needed by the next Democratic Administration. The mere mention of his name for such a position would make the South still more "solid" for Mr. TILDEN.

Mr. KELLY'S candidate for Sheriff was for six years a Deputy under Mr. KELLY, and is confidently vouched for by his former chief. Any one who has looked into the administration of the Sheriff's office under Mr. KELLY, as set forth by the late Mr. HAVEMEYER and Judge WATERBURY, will be able to appreciate the public blessings which would attend a revival of that régime. Mr. KELLY'S candidate for Judge of the Superior Court—JOHN J. FREEDMAN—was rejected by the people last year, for reasons which are quite as potent as ever they were. Mr. TILDEN'S former clerk and pettifogging advocate—JAMES P. SINNOTT—has received Mr. KELLY'S indorsement for Judge of the Marine Court. Mr. KELLY has nominated one of his special protégés, HENRY A. GUMBLETON, at present Deputy Commissioner of Public Works, for County Clerk. The notorious RICHARD CROKER has been renominated for Coroner, in spite of, or perhaps because of, his record of political rowdyism and illegal charges against the City, and "DICK" FLANAGAN has at length obtained recognition as a candidate for the same lucrative position. The ticket for Aldermen at Large is headed by that unscrupulous demagogue, HENRY D. PURROY, half of whose family is already quartered on the City, and who has been equally notable as the pliant tool of JOHN KELLY, and the promoter of the jobs of JOHN B. HASKIN. Altogether, the Kelly nominations are, with the exception of Mr. ELY, rather less reputable than those of last year, and are decidedly more in the interest of JOHN KELLY.

THE STRUGGLE IN EASTERN EUROPE.

The events which seem to point toward a general European war have matured very rapidly. But it is more than a year since the spark was first applied to the train which now threatens a disastrous explosion. The insurrection which broke out in Herzegovina and Bosnia, during the latter part of 1875, was regarded by the rest of the world as one of those disturbances which must be inevitable in any Turkish province, so long as the Greek and Roman Catholic Christians are oppressed by Moslem rule. The revolt was made the pretext for aggravated severities on the part of the Turks in all their Christian provinces. Servia, Montenegro, and Roumania were inflamed by reports of atrocities committed upon their co-religionists by the Moslem. The war spirit in Servia was so deeply stirred that Prince MILAN, upon whom a suzerainty to the Sublime Porte sits easily enough, declared his fears of a popular outbreak which he could not restrain. As the year wore on, the agitation in Servia increased, and it was remarked that some sinister influence was at work to stir up strife whenever there were signs that the popular excitement was dying out. The flames of excitement were perpetually fanned by an unseen hand.

The affair of Herzegovina and the Bosnian troubles were lost sight of when Prince MILAN, at the beginning of last July declared war on Turkey, and crossed his own frontier at several different points. In his proclamation on taking the field, MILAN made this declaration: "Turkey has provoked war by not satisfying Bosnia and by threatening Servia. We enter Bosnia in the cause of humanity and nationality." Previous to this, the alarming condition of affairs in Eastern Europe had aroused the great powers to the necessity of joint action, and, at the instance of Russia, a conference was proposed. This project was defeated by England, who declined the conference, and sent a fleet to Besika Bay.

Military operations during the past Summer were in the main favorable to the Servians, though Montenegro did not co-operate with them. But in September the Turks gained a decided victory in their campaign on the Morava, and the Servians were forced to abandon Alexinatz. Negotiations for an armistice began at once. Russia favored an unconditional and prolonged truce. Turkey insisted that the open assistance to Servia which Russia was giving should cease before any such proposition could be entertained. For by this time it was notorious that it was Russia who was fighting Turkey on the Servian frontier. The belligerency of Servia was purely nominal. Finally Turkey granted "a cessation of hostilities" for ten days, beginning Sept. 15. During this brief lull diplomacy was exhausted in attempts to prolong the truce indefinitely. England made a proposition of three points: 1. An unconditional armistice of six weeks. 2. The status quo ante bellum to be maintained as regards Servia and Montenegro, with an extension of territory for the latter; 3. Liberal provision to be made for local autonomy in Bosnia, Herzegovina, and Bulgaria. The other powers assented to these proposals, and they were presented to the Sublime Porte just before the ten days' truce expired. Only England and Italy, however, actively supported the proposals; Russia, whose action in this crisis was anxiously observed, left England to manage the case. Turkey hesitated long over the English proposals, and sought to secure more time by granting an extension of the truce for eight days. The Turkish Government demurred to the specification by name of the insurgent or contumacious principalities and provinces. It was evidently the desire of the Porte to be left to deal with the provinces affected, without being bound to any definite line of action.

Before Turkey could formulate what was its practical rejection of the English proposals, Servia broke out again with violent hostilities. The proposals were denounced, and fighting was resumed Sept. 28, while the so-called extended truce was yet unexpired. Montenegro also refused to accept any arrangement which did not give her more territory. This was the condition of affairs at the beginning of October, when Europe was astonished by a proposition made to Austria in a letter from the Czar. This was to the effect that Russia should occupy Bulgaria with her troops, and that Austria should occupy Bosnia and Herzegovina, and that an Austro-Russian fleet should be stationed on the western coast of Turkey. This proposal, which was communicated to all the powers, was regarded as a scheme to give to Russia peacefully the advantage which she was suspected to be ready to seize by force. Various proposals for a conference were made, but Russian diplomacy, in almost every instance, seemed to be passively obstructive. Russia consented to nothing. Finally, Turkey decided to grant an armistice which should last until March 15, 1877. The conditions affixed were that the Servians should be prevented from retaking the military positions gained by the Turks; that the introduction of war material and foreign recruits into Montenegro and Servia should be forcibly stopped, and that Servia and Montenegro be prohibited from giving aid to insurgents in adjoining provinces. Russia promptly and peremptorily rejected this proposition, and reverted to the English proposals for an unconditional six weeks' armistice, with which she now declared she would be satisfied. The statement that the other powers would accept this proposition is lost sight of in the consternation which the attitude of Russia occasioned.

The noticeable and alarming feature in this brief review of the course of events in Eastern Europe is the sinuousness of Russian diplomacy. There can be no question now as to the cause of the constant agitation in Servia; and those who intimate that the troubles in Bosnia and Herzegovina were of Russian origin may not be far wrong. At any rate, Servia has not been permitted to subside into peace. England has repeatedly cried, with despair, "Why does not Russia, Servia's master, keep her quiet?" When Russia has made a proposal, it was one which neither the other great powers nor Turkey could accept; and when Russia has pressed the proposals of another power, it was not until their rejection by Turkey was already assured. It is Russian policy to push her encroachments until she encounters a solid obstacle. Her ultimate goal is Constantinople. How far this latest spring will carry her in that direction is yet to be determined.

MATRIMONY AND MURDER.

The other day a man was arrested in this City for the crime of shooting a cat, and although he pleaded that he was insane at the time of the commission of the deed, his plea was scoffed at, and he was promptly sent to jail. Meanwhile, Mrs. IRENE HOUSE was undergoing the inconvenience of a trial in a New-Jersey court for killing her late husband, and she has subsequently been triumphantly acquitted, on the ground that the ill-treatment which she had received at the hands of Mr. HOUSE had driven her into temporary madness. It thus appears that it is a far more serious offense to kill a cat than it is to kill a husband. A cat may have been in the habit of sitting on the back fence and ripening for the grave during successive nights of tireless yelling, but the man who shoots the animal is mocked at if he attempt to defend himself on the plea of insanity; whereas, even in the law-abiding State of New-Jersey, the woman who shoots her husband has only to explain that he was an ill-tempered and ill-conducted brute to secure the sympathy and protection of an enlightened jury.

We have become so well accustomed to the acquittal of female murderers that the thoughtless may underestimate the exceptional importance of the acquittal of Mrs. HOUSE. Of course, a woman who is judicially authorized to shoot husbands at any season of the year is always more or less dangerous to the community in which she resides; but, after all, it is usually within the power of a cautious man to keep out of her range. Mrs. HOUSE, on the other hand, is a far more enthusiastic and aggressive sportswoman than Miss HARRIS, or even Mrs. FAIR, and shows an ominous determination to add to her bag of husbands. In one of her recently-published letters she expresses an earnest desire to find a husband who resembles in appearance the late ORSON HOUSE, and thus enable her to fancy that her "lost darling" is still with her. If she can find such a man, she will marry in haste and shoot at leisure. She is not like the typical German sportsman, who ranges the trackless forests of Flushing in company with his faithful Spitz dog, and shoots at everything that comes across his path, from a field-mouse to a crow. She rather resembles the confirmed trout-fisher, who cannot be tempted to waste his flies on any other fish. Give her a husband with features closely resembling those of the late Mr. HOUSE, and she will love him and shoot at him with all the devotion of her womanly heart. Such a husband she is determined to find, and hence it becomes a matter of the utmost importance to every man to know whether or not he resembles Mrs. HOUSE'S "lost darling."

Unfortunately, it is now too late to satisfy Mrs. HOUSE'S longings by any method that insures the safety of the community. Had the friends of her late husband had the forethought to have him embalmed and set up in his widow's back-yard, where she could practice at him with her revolver to an unlimited extent, men who have the misfortune to resemble him could live without the fear of marriage and sudden death constantly before their eyes. Of course, this expedient is now out of the question, and it is highly improbable that Mrs. HOUSE would be satisfied with a marble or bronze statue of her beloved target. There would be no real comfort to a loving heart in chipping the nose off a senseless block of marble with a pistol-bullet. Mrs. HOUSE'S love is of that passionate nature which needs something at once soft and substantial to shoot at, and a marble statue, or even a chromo-lithograph portrait, would never fill the aching void that exists in her heart, or organ to that effect.

In these circumstances, no prudent man will neglect to instantly provide himself with a photograph of the late Mr. HOUSE, and to ascertain if he bears a sufficiently close resemblance to that individual to render him liable to undergo matrimony and murder. If such is unfortunately the case, he must either fly the country or disguise himself so thoroughly as to defy the recognition of the keen-eyed sportswoman. Unless he takes one or the other of these precautions he invites a dreadful fate. Some day Mrs. HOUSE will accidentally flush him in the street, and having violently married him, will take over to New-Jersey and shoot at him until a merciful bullet pierces his brain, and releases him from torment.

In view of Mrs. HOUSE'S dangerous attitude, it became a solemn duty to warn the unsuspicious Mr. TUPPER that in all probability he will be the first victim of her love. It is alleged—though upon what authority does not yet appear—that Mr. TUPPER so closely resembles the late ORSON HOUSE in face and figure that he would naturally be mistaken for the latter's twin brother. It is inevitable that Mrs. HOUSE will sooner or later become aware of this fact. Earnestly as he may strive to conceal the truth from her, she will ultimately happen to see a portrait of Mr. TUPPER, and will thereupon arm herself with a clergyman and a revolver, and sally forth to hunt him down. If Mr. TUPPER will take a little friendly advice, he will promptly paint himself sky-blue, or assume some other equally effective and unobtrusive disguise. This is not a time to stand upon ceremony. The poet's life is probably trembling in the balance, and if, in spite of all precautions, Mrs. HOUSE learns that he is the image of her "lost darling," his days are numbered. Let him remember his own eloquent proverb:

> "When the enemy rages the wise man disguiseth himself as a coal-vault;

Mr. TUPPER must not be suffered to become the prey of Mrs. HOUSE, and if he will not disguise himself and go into hiding, his true friends should use a little gentle force and compel him to take the only practicable measures for preserving his precious life.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The Indianapolis Journal favors a change of the time of the State elections in Indiana from October to November.

Hon. Joshua Hill has declined the Republican nomination for Congress in the Ninth District of Georgia because of his advanced age.

After 135 ballots, the Democrats of the Eleventh District of Pennsylvania have nominated their present Congressman for re-election.

Mr. Brooks Adams, of Massachusetts, was ill, and therefore unable to fill his engagement to speak at a Democratic meeting in Rochester on Saturday evening.

Hon. Matt. H. Carpenter has been called to Washington by an important case before the Supreme Court, and has therefore canceled his present appointments to speak in Wisconsin.

A Methodist clergyman writes to a Syracuse paper advising the Methodist preachers of the conference to retain their present residences, by mutual arrangements, until after the election.

Rev. J. W. Emery sensibly declines a prohibition nomination for Assembly in Steuben County. He is a sincere and earnest temperance man, but in this contest he believes Republicanism should triumph.

A letter, dated Oct. 15, from Mr. R. S. Robertson, who was the Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor of Indiana, expresses the opinion that the Republicans will carry the State for Hayes and Wheeler by a majority of 5,000 or 10,000.

The Columbia (S. C.) Union-Herald says that there never was a time in the history of the Republican Party in that State when the colored people were more united and determined than they are today to cast their ballots at whatever cost for the nominees of the Republican Party.

Mr. Rynier H. Veghte has accepted the Independent Democratic nomination for Congress in the Fourth District of New-Jersey, saying that he is fully aware of the unhappy position in which corrupt party machinery has placed the Democratic Party in the district, and also of the opprobrium which corrupt party machinists always endeavor to cast over any who counteract the working of their machines.

The Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard says that one of the most enthusiastic political meetings ever held in that city was addressed on Tuesday evening by Hon. S. B. Chittenden, of Brooklyn, and Gen. Fiero, of New-York. Both gentlemen delivered spirited and effective speeches, which cannot fail of being productive of good results. Mr. Chittenden, in closing, said that in point of fact resistance to the solid South is the one question involving all questions to the end of the struggle.

THE STATE CONTEST.

LUCIUS ROBINSON AT HOME.

HOW THE DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR GOVERNOR IS REGARDED BY HIS NEIGHBORS—THEY CORDIALLY DISLIKE HIM—CHEMUNG REPUBLICANS AROUSED AND ENTHUSIASTIC.

From Our Special Correspondent.

ELMIRA, Tuesday, Oct. 17, 1876.

This city of seventeen thousand inhabitants, more or less, is the home of Tilden's candidate for Governor; or, rather, his home is in the suburbs, for Mr. Robinson does not live in the city limits, for reasons which will be explained presently. Now, there are a great many Democrats in this State who, if their word is good for anything, would sooner vote for Beelzebub than for Samuel J. Tilden, but who express themselves perfectly satisfied with Lucius Robinson, and would be willing to vote for him early and often. These men are fond of predicting how far ahead of the Tilden ticket the Tilden candidate for Governor is going to run, and many of them, I am confident, would inwardly rejoice to see Robinson elected and Tilden defeated. After hearing so much about Robinson's extraordinary virtues and extreme popularity in this section of the State, I naturally expected to find the people of the "southern tier" going for him almost in a body and without distinction of party. To my surprise, I found that neither Republicans nor Democrats in the Counties of Orange, Delaware, Broome, Tioga, or Tompkins, took any particular stock in Robinson, or that they would vote for him any sooner than if his name were Johnson and he lived anywhere else but in the "southern tier." I was assured on all sides that he would simply get his party vote (provided the voters could ascertain to which party he belonged on the day of the election) and nothing more. But when I got to Chemung County and to Elmira, where the "great and good" Lucius Robinson has his abiding place, "surely," I thought, "I shall now begin to see the virtues of the great man shining out, and will discover what a favorite he is with the people." The first acquaintance I encountered was a Democrat, and the first political conundrum I put to him was, "How much will Robinson run ahead of his ticket in Chemung County?" "Run ahead of his ticket!" he replied. "Why, if he runs even with his ticket in this county he will be lucky. Robinson is not very popular with the Elmira people," continued he; "you see he don't live in the city, but just outside the limits, where he can escape the city taxes and at the same time enjoy all the advantages of the city improvements. Several attempts have been made to extend the city limits so as to take in the district where Robinson resides, but he and his son, David Codwise Robinson, have always gone down to Albany, when the bill was before the Legislature, and obbied against it. And yet he has applied over and over again to have his neighborhood brought into the Union School District in order that he might have the benefit of the City schools. But he took good care not to do this till the new school-house was built and paid for. He is looked upon here as almost as expert a tax-dodger as Tilden himself, although I don't think he would perjure himself to get rid of taxation as your folks say Tilden did." On further inquiry, I found that my Democratic friend had correctly expressed the prevailing estimate in which Lucius Robinson is held by the citizens of Elmira of both parties. He is regarded as a selfish, cold-blooded, penurious man. They say he is one of the richest men of the place; has for fifteen or twenty years been in the receipt of a large income (estimated at $15,000 per annum) from the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New-York, and yet he never can be induced to subscribe a dollar for any public enterprise or charitable object, and has as little personal popularity as Tilden himself. He is comparatively little known to the mass of the people of the city, notwithstanding he has lived so many years within a stone's throw of the city limits. Those who do know him consider him a vastly overrated man intellectually; but they say he serves a good purpose as "platform statuary," where a solid-looking person is needed to stand on the stage at a public meeting and look wise and keep his mouth shut. They were greatly amused here at the announcement in an Albany paper the other day that "Mr. Robinson had concluded not to take the stump during the campaign." They say there is not a school boy, ten years of age, in Elmira who cannot make a better speech than Lucius Robinson was ever known to make in the hearing of anybody in this city. As to his running ahead of his ticket, no one here expects anything of the kind. They say he may probably get a few votes outside his party from his immediate neighbors and members of his church as candidates for office always do; but they will not exceed fifty all told, while he will lose fifty times that number on the line of the canals. There is not the slightest danger, therefore, that in the overwhelming defeat which awaits Tilden he will be able to console himself with the reflection that he named his successor in the Gubernatorial chair.

The Republicans of Chemung County were never in better condition or more thoroughly organized and united than they are now. There is an organization of Boys in Blue in every ward of the city and in every town in the county but one. Meetings are held every night, and they were never better attended or more in earnest than now. There is no defection in the party here, and no dissatisfaction or feuds of any kind. Not a single Republican can be found who affiliates with the enemy, and the Liberals are with them almost to a man. Chemung County is estimated to have on a straight party vote, with every man at the polls, from 300 to 400 Democratic majority. This majority is mainly in Elmira. Outside the city the vote is nearly even. A year ago the county give Bigelow 822 majority, and two years ago it gave Tilden 767 majority. Mr. J. T. Davidson, Secretary of the Republican County Committee, who has made a careful estimate of the probable result in November, is confident that the county will go for Hayes and Wheeler; and, in any event, he is sure the Democratic majority will not exceed 100. He bases this estimate on the extraordinary enthusiasm manifested by the Republicans throughout the county, which indicates a full vote of the party, on the large number of Democrats who openly declare they will not vote for Tilden, and on the quarreling and bickering among the Democratic leaders in this city. The man who is working up Tilden's canvass here is D. B. Hill, ex-Assemblyman, and a Democrat of the most unscrupulous kind, after Tilden's own heart. A rival Democrat, named Stephen Arnot, is working Robinson's canvass, and the two cannot agree on anything. They are running two separate machines, and sensible Democrats are dissatisfied with both. It is not always safe to rely on the word of a Democrat who swears he won't vote for Tilden, as is shown in the case of ex-Speaker McGuire, who, after denouncing Tilden as the greatest fraud of the age for a year and a half, came out in a speech here last Saturday night and announced, to the astonishment of all his friends, that he was going to vote for him. But there are other Democrats here who have said less but will do a good deal more to defeat the fraud. Among them is Mr. Macinnis' law partner, E. P. Hart, who has been a lifelong Democrat, but who has come out openly against the Tilden ticket and has several times presided at Republican meetings in this city. In the town of Erie, in this county, another "born Democrat," named D. B. Lynch, has organized a club of Boys in Blue, which already numbers among its members fifteen straight-out Democrats, who are working for Hayes and Wheeler. In all parts of the county Democrats may be found who repudiate their Presidential candidate, and if the shot-gun policy of the Southern Democracy is persisted in much longer there will not be a Union soldier in Chemung County that will vote the Democratic ticket.

The Democratic local and county tickets will probably be successful with the exception of County Clerk. For this office the Republicans have nominated a one-legged soldier, a very worthy and capable man, who, it is conceded, will be elected by a large majority. The Republican candidate for Sheriff, Mr. Jeffrey A. Wagner, is also thought to have a good chance for election against his Democratic opponent, Major E. O. Beers. But the county ticket, except the Clerk, is generally conceded to the Democrats. They will also probably elect the Assemblyman, H. B. Rockwell, of this city. The Republican candidate is Dr. L. W. Bailey, of Millport. The Congressman from this district, comprising the counties of Chemung, Steuben, and Allegany, will be Republican beyond question, which will be a gain, the present member, Hon. C. C. B. Walker, being a Democrat. Mr. Hungerford, a banker, of Corning, is the Republican candidate, and his election by a large majority is conceded on all hands.

A REMARKABLE REGISTRATION.

PREPARING TO CAST THOUSANDS OF FRAUDULENT VOTES—COMPARISON OF THIS WITH PREVIOUS REGISTRATIONS.

The registration of alleged legal voters in this City is swelling up at a rate which arouses the gravest suspicion of fraud. Of the four days which the law allows for registration, two only have passed, and the number of registrations shows an astounding increase as compared with those of the Presidential years 1868 and 1872. Since the last-named year the two up-town wards have been added to the City, but even when the registration of these has been deducted from the total there still remains enough to show either that the voting population of the City has enormously increased during the past three years, or that Tammany Hall, under Kelly and Tilden, is again repeating the tricks it played when Tilden and Tweed ruled the machine. Everybody knows that the financial distresses which came with the panic of 1873 carried from the City large numbers of mechanics, artisans, and laborers. These men had votes, and it may safely be assumed that men of this class did not neglect to use them. The reduction of the voting population of the City which followed from their emigration should be shown in the registration this year, but exactly the contrary appears from the registry returns of the 10th and 18th inst. Instead of a decrease there is an immense and wholly unaccountable increase. In 1868 the days of registration were Oct. 13 and 14 and 30 and 31. The numbers registered on the two first days were 92,661; this year there was a registry of 116,998 for the same period, which, deducting the 4,037 registered in the two new wards, shows an increase of 20,292 over 1868. In 1872, on the two first days of registry, the number registered was 96,512. Again deducting the annexed district, the increased registration of this year, as compared with 1872, reaches 16,449, and this in face of the fact that the number of legal voters in the City is certainly less than it was before the panic. The highest number ever registered in New-York was in 1868, when Hoffman was counted into the Governorship of the State. The total registration that year was 168,872. It has never been so high since; yet, as for two of the four days for registry this year we have already 116,998 registration, it appears as if Tammany Hall, under the direction of Mr. Tilden, had plucked up sufficient courage to make another attempt to count in its candidates. At the rate the registration has been proceeding Tammany and Tilden will have 40,000 fraudulent votes at their disposal when election day comes.

THE FRAUDULENT REGISTRY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In many parts of the City a heavy tenement vote has been registered as native which heretofore has been made up of the worst of the foreign element. This native registry covers one of the most infamous frauds yet perpetrated in this City. The army of tramps with which the City and country have been infested during the warm weather are now being located and registered in the interest of Tilden in this City, and to cover the shortcomings of birth, residence, want of naturalization papers, &c., they are registered "native." Mr. Tilden knows well that in the State a heavy majority is rolling up against him, and there is no room for doubt that he is making a supreme effort in this City to build up a fraudulent vote which will overcome the honest majorities against him in the country. The country will do its duty. Let us of the City do ours, and New-York is safe against the machinations of the most infamous of modern pretenders. How any honest, thinking Democrat or Republican can face the possibility of a "solid South" in control of our Government, with a man in the White House whose only ambition is to get there, no matter how, is something beyond my comprehension. Let those who see no danger look again. ONE OF THE PEOPLE.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, Oct. 19, 1876.

SOLDIERS' DISCHARGE CERTIFICATES

THEIR SAFE-KEEPING AS A MEASURE OF SECURITY TO THE SOLDIER AND PROTECTION TO THE GOVERNMENT.

A movement has recently been inaugurated by the General Government looking to the gathering up of all soldiers' discharge certificates not now in the hands of the rightful owners, with a view to having them lodged in the War Office at Washington, as a measure of protection to the interests of the soldier as well as to the Government. In pursuance of this plan the Government agents have recently been, and are at present, at work in New-York and other large cities, gathering statistics relating to papers of this character, locating them where they are massed in quantities, and, in some cases, obtaining tolerably accurate invoices of the numbers and the names of the parties to whom they were originally issued.

The importance of such a measure is apparent when it is understood that a soldier's discharge certificate is, in one sense, a draft issued in advance upon the Treasury, it being the document of all others required by the Government officers in the settlement of claims made by the soldier or his heirs for back pay, clothing, bounty, or pension money, and the only paper upon which a claim of this character can properly be based.

It is estimated that there are in New-York City upward of fifty thousand soldiers' discharge certificates that are not in possession of the rightful owners. They have been gathered from all parts of the State, and some of them have been brought from longer distances. Other metropolitan centres possess them in about an equal ratio, swelling the aggregate number in all parts of the country to hundreds of thousands. Every one of these papers can be made the base of a fictitious and fraudulent claim against the Government when presented by unprincipled parties having no rights of ownership in them whatsoever. In the hands of the brave and resolute men who shouldered the musket and carried the knapsack over every battle-field these papers would be secure from any fraud or attempted fraud. The trouble is that the soldier is liable to lose, and in thousands of instances they have lost their discharge papers. In other instances they have died leaving no heirs, and the discharge certificates have fallen into the hands of men who have not hesitated to use them for fraudulent purposes. This has become carried to such an extent as to render the subject one of serious thought upon the part of the Government officers, and the movement looking to the bringing of all such papers into the custody of the United States has been the result. Once lodged in the War Office, they will always be accessible to the soldier or his heirs, and will forever cease to be the instruments of fraud in the hands of others.

HOME POLITICAL WORK.

SPEECH BY HON. JOHN JAY.

ENTHUSIASTIC REPUBLICAN MEETING AT BEDFORD COURT-HOUSE, WESTCHESTER —A GRACEFUL TRIBUTE TO THE UNION LEAGUE CLUB.

At a meeting of the Hayes and Wheeler Club held last evening at the Bedford Court-house, Westchester County, Hon. John Jay delivered an able and telling speech, of which the following are extracts:

In South Carolina, where the late rebellion was commenced by men who, sworn to maintain the Constitution, trampled it under their feet, there are new symptoms of rebellion against the free institutions ordained by the American people in the restoration of the South. Threats and intimidation are used to prevent the colored people from exercising their right of suffrage; and within the last week the Governor of the State has invoked the aid of the National Executive to preserve the peace. In Mississippi and other parts of the South brutal outrages, shootings, and murders have painfully reminded us of scenes which we hoped were passed forever; and the boldness with which these things are done as the Presidential election is approaching is explained by our being told that the South hopes by a solid vote, aloof by the Northern Democracy, to regain at the polls the victories she lost on the field, to secure Governments, not simply of the Confederate States for whose independence they fought, but of the entire Republic, with power to reorganize the South in accordance with their own theories, to reclaim their losses from the National Treasury, to control the Army and Navy, and to conduct their negotiations with foreign powers no longer through the discredited agents of an unorganized Confederacy, but in the name of this great Republic.

In preparing for the Presidential canvass there early arose among our loyal and thoughtful citizens an earnest demand for a higher standard, morally and intellectually, than had recently marked the national civil service, both at the North and at the South, at home and abroad. Among the bodies that made this demand, in a voice so clear and decided that it was heard from Maine to Texas and from ocean to ocean, was the Union League Club of New-York, upon which, as has been well said, Lincoln leaned for support in the darkest days of the rebellion, and which in its natural desire to raise higher and higher the tone of the Republic, which it so prominently assisted to preserve, is accustomed to denounce as they deserved legislative and municipal abuses, without the smallest regard to the question whether the perpetrators of such abuses were Democrats or Republicans. The country hailed the resolutions of the club as expressing happily and at a timely moment the ideas of good men on the subject, and that the Republican convictions, as they met, felt more and more the power of the movement for reform, and the National Convention at Cincinnati recognized the "quickened conscience of the people concerning political affairs."

But returning to our supposition, and supposing the possibility that one of the States, South Carolina, for instance, of which the Charleston News has just said, "the ranks are closed and the people are united," should renew her attempts of 1832 and 1860, what, under the Presidency of Mr. Tilden, would be the position of the Government and the fate of the nation, so far as we can judge from the antecedents of the Democratic Party and Mr. Tilden's recorded principles? In January, 1861, at a Democratic meeting in Albany, Mr. Tilden, repeating the view of Buchanan, declared that he would resist under any and all circumstances the use of force to coerce the States. The Southern wing of the Democratic Party has an excellent right to exhibit its gratitude to Gov. Tilden for the aid and comfort afforded to the rebellion during the war by that assurance, and for the various efforts with which it was followed by leading Democrats in New-York; such, for instance, as their attempt to secure, through Lord Lyons, the secret intervention of the British Government in the domestic affairs of the American people; their constant efforts at home and abroad to prevent the success of the national cause; their opposition to the draft which led to the riots of 1863; the refusal of the Mayor to allow public rejoicings for the national victories, and the open denunciation of the war as a failure by the national convention in 1864, at the moment when the triumph of the American people and their national integrity was on the point of being accomplished. Mr. Tilden, in particular, early proposed after the war to "spread a mantle over the past," and in accordance with that view, on the 8th of January, 1866, the Tammany Democrats met to honor the memory of Jackson and renew their pledge that "the Union must and shall be preserved." But there were Democrats present, square and honorable men, with whom no such farce would go down, and James T. Brady, their favorite and most eloquent orator, told them to their face that in its "conduct during the war the Democratic Party had proved false to the instincts, traditions, teachings, and doctrines of its faith." That was not the slander of a Republican for party purposes. It was the sober judgment of a loyal Democrat, ten years ago, in Tammany Hall; and now let the Democrats of that character who have never proved traitors to the doctrine of Jackson; who stood by their country's flag in time of war, like the honest Democrats of other States, and with John A. Dix, George Bancroft, Daniel S. Dickinson, Peter Cooper, Lyman Tremain, and Francis B. Cutting, in New-York, let them ask themselves whether they hold to Mr. Tilden's doctrine, as stated by himself at Albany, which cost the country so much of blood and treasure, and whether they are now prepared, by electing him to the Presidency, to assure the Democracy of South Carolina, (who will not like the President's proclamation nor the presence of United States troops) that they may secede this time without opposition from the General Government. If such a contingency should arise, could all your endeavors, could Mr. Tilden's own wishes, at the last moment, save the Union, avail against the fact that a solid South had chosen him on that basis, and that it would insist on his paying the price for which they had given him their support?

The Democrats of the First and Second Assembly Districts of Hudson County, New-Jersey, met last evening and nominated Martin M. Drohan and Rudolph F. Rabe.

A large and enthusiastic Republican meeting was held last evening at the Opera House, Elizabeth, N. J., Hon. Amos Clark, Chairman. Speeches were made by Mr. J. Holmes Grover, late consul to Italy, Mr. Treat, of Main, and Prof. Largeton.

A large and enthusiastic meeting of the Republicans of the First Ward, under the auspices of the Morgan and Rogers Campaign Club, took place last evening at No. 64 Exchange place. Addresses were made by Judge W. W. Peck and several others.

At a meeting of the officers of the Second Brigade Boys in Blue, held at the rooms of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Club, No. 184 East Broadway, last evening, Gen. Lloyd Aspinwall was unanimously elected Brigadier General of the Second Brigade Boys in Blue of the Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Senatorial Districts.

The Seventh Assembly District Hayes and Wheeler Club held a large and enthusiastic meeting at their club-rooms, No. 748 Broadway, last evening. Hon. Burt Van Horn, of Niagara County; Charles H. Kitchell, William H. Townley, Hon. George W. Clarke, and Hon. Thomas L. Thornell made able and eloquent addresses.

The Seventeenth Ward Hayes and Wheeler. Morgan and Rogers Campaign Club held a meeting last evening at No. 385 Bowery. Julius Harburger in the chair. A Conference Committee was appointed to confer with the Republican Congressional, Aldermanic, and Assembly Conventions, so that suitable nominations should be made.

A large Republican club has been organized in Newcastle, Westchester County, under the name of the West End Republican Association, and the following officers have been elected: Joseph Archbold, President; Charles Bailey, Charles E. Lewis, William H. Lewis, and Harrison Adams, Vice Presidents; George H. Tillotson, Secretary, and Josiah Lewis, Jr., Treasurer.

The Hayes and Wheeler Club of Fairview, N. J., held a rousing meeting at their club-room on Wednesday evening, at which speeches were made by Hon. A. G. Richardson and Col. H. D. Faulkner, of New-York. The proceedings were enlivened by several songs, excellently sung, by the Fairview Hayes and Wheeler Glee Club, composed of Messrs. Sudloe, Richardson, Carpenter, and Miller.

A Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club has been formed at Verplanck's, Westchester County, with the following officers: Enoch Orne, President; George Tappen, John Stinson, and M. J. Munger, Vice Presidents; John Henry, Recording Secretary; H. Force, Corresponding Secretary; Henry Tate, Treasurer. Executive Committee—Orvin Travis, Thomas Maguire, Louis Hunt, and Norman Chase.

The largest Republican meeting held at Tarrytown, Westchester County, since the opening of the campaign came off last evening at Irving Hall in that village. The hall was completely packed, a large portion of the audience being ladies. The meeting was attended by several delegations from the Republican organizations of the adjacent towns, among them being the Boys in Blue of Sing Sing, who numbered over one hundred, and made a very creditable display as they marched through the village. Addresses touching upon the principal issues involved in the coming State and national elections were delivered by Gen. James A. Garfield and Hon. William P. Fiero. The speakers were greeted with enthusiastic applause, and the meeting adjourned at a late hour with cheers for Hayes and Wheeler.

AN INCIDENT OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The Bridgeport Standard tells of a curious incident of the campaign. Wednesday evening of last week as the Hayes and Wheeler companies were parading, they were agreeably surprised to find the house of a life-long Democrat brilliantly illuminated. On the piazza were placed a number of pitchers, which one of the organizations, the "Molly Pitchers," appreciated as a neat compliment. On inquiring it was found that while the "life-long Democrat" had not changed his politics; he had a little girl nine years old, an adopted daughter, who is as staunch a Republican as he a Democrat, and it was in response to her entreaties that the demonstration was made. As a sequel to this, on Saturday Capt. Foster received the following letter from the little girl inclosing a fifty-cent piece:

BRIDGEPORT, CONN., Oct. 14, 1876.
No. 50 West Avenue.

To Mollie Pitchers: I can't parade and carry a torch, but my heart and pocket-book are with you. Please accept the inclosed stamp to buy powder and oil with to carry on your good cause. Had I more I would give it willingly. Very kindly,

JENNIE HAYDEN MIDDLEBROOK.

The letter was read at the next meeting of the Molly Pitchers, and met with great applause. A silver Centennial medal was voted to the young lady, which Capt. Foster sent to her with an appropriate reply.

AMUSEMENTS.

GENERAL MENTION.

The New-York Mozart Club inaugurated its existence as a corporate body by a concert at Steinway Hall, last evening. The club, which includes Messrs. Arnold, Eller, Kayser, and several other members of Mr. Thomas' orchestra, interpreted, in the matter of concerted music, Beethoven's melodious quintet in E flat, and Fesca's somewhat tedious and thin C minor septet. The performers, who have been together for many years, play with great ensemble, and their experience as co-workers in the cause of chamber-music, during the coming Winter, will doubtless add to the detail and finish of their execution. The soloists of the evening were Miss Anna Drasdil, who sang two songs by Schumann and Mozart's; "Per pieta, non ricercate," and Mr. Arnold, who rendered with much taste and tone a romance by Wagner and Wieniawski's "Rondeau Brillant."

The first rehearsal preparatory to the first concert of the Philharmonic Society takes place at the Academy of Music, this afternoon. Its principal attraction will be the first act of "Die Walküre," the first opera of the Wagnerian trilogy interpreted at Bayreuth, and a work which has not yet been heard in America. Mme. Pappenheim and Messrs. Bischoff and Remmertz will personate the three characters who figure in this portion of the opera, and the rich and effective music will be executed by an orchestra 100 strong. Dr. Damrosch, as heretofore mentioned, conducting. Special attention is asked to the fact that subscriptions for the rehearsals or for the concerts can be recorded by persons desiring to attend either series of entertainments to the exclusion of the other.

Mrs. Pomeroy acted in the "Lady of Lyons" at the Lyceum Theatre, last evening. Her performance of Pauline, like her personation of Juliet, showed intelligence and study, while it did not encourage confidence in the lady's success as a representative of characters of the order she has chosen for her début upon the stage.

The list of artists to take part in Sunday's concert at Booth's Theatre embraces the names of Mlle. de Belocca, Mme. Maretzek, Mr. Satter, M. Sauret, and Mr. Sobst. The Ninth Regiment Band will supply the orchestral music.

A programme of Scandinavian music will be interpreted by Mr. Thomas' orchestra, with the co-operation of the Swedish Ladies' Quartet, at Steinway Hall, to-night.

M. Cazeneuve gave a remarkable exhibition of his skill as a spiritualist at Chickering Hall, yesterday afternoon, and supplemented his performances in this line by some proofs of a really marvelous memory. The public will be glad to learn that the wonders of this private séance are to be performed anew to-night and to morrow, M. Cazeneuze's sojourn in this City concluding, by the way, with this week.

MR. J. R. LOWELL'S ACCEPTANCE.

Mr. James Russell Lowell has accepted the Republican nomination for Presidential Elector in the Eighth District of Massachusetts. In his letter he says: "Believing as I do, on satisfactory evidence, that our candidates for the offices of President and Vice President represent the principles which made the Republican Party useful to the whole country, and that they will firmly oppose the practices which would degrade it from a national organization to a close corporation for private advantage; being assured that they are in favor of an undeviative currency, of a more far-seeing policy toward the South and of a thorough reform in our civil service, now the most aristocratic in the civilized world, since it makes appointment to office and promotion therein dependent on patronage instead of fitness, I accept, with many thanks, the nomination you have done me the honor to communicate."

TWEED'S COMPANIONS IN EXILE.

It was reported in an evening paper yesterday that Richard Tweed, alias "Mr. Hunt," and William King, who gave the alias of "Mr. Taud," had returned to this City. These gentlemen were the companions in exile of William M. Tweed, and were with him at Vigo at the time of his arrest. It is said that they left Spain soon after the departure of Tweed on the Franklin. A TIMES reporter made careful inquiries to verify the statement of Messrs. Tweed and King's alleged return to this City, but failed to elicit any information to corroborate the story of their arrival in New-York.

NAPOLEON ONCE SAID to Mme. Campan; "It is your mission to train up the mothers of France and make them fit to breed heroes." Had B. T. BABBITT'S BEST SOAP been in existence the great ruler would have made it a point that it should be used, for physical culture is as necessary as moral. This new toilet SOAP—delicate, pure, and without artificial scent—has no equal for the toilet and the bath-tub. It will soon become a household word.—Advertisement.

A GRAND DEMONSTRATION.

THE REPUBLICAN BARBECUE.

OXEN ROASTED WHOLE IN MYRTLE AVENUE PARK, BROOKLYN, AND DISTRIBUTED AMONG THE PEOPLE—FULLY FIFTY THOUSAND PERSONS ON THE GROUNDS—SPEECHES BY GENS. SICKLES AND BANKS AND OTHERS.

The grand Republican barbecue given last evening at Myrtle Avenue Park, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Republicans of the Eighteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fifth Wards of that city, was one of the most magnificent affairs of the kind ever held in this neighborhood. The grounds were thronged with men, women, and children during the whole of the afternoon and evening, and at the close of the festivities it is estimated that not less than 50,000 persons were in the park. Two oxen were roasted whole, one in the afternoon and the other at a late hour in the evening. In both instances the roast was made into sandwiches and distributed among the people. Five stands were erected for the accommodation of the speakers. There was not the slightest disorder at any time of the day or night, and the attention paid to the speakers was something remarkable. The speeches were for the most part well delivered, and frequently excited applause. Throughout the day the greatest enthusiasm, which increased as the evening advanced, was manifested. The evening parade of the Boys in Blue, ending with a review at the park by Gens. N. P. Banks and Daniel E. Sickles, was in itself a monster demonstration. Taking it altogether, the barbecue was a great success. The proceedings are given below in detail.

THE PROCEEDINGS.

Barbecues are, in this section of the country at least, a novelty, and when it was announced some time since that a grand Republican barbecue would yesterday be held under the auspices of the Republicans of the Eighteenth, Twenty-first, Twenty-third, and Twenty-fifth Wards, some fears were entertained that it would not prove a success. Nevertheless, the committee appointed to manage the affair went to work with a will, and no stone was left unturned to make the affair such a one as never before took place in this vicinity; and when at an early hour of the day crowds of people began to assemble on the ground and to display such genuine interest in the proceedings, the fears for its success rapidly vanished, and gave way to feelings of great satisfaction. The time for the opening of the festival had been fixed for 11 o'clock A. M., but long before that time crowds of men, women, and children—for all were admitted—might be seen wending their way toward the park. Near the entrance a large tent had been erected for the use of the Committee of Arrangements, and in it were seated during the day a number of ladies. By 11 o'clock thousands of enthusiastic citizens were in attendance on the grounds, the fair sex being by no means in the minority. Prior to the opening of the exercises these people amused themselves at the shooting gallery, in the swings, and in watching the movements of the cooks who were engaged in roasting the oxen. This operation was carried on within an inclosure made of pine logs, gaily festooned with bunting and Chinese lanterns. The oxen, of which there were two, one weighing 983 and the other 1,000 pounds, dressed, had been slaughtered during the previous night, and one of them was thoroughly roasted by 8 o'clock A. M. and ready to be served. The oxen were roasted on a large iron spit, which was suspended beneath a sheet-iron shed, the fire being contained in metal pans, between which was a gutter into which the gravy dropped, and with this the cooks frequently basted the roasting carcases.

There were five stands within the grounds for the speakers who had been invited to be present, and the number was none too large, for before evening it was almost impossible to stand on the outside circle of the crowds collected at either of them, and plainly hear the voice of the speaker. By 11:30 o'clock there were thousands of persons present, and the firing of a national salute announced the opening of the proceedings. Conterno's Twenty-third Regiment band was in attendance, as well as a chorus of one hundred voices, and at this juncture "My country, 'tis of thee," was sung. A few moments later the sounding of a bugle called the assembly to the main stand in the pavilion, and Capt. Charles W. Goddard formally declared the barbecue opened. He said that proceedings such as these were a rarity in the Northern States. Barbecues had long been held in the Southern and Western States, and perhaps it was that which had given a "solid South." He hoped that this occasion would produce the same result, and that it would give a united North. The speaker referred to the glorious weather with which they had been favored, and said that Providence was with the Republican Party; and when Providence was with them, who dare be against them. He announced that the speaking would not begin until 1 P. M., and the crowds now perceiving that the process of cutting up the cascass of the roasted ox had been begun, made a rush for the vicinity of the inclosure. Here sandwiches were made and distributed as rapidly as possible, and in a comparatively short time nothing was left but the bones. When the speaking at the main stand was commenced, there were at least ten thousand persons on the ground, and the street was black with others who kept coming in a never-ending stream. The orators, whose addresses are given below, were attentively listened to and often applauded during the course of their remarks. It had not been expected that the crowds would be very large before evening, and the members of the Committee of Arrangements during the afternoon expressed their surprise and gratification at the numbers hourly arriving. It seemed to be the desire of every one to have a good time, devoting, however, some portion of the day or evening to hearing at least one of the many speeches that were delivered.

The stands had been erected with a view to the accommodation of the people of different nationalities, and at the main stand the ladies were allowed to occupy a number of seats on a level with the speakers, and many of them showed their devotion to Republican principles by sitting there during the whole afternoon. The stand designated as No. 2 was immediately within the grounds and was intended to accommodate those who could not secure positions in the pavilion. This was presided over by Mr. Darwin R. James. Stand No. 3, on the opposite side of the park, was for Irish-Americans, and here Mr. William Grace acted as Chairman. Beside these there were stands for the German and colored people, the former being presided over by Mr. Solomon Spitzer, and the latter by Dr. D. W. Ray. All of these structures were decorated with bunting and lanterns, and during the afternoon immense crowds of persons were collected in front of each. As night approached the speaking at the different stands was postponed until 7 o'clock, and meanwhile, the orators and such others as had been provided with tickets repaired to dinner, to which they did ample justice. When they again appeared and the festivities were resumed, a change had been wrought in the scene. The lanterns had been lighted and lamps had been placed upon many of the trees in the park, which now brilliantly illuminated, and had become more crowded than ever. Salutes were fired at intervals, and the vast assembly became very enthusiastic, frequently cheering the Republican candidates and the speakers who were addressing them on the issues of the campaign. At an early hour in the evening the Boys in Blue to the number of nearly seven thousand formed in line in Bedford Avenue near Myrtle, and bearing torches and accompanied by bands of music, marched through a number of the principal streets to the park, where they arrived about 10 o'clock, followed by eager and excited crowds, who gave vent to their feelings by cheers. This vast procession presented an imposing appearance as they marched into the grounds, and were reviewed at the Irish-American stand by Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks and Gen. Daniel E. Sickles. Some time prior to this the speaking at the main stand had been discontinued, and dancing commenced, and all who had any desire to participate in the amusement had ample time to indulge in it. The entrance of the procession concluded the speaking, and from that time until midnight the evening was devoted to enjoyment. The barbecue terminated at that hour, and was throughout one of the greatest successes of the campaign.

AT THE MAIN STAND.

The main stand was presided over by Capt. Charles W. Goddard, who introduced Hon. Nathaniel P. Banks. Gen. Banks said he scarcely knew how to address those who were before him. He spoke to them as friends of the cause who were gathered from all quarters. The topics connected with the campaign were so varied and so important that he scarcely knew where to begin and where to leave off. There were, he declared, two qualities necessary in politics. First, the people should be earnest and determined, and, second, they should be easy and wise—not to demand too much or to do too little. These two qualities were requisite to a government of a free country under a republican Constitution. The present canvass was the most important that had ever been known, because it involved principles never asserted before in this country, and the triumph of which would make a republican Government impossible, and would put an end to the institutions of liberty in a free country. The people could avoid events like these by not demanding too much of the Government at one time, because free government in a free country moved slowly. The men who had taken the oath of allegiance at the close of the war were only waiting to complete by the ballot that which they had lost by the bayonet and the bullet. He declared that every canvass had its distinct issues, and that the issues in this campaign were different from those in any previous Presidential election. He then reviewed the Administrations of Madison, Jackson, and others, showing how those Administrations differed from the present. He said that one of the first duties of the next Administration was to secure to the people of the South the right to vote. These men, by the Constitution of this country, had the right to vote, and the Republicans said they should vote, and that without intimidation—certainly without the punishment of murder by unauthorized persons. The second thing to be done was that there should be no false registry—that there should be no falsehood and no robbery in the great cities in this country.

SPEECH OF GEN. DANIEL E. SICKLES.

"Hold the fort for Hayes and Wheeler" was next sung, after which Gen. Daniel E. Sickles was introduced. He made a ringing speech, and was frequently interrupted by rounds of applause. He began by saying that there was not limitation for treason, and a party that had once shown its incompetence in power, that had shown itself not to be trusted with the destinies of this country, was not to be reformed in a day or a year, even though they had such a distinguished reformer as Mr. Tilden. The speaker wished to present to his hearers as well as he could the consequences to this country, the possible and probable consequences to the peace, welfare, and happiness of this country, that would result from the election of Samuel J. Tilden, if that could be regarded as probable or possible. The proposal to elect him to the Presidency was exactly equivalent to the proposal to elect Jeff. Davis to the Presidency. [Applause.] When there was a great war in Europe, there was the probability that the United States, with such a commerce as it possessed, might be drawn into the struggle. They should beware of the day when this country should find itself involved in a foreign war, with a secessionist in the chair of the President of the United States, for that day and that hour would be the opportunity for revenge; that day and that hour would be the opportunity to revive the lost cause. That was what they were waiting for, and more opportunity than they have had, and that opportunity, whenever it might come, they would seize. Where was Mr. Jefferson Davis to-day? He was in England, and the people should remember that in the time of the country's struggle, the Government of England were his friends and supporters. This country had but few friends in England except among the poor laboring men, among those who saw that we were maintaining a struggle for liberty and equality and for the laws—a struggle in which they sympathized and in which they were interested. With Mr. Tilden as President it would be the opportunity of the South to reassert its doctrines of secession and to dictate the terms upon which it would remain in the Union. [Applause.] Would Mr. Tilden in the Presidency there would be recognized by the vote of the people of this country the doctrines which Mr. Tilden had over and over again proclaimed and which he had never recanted, that any State of the Union had a right to snap the tie which bound it to the Confederacy. Mr. Tilden had told the people that the Constitution of the United States had not organized or established a nation as the fathers supposed, but that it had organized revolution. Not a Government, not a nation, but revolution. Now the people did not want to elect a President who would set that organized revolution in motion. When Georgia was about to secede, Alexander H. Stevens raised his voice against it, and made a speech in which he told them that the South, with only one-third of the population of the Union, had during two-thirds of the period of the Government absolute control over its policy, that during the whole history of the Government the South had filled two-thirds of the public employments of the Union, more than two-thirds of the Presidents and Vice Presidents, of the Speakers of the House, of the Cabinet officers, of the Justices of the Supreme Court, of the Army and Navy officers, and asked if they were not satisfied. They said "no," and out of the Union they went, because they had failed in the election of 1861, and because they saw the control of the Government taken out of their hands. They were not satisfied with the Missouri Compromise, to which all patriotic men North and South were supposed to have given their adhesion. This they did that they might press slavery further and further. Lincoln, in his inaugural, offered to guarantee to them forever, by a constitutional amendment, slavery in the States where it then existed. They rejected the offer, and demanded that it be extended into the free States. With the election of Mr. Tilden those demands would be renewed. What shape would they take? In the House of Representatives, now controlled by a large Democratic majority, in which were seventy odd rebel officers, the people had seen an indication of their first demands. The first demand of the South would be the recognition and payment of what were known as the rebel claims for damages done by the Union Army in the South. The South had notified the North what it proposed to do if it obtained the power at Washington. Having only one branch of Congress under their control, they had laid upon the desk of the House of Representatives more than 100 bills embracing demands for damages done by the Union Army in the South—not damages done to loyal men, but damages incurred by those who were in arms against their country. They would demand the revocation of the amendments made to the Constitution during the past ten or twelve years, and they would succeed in that demand with Mr. Tilden in the Presidency. New-York and Indiana were among the States that ratified the fourteenth amendment, and the year following those ratifications the Democratic Party obtained power in both New-York and Indiana, and the Legislatures of those States revoked and annulled the ratification of New-York and Indiana previously given by Republican Legislatures, and the point was then taken by leading Democrats, North and South that this revocation of the ratifications of these amendments deprived the fourteenth amendment of its validity and sanction, and they gave notice that whenever they obtained power they would raise this great question and demand that those amendments, and especially the fourteenth amendment, should be set aside. With Mr. Tilden in the Presidential chair that demand would go up from the entire South, and he was utterly incapable of resisting it. With the concession of that demand the door would be open for the recognition of the rebel debt itself; the door would be open for the repudiation of a debt contracted by the country in the prosecution of the war; the door would be open for the rebels to obtain absolute, undisputed control over the States that took part in the rebellion. The speaker then asked whether the people of this country were prepared, after the sacrifice made, to see interpreted the new Constitution which they had established, and which was the compensation to them—the only compensation to them—for the trials, the perils, and the difficulties they had encountered in putting down the treason of Mr. Davis and his compeers.

In former years, the speaker said, he was a Democrat. He had believed he was right, and he had taken part in the elections; he had defended the constitutional rights of the South within the Union, and had gone into the minority time and time again in defending the constitutional rights of the South within the Union. But when they fired on Sumter his connection with the Democratic Party ceased. He could not remain connected with the Democratic Party South when it became the enemy of his country. He could not remain connected with the Democratic Party North when it excused the treason of the South. He was therefore one of many thousands of Democrats who preferred their country to their party. He now stood in the Republican Party, and there he proposed to stand. They told him that the Republican Party had become corrupt, and that through holding power and offices so long. He still had a kindly feeling toward his old Democratic friends, and he did not wish them to become corrupt. He wished to keep them in the path of reform by keeping them in the minority. After giving a humorous account of the ludicrous position in which Tilden and Hendricks were placed in regard to finances, the speaker closed his address with a few remarks upon the Southern question. He said that only in South Carolina and Louisiana, where there were Republican Governors, was there any effort made to protect the ballot-box? In the other Southern States where there were Democratic Governors, no attempt had been made to protect the negro's ballot, and secure a peaceful election. Speaking of the late proclamation by Gen. Grant, he said it was not mere idle words, but that the author of it would make good every word of it.

SPEECH OF HON. A. W. TENNEY.

Hon. A. W. Tenney was next introduced. After congratulating the management upon their successful barbacue, he said that if every man would do his duty there would be a great Republican triumph on the 7th of next November. This was the same old fight which had been going on for so many years. It was the fight of 1856 renewed; the fight of 1860, of 1864, of 1872, all renewed. He said the South claimed that the greenback was unconstitutional; they had slandered the credit of the Union time and time again; but he wished his audience to remember that the greenback was the child of the Republican Party. It was born amid the necessities of the war; its cradle was rocked amid the throes of revolution; its pillow was a sheet of flame and the smoke of battle. It was the child of the Republican Party, and the Republican Party proposed to stand by its offspring until every dollar should be worth one hundred cents. We did not blame the South for taking exception to the greenback, for when they looked at a greenback it said to them "we are the fellows that whipped you," and when a Republican looked upon a greenback, it said "you and I conquered rebellion in the battlefield." Mr. Tenney after quite an effort was able to leave the stand, having been compelled to return several times. When he finally left the platform, the audience gave him three hearty cheers.

SPEECH OF HON. SILAS B. DUTCHER.

After a song by the Glee Club and an address by Judge Culver, Hon. Silas B. Dutcher was introduced. He spoke of the false returns made by Mr. Tilden of his income tax, and then passed to his protestations in regard to his reduction of the State tax. Mr. Dutcher said that the professed reduction of the tax was made by a false transfer of the fund appropriated for pension and bounty debts. The Democrats were afraid to place this money, amounting to $7,500,000, on their tax levy and face the people with it. The Republicans, on the other hand, had placed it on their tax in every instance, and had put themselves and their record honestly before the people. In closing, Mr. Dutcher said that the Democrats—those who were dishonest and corrupt—were at present engaged in reviling the Brooklyn Republicans for coalesing with the Democats. The speaker gave it as his opinion that the wisest and by far the most honest plan was for honest and upright Republicans to combine with honest and upright Democrats in order to overthrow corruption rather than to remain separate and allow the latter to be victorious over both.

AT THE OTHER STANDS.

The speaking at the other stands did not begin until nearly 2 o'clock P. M., at which time a large crowd of persons began to collect in stand No. 2, immediately within the grounds, which was presided over by Mr. Darwin R. James. The chairman after opening the meeting introduced Major Z. K. Pangborn, who delivered a long address. Speaking of the issues of the present campaign he said that the candidate of the Democratic Party for the Presidential chair had always been looking for office, and that his opponent had never done so. The Democratic Party had taken for their standard the word "Reform." They did not know the meaning of the word. It had no meaning for them. It commenced with the letter R, but instead of standing for "reform" in the history of the Democratic party it stood for "rag-babyism," "revolution," "rum," and "rascality." In conclusion, he urged his hearers to endeavor to impress upon all doubtful voters the necessity of voting the Republican ticket in order to save the country from ruin.

The next speaker was Hon. John Oakey, who said that the Democratic Party was a wonderful one for figuring. They were now figuring on the result of the next election, and the manner in which they arrived at the conclusion that the Republican Party was losing in the Western and Eastern States was something alarming. He had no fear, nor had the Republican Party any doubt about the result of the election on Nov. 7, at least not if Republican voters did their duty.

At the stand which had been erected for the accommodation of the colored people, Dr. P. W. Ray presided, and an immense crowd of persons, both white and colored, gathered in front of it. The first address was delivered by Rev. Chance B. Ray, who, after reviewing at length the history of the two parties said that it was impossible for the Democratic candidates to be elected in November if the people did their duty. Without a solid South they could not be elected, and they were making every effort in their power to intimidate Republicans in the South. Neither Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, nor South Carolina could be conceded to the Democrats, and hence there was not the slightest possibility of their getting a "solid South," provided a full and free vote was cast. The Republican Party had done away with slavery, and now the Democrats were endeavoring to prevent the freedmen depositing their votes. Speaking to the colored hearers especially, Dr. Ray urged them to vote on Nov. 7 for Hayes and Wheeler.

Judge E. D. Culver followed in a brief speech in which he contended that Samuel J. Tilden could not be elected by means of a so-called "solid South" because the Southern people would not give him their votes. The Democratic Party had in the past endeavored to destroy the Union, and surely the American people should consider long and earnestly before giving its candidates their votes. Other addresses were delivered by Joseph S. Brown, John Q. Allen, and William Brown.

At the Irish-American stand the first speaker was Hon. Richard Busteed, of Alabama, who delivered an address in which he severely criticised the action of Southern members in the House in presenting rebel claims, and urged that if Samuel J. Tilden was elected by Southern votes, and he could not be elected by any other, the best interests of the people would be sacrificed. He was followed by Mr. J. J. Gouch, Mr. Greve, and others.

At the German stand Mr. Anton Menken was the first speaker. He traced the history of the Germans, who, he said, no matter how bad they might be, were always found to be on the right side in the end. They would not longer support the Democratic Party, which had assisted in an attempt to destroy the Union, but on the contrary would give their united support to the Republican Party, as it was bound to give peace to the whole country. He was followed by Mr. Bernard Scharman.

OBITUARY.

REV. JOHN P. DURBIN.

Rev. John P. Durbin, who was for many years a leading Methodist clergyman in this City, died yesterday at 12:30 o'clock, at his residence, No. 219 West Twenty-third street, in the seventy-sixth year of his age. He had been gradually failing in health for many weeks, and on Saturday last he suffered from an apoplectic attack, from which he never completely rallied, but slowly sank until he died. His two daughters, Mrs. Fletcher Harper, Jr., and Mrs. Whitaker, of Philadelphia, and his son, Alexander Durbin, were telegraphed for when the physician concluded that it would be impossible for their father to recover, and all of them, with other friends of the aged minister, were present at his deathbed. For many years Dr. Durbin was President of Dickinson College, at Carlisle, Penn., a position he resigned to become General Secretary of the Methodist Missionary Society, having his residence in this City. The funeral will be held at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-second street, on Sunday next, at 2:30 P. M.

BURGLARS ON TRIAL FOR MURDER.

The trial of Charles Oschwald and Thomas Ryan for the murder of Policeman J. Stanley Brook in Newark, N. J., was commenced yesterday morning in the Essex County Court of Oyer and Terminer, Judges Depue and Elcord on the bench. In order to avoid the crowd the prisoners were brought from the County Jail to the Court-house early in the morning. Prosecutor Abeel and Attorney General Vanatta appeared for the State, and William J. Magie, Samuel Morrow, Jr., and William H. Hagaman, Jr., for the defense. Prosecutor Abeel opened for the prosecution, reciting the facts of the case. On the morning of Aug. 3 Officer Brock, who was on duty, was passing the residence of Horace Bedell, corner of Murray street and Clinton avenue, when he noticed that the cover of the vault had been removed. Knowing that Mr. Bedell and his family were in the country at the time, and the house unoccupied, he suspected that burglars had entered the premises. He dropped down through the vault, and proceeded to search the house. On reaching an upper floor he saw two burglars in the bath-room, and called upon them to surrender. Before he could draw his revolver one of them fired on him, the ball lodging in his left side. He fell, and the two men escaped through a back door. The wounded officer was removed to St. Barnabas Hospital, where he died on Aug. 10. The indictment contains nine counts, one of which charges Oschwald with shooting Brock and Ryan with aiding and abetting him. As the evidence to be produced was chiefly circumstantial, at the request of counsel for the defense the witnesses were excluded from the court-room while the testimony was being taken. Ernest Adams, a surveyor, was the first witness. He exhibited and explained a map of the house in which the murder was committed. Mrs. Anna Brock, the mother of the murdered officer, was next called upon the stand. She testified to the fact of her son leaving the house in the morning and identified the coat worn by him on that occasion. Two or three other witnesses were called, among them Dr. Archibald Mercer, of St. Barnabas Hospital, who testified to Brock's wound and his death in consequence of it. It is expected that the most important testimony for the prosecution will be produced to-day.

THE MERCHANTS AND THE CENTENNIAL.

The members of the Produce Exchange, the Cotton Exchange, the Maritime Exchange, the Butter and Cheese Exchange, the Grocers' Board of Trade, and the Cheap Transportation Association have decided that their respective chambers shall be closed on Thursday next, in order that all members who may desire to do so may visit the Centennial Exhibition, the day in question having been set apart as Exchange Day. Mr. George W. Mears, President of the Philadelphia Produce Exchange, was on the floor of the New-York Produce Exchange yesterday, and stated that suitable arrangements had been made to receive the members of the New-York Exchanges on the Centennial Grounds. It is probable that before the appointed day other New-York associations may decide to attend.

THE SUPPLY OF CROTON WATER.

In the Board of Aldermen yesterday Mr. Morris offered a series of resolutions, reciting the inadequacy of the present aqueduct to afford the needed supply of Croton water to this City, and requesting the Commissioner of Public Works to consider the question of whether a sufficient supply can be had by laying one or more lines of iron pipes, thirty-six or forty-eight inches in diameter, to carry the water. The resolutions were laid over under the rule.

THE LATE REV. GEORGE B. DRAPER.

MEMORIAL SERVICES AT ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH—ADDRESS BY REV. GEORGE B. SEYMOUR.

A service in memory of Rev. George Barnard Draper, D. D., late Rector of St. Andrew's Church, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh street and Fourth avenue, was held last evening. The position which the deceased held in the love and esteem of his parishioners was well shown by the attendance. Every spot in the beautiful structure which the energy, zeal, and faithful striving of the late Rector had given to the parish was crowded. Its seating capacity is ample, but no seat was vacant, nor was there any standing room in the aisles unoccupied, while hundreds who came to the church doors failed to procure admission. Clergymen came from distant parishes to pay their tribute to the memory of the deceased, and to join in the mourning of the congregation which his earnestness and work had gathered and kept together. The services were simple, and fitted to the melancholy interest of the occasion, while the demeanor of the large assemblage which had come together betokened sincere sorrow and affectionate remembrance. The ministry of Dr. Draper was the history of the progress of the parish, and this did not pass unremembered. During a quarter of a century he had served his people faithfully, had carried them through their earlier difficulties, had, without effort or design of his, intertwined himself with their affections, and in an age of change had sought no advancement which would separate him from them and from the duty to which he had consecrated his life, and so his people bore him in kindly remembrance when his life's work was done. Besides the memorial services, or indeed, as a part of them, an address was delivered by Rev. George F. Seymour, D. D., which told with nice fidelity and a warmth which must have come of sincere admiration, the story of a life to which duty was the beacon light, which had no selfish or sordid motives to subserve, but which was fulfilled that others might benefit. Among the clergymen present at the services were Rev. Dr. Dix, Rev. Dr. Henry Potter, of Grace Church; Rev. Dr. Geer, Rev. Dr. Peters, Rev. Dr. Carter, Rev. Dr. Henry, Rev. Mr. Woodruffe, and others.

The services, which were conducted by Dr. Peters, opened with the processional, which was followed by selections from Psalms xxxix. and xc. Then the lesson, Corinthians xv., 20, was read, and the hymn No. 491, "Brief is here our portion," was sung. The litany and De Profundis followed, after which the memorial address was delivered. Rev. Dr. Seymour began by reminding his hearers that they were called together for a common purpose, to condole among themselves for the loss of one who had been for more than twenty-five years the Pastor of the parish and a presbyter of the diocese. He indicated how their sorrow and sorrowful mood would take shape according to the recollections which each had of him. He had entered into the lives of all of them in a more or less degree. Some recollected him best for one trait of goodness, or others for another, but with all their lives he was blended, although differently. Their experiences were different, but their regrets were common. When the new grave closed over a dear departed one these regrets were poignant and bitter, but yet, as a consolation, they had, the speaker indicated, the assurance that he was gone to a higher and happier life. For himself, he knew not well what to say of their dear departed brother. After exceeding the limit which could possibly be given to a speaker, it would seem to him that he could not say half what might be said, and that the unuttered thoughts might perhaps, after all, replace with advantage those which were spoken. Perhaps through the communion of saints they would find their chief consolation. It was that which enabled men to blend their voices with those of the angels, and sing holy Lord God of hosts, glory to the Most High. It was through it that they could shelter themselves under the assurance that he was still living, and had business as he had during his life—the praise of God. Reviewing the life of the deceased, Dr. Seymour took especial occasion to point out his particular fitness for the prophetic office to which he had been called. There were some persons, he said, who appeared to be particularly guarded by God for that ministration—protected from infection within and from contagion without. Dr. Draper seemed especially to be one of these. There were others fit too, no doubt, but none seemed so fit as he. Even in early youth he had the modest repose and serenity which were usually associated with maturer years. Dr. Seymour then told the story of his early life—his happy home among the hills of Vermont, his school days, his graduation at Columbia College at the early age of nineteen, his subsequent entry into the theological seminary, and his conspicuous talent in all his studies. In 1851 he entered on the rectorate of St. Andrew's, and from this point forth his career was sketched with affectionate detail. The progress of the parish under his ministration was described, and the unalterable fidelity with which he clung to its fortunes was enlarged upon by the speaker, who also paid a tribute to his many virtues, his sincerity, honesty, and purity. And yet he never hesitated, Dr. Seymour said, to speak the unwelcome truth when such a course was needed, but yet in such a tone and in so winning a way as to make the rebuke acceptable. His only calls were from St. Andrew's to St. Andrew's through all its stages of improvement, from its chrysalis state to its present butterfly glory. These calls were described in the deceased's own words, but there was, said Dr. Seymour, another call which he could not describe, and then he drew a pathetic picture of the last scene of all, when Dr. Draper surrendered his soul to God, his final utterance being, "All for Christ."

At the conclusion of the memorial address, Hymn 494, "What are these in bright array!" was sung. This was followed by prayer, and then, after the singing of the anthem, "Christ, being raised from the dead, dieth no more," Rev. Dr. C. S. Henry pronounced the benediction.

THE CRICKET FIELD.

THE ST. GEORGES DEFEAT A PICKED TEAM—SCORE 106 TO 58.

On the St. Georges Ground, at Hoboken, yesterday, a game was played between the St. Georges and a picked eleven. The eleven, chosen from clubs in the vicinity, went first to the wickets, but were disposed of for the small total of 58, the last four wicket falling without a run. Greig, with 25, and Hooper, with 12, played good cricket against the very straight bowling of Soutter and Moersn. The St. Georges, with the aid of some very bad fielding on the part of some base-ball substitutes, scored 106. Moore, (missed first ball,) with 34, Giles, with 22, not out, and Whetham, with 19, playing well. Giles' 22 was well and patiently made, Brewster, the opposing bowler, bowling on the wicket all the time. The fielding of the scratch team in one or two instances, notably Stevens, Makin, and Greig, was good, but that of the substitutes did much to lose the match. The following is the score:

LADIES' RIFLE MATCH.

At the ladies' rifle match which took place at St. Peter's Church fair last evening, participated in by fourteen young ladies, divided into American, Canadian, Irish, and Independent teams, the first bull's-eye was scored by Miss McKenna, of the American team, amid great applause. The first prize, consisting of a silver basket, was won by Miss O'Hara, of the Irish team; the second prize, a handsome silver cup, was won by Miss McKenna, and the third, a silver napkin ring, was won by Miss Kate Hogan, of the American team. Following are the scores: Americans, 79; Canadian, 80; Irish, 108, and Independents, 35.

RAILROAD TROUBLES ADJUSTED.

ST. ALBANS, Oct. 19.—Arrangements have been made between the recently appointed Receiver of the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain Railroad Company and the authorities of the Central Vermont Railroad Company, by which through business over the Central Vermont and Ogdensburg Roads will go on without interruption or transfer. All existing contracts will be carried out, and everything go on as before in all ways. The appointment of a Receiver is only temporary, holding until the 31st inst., when a hearing will be had to determine the rights of the parties.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

The body of John Larkin, a man about forty years of age, was found last evening floating in the North River at the foot of Thirtieth street.

George J. Kraus, of No. 124 Orchard street, writes to say that he received no money for his services in obtaining the pardon of Otto Huffeldt.

The Central German-American Organization met last evening at No. 201 Chambers street, and unanimously nominated ex-Judge Edward Hogan for Congress.

Archibald White, of No. 16 Suffolk street, who fell into the hold of the steam-ship Caledonia on Wednesday, died at the Chambers Street Hospital yesterday morning.

Edward Kearney, aged forty, of Second avenue and Twenty-fifth street, died suddenly last evening while at work in a carpet-cleaning establishment at No. 15 East Twenty-seventh street.

Henry Zechner, a resident of East Bridgeport, Conn., dropped dead yesterday at the junction of One Hundred and Twenty-fourth street and Eighth avenue. The body was taken to the Morgue.

John Hone, Jr., Henry J. Nicholas, and Hector Chauvitesu, constituting the firm of Hone, Nicholas & Co., brokers, of No. 17 William street, made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors to John Hone yesterday.

Bridget O'Connell, aged sixty, of No. 46 Greenwich street, was knocked down at the corner of Broadway and Fulton street yesterday, by a coach driven by Patrick Cluney, and was seriously injured. Cluney was arrested.

During a quarrel last evening at the corner of Baxter and Worth streets, Philip Smith, aged thirty-five, of No. 18 Baxter street, was stabbed in the back and severely injured by John Johnson, who escaped. Smith was taken to the Chambers Street Hospital.

A child five years old, named Elizabeth Phœbe Price, daughter of Patrolman Price, of the Twenty-second Precinct, died yesterday at the residence of her parents, No. 529 West Forty-fifth street, from the effects of burns accidentally received.

Inquests were held yesterday in the cases of Elizabeth Armstrong, who died at Sixty-fifth street and Tenth avenue, on the 12th inst., from an overdose of opium, and John Allison, who was accidentally choked by a piece of meat which lodged in his throat, on Oct. 9, at No. 578 Tenth avenue.

An inquest was held by Coroner Woltman yesterday in the case of the colored man William Simmons, who died on Sunday morning last from the effects of a fall received while fighting with a white man named Charles Mellie on Saturday. The jury found that Mellie had acted in self-defense.

The inquest in the case of Charles Dennis, the burglar, who was accidentally killed by the fall of the arch of the doorway while he was escaping from the residence of Mr. J. J. Searing, No. 64 West Fiftieth street, on the evening of the 12th inst., was held yesterday by Coroner Ellinger. The jury rendered a verdict in accordance with the facts as stated.

The 'longshoremen employed on the Cromwell line of steamers struck work yesterday morning in consequence of their wages being cut down from thirty to twenty cents per hour. A new set of hands were employed, and the strikers made an attack upon them. Sergt. Castlin, of the Steamboat Squad, with a force of Police, quelled the disturbance.

The funeral of Kate Caldwell Holland, the daughter of the late George Holland, took place yesterday from the "Little Church Around the Corner," the services being conducted by Rev. Dr. Houghton. Among those present were Harry Montague, James Lewis, Harry Becket, Mr. and Mrs. Drew, Charles Fisher and wife, Bijou Heron, and other theatrical people. The remains were buried in the Dramatic Fund Cemetery at Cypress Hills.

The fine collection of European oil paintings imported by Mr. J. B. Crom, which has been on exhibition at the Leavitt Art Rooms, No. 817 Broadway, since July last, will be sold by the Messrs. Leavitt on the evenings of Thursday and Friday, Oct. 26 and 27, at 8 o'clock. The paintings were selected and bought by the most experienced dealers in fine pictures in the world at a cost of $120,000. The collection includes works by Lambert, Emile Levy, Victor Thirion, Paul Seignac, C. Detti, Leray, Pascuti, and many other noted artists. The paintings will remain on free exhibition until the hour of sale.

BROOKLYN.

Ann Harburton, aged three years, yesterday fell from the third-story window of her parents' residence, No. 126 Summit street, and was severely injured about the head and body.

The trial of William A. Fowler, before the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen, on charges preferred against him by Mayor Schroeder, was yesterday postponed until Tuesday next at 3 o'clock P. M.

Michael McManus, a laborer, aged fifty-one years, of No. 91 Dikeman street, died suddenly of heart disease yesterday morning, on board the Hamilton ferry-boat New-York, while on his way to his work. Coroner Simms took charge of the body.

Mary Robinson, aged six years, was severely burned about the body yesterday forenoon, by her clothes taking fire while she was making a bonfire in front of her parents' residence, No. 385 Hudson avenue. Her injuries are pronounced dangerous by the physician in attendance.

Henry Cobler, aged fifty-six years, residing at No. 26 Forest street, while driving a beer wagon belonging to Liptin's Brewery yesterday, was thrown to the pavement in turning the railroad curve corner of Herbert street and Graham avenue, and had his skull fractured and his right shoulder broken. It is thought that his injuries will prove fatal.

Charles Condit, a lawyer, residing at No. No. 191 Clinton street, was found dead in his bed yesterday morning. Death was caused by paralysis of the heart. Mr. Condit was forty-eight years old, a graduate of Yale College, and a student in the law office of Charles O'Conor during the trial of the celebrated Forrest divorce case. He began the practice of law in Brooklyn in 1850.

NEW-JERSEY.

L. R. Vredenburg will represent Rutgers in the Intercollegiate contest in New-York. H. Veghte takes the second place.

In the Middlesex County Courts yesterday, Edward French, a colored man, was sent to State Prison for a year for burglary. John H. King and Patrick Ryan were sentenced to two and four years respectively for larceny.

The second day's session of the Synod in Elizabeth was opened yesterday morning with prayer. Rev. M. White called attention to an irregular proceeding on the part of the Presbytery of Orange in giving a letter of recommendation to a licentiate of the Presbytery and the Protestant Episcopal Church. Some discussion ensued but no definite action was taken. The report of the Committee on the Westfield Church case was to the effect that as the Presbytery had already dissolved the pastoral relation between Mr. McKelvey and the Church no further action was necessary. After some discussion the report was accepted.

Capt. Barrow Frazer, who commanded the Hoboken Boys in Blue in the grand Republican parade last Monday night, and who was thrown from his horse while returning home, receiving a fracture of the skull, died of his injuries about 12 o'clock Monday night. Capt. Frazer rode a very restive horse in the parade, and it was with the utmost difficulty that he was able to manage him. He finally left the procession before it was dismissed and started for home alone. The horse threw him in the Grove street, near the Hoboken city line. Deceased was thirty-three years of age, and unmarried. He served with distinction throughout the war, being promoted to a Captaincy in the Thirty-third New-Jersey Volunteers.

THE WOMEN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The third and last day's session of the annual convention of the Women's Union Missionary Society was held yesterday in the Church of the Pilgrims, Henry and Remsen streets, Brooklyn. The morning session was called to order by Mrs. Pruyn, and a half-hour was spent in reading the Scriptures, singing, and pr

THE CONTEST IN NEW-YORK.

OVER-CONFIDENCE IN STEUBEN COUNTY.

REPUBLICANS WHO NEED A THOROUGH WAKING UP—WHAT THEY EXPECT TO ACCOMPLISH WITHOUT WORK—MR. HUNGERFORD'S CANVASS FOR CONGRESS.

From Our Special Correspondent.

CORNING, Wednesday, Oct. 18, 1876.

The Republicans are not conducting the campaign in Steuben County with so much energy as in the other counties along the southern tier. With the exception of the town of Corning there has been no thorough canvass of the county, though one is said to be in progress, and is expected to be completed in a few days. They are by no means despondent, however; indeed, they appear to be over-confident. They say that Steuben County is going to give one of her old-fashioned Republican majorities in November—they have tested the public pulse sufficiently to ascertain that fact—and, not having any apprehensions of losing the State, they do not feel the necessity of making any extra exertions to bring out the last vote of the party. The lowest figure at which any Republican puts the majority in the county is 1,000, and most of them increase the estimate all the way to 1,500. And yet the facts show that in every year since the last Presidential election the county has gone Democratic. Last year it gave Bigelow 656 majority; two years ago it gave Tilden 616 majority, and three years ago it gave Willers 421 majority. Four years ago, however, it was carried by Grant by 1,600 majority, notwithstanding 600 Liberals in the county voted for Greeley. This tends to show, what all the Republicans here assert is a fact, that the Republicans of Steuben County only vote en masse, once in four years. It is on this assumption, coupled with the fact that at least five hundred out of the six hundred Liberals of 1872 are now for Hayes and Wheeler, that the Republicans base their estimates of the majorities they are to get in November. The canvass which they have made of this town tends to confirm their calculations, for it indicates a reduction of the usual Democratic majority of between two and three hundred to about one hundred. It is also remarked that all the Republican meetings that have been held in the county are fully attended and enthusiastic, while the Democratic meetings are just the reverse. The Democratic campaign, however, is conducted here, as elsewhere, on the "still hunt" plan, and its effectiveness remains to be seen. Republicans here all agree in saying that whenever they have made a "still hunt" canvass they have always lost by it, but when they had an open campaign and plenty of meetings they always swept the county. They are not at all frightened, therefore, at Tilden's "still hunt," which they construe as a sign of weakness. The more the mass-meetings and the more the discussion, the larger, they say, will be the Republican vote, and one speech from a man like Blaine, or Ingersoll, or Tenney will make more votes in this county than bushels of lying tracts and handbills such as are issued from the Tilden bureau in Liberty street. The Republicans are thoroughly united throughout the county, and the nominations are all satisfactory. There are no Republicans who voted for Grant four years ago who will vote for Tilden now; at least eighty per cent. of the Liberals, including all the leaders, are now working for Hayes and Wheeler, and there is nothing to prevent a Republican majority approximating to that of 1872 except a failure to bring the voters to the polls. The Chairman of the County Committee, Mr. T. S. Pritchard, says that this will certainly be done, and Mr. C. S. Cole, one of the best workers and most influential Republicans in the county, (he led the Liberal hosts here in 1872,) agrees with him that there is to be a full vote of the party in November. Mr. John N. Hungerford, the Republican candidate for Congress in this district, resides in Corning, and will poll a large vote outside of his party throughout this county. Betting men here offer odds on 3,000 majority for him in the district, and are ready to take even bets that the majority for Hayes and Wheeler in the district will not be below that figure. This is not very discouraging for a district that elected a Democrat two years ago; albeit that election was no criterion by which to judge of any other that ever did or ever will take place in this district. The Democratic Party has but one C. C. B. Walker in this district, or in the State, and when he refuses to run for office the Steuben Democrats throw up the sponge. There is a good deal of growling here, as elsewhere, among Democrats at the necessity which compels them to vote for Tilden, the "old fraud," as they call him, but most of them have made up their minds to swallow the dose. There are only twenty-five in this village who utterly refuse to eat the crow, and most of them, it is said, will vote for Peter Cooper. There are plenty of Democrats, however, who will not work or spend their money for the ticket, and all admit that the Republicans will carry the county by a majority not far from the lowest estimate made by the Republicans themselves, viz., 1,000. This will be a gain of nearly 1,700 over the Republican vote of last year, when Bigelow carried the State by a majority of 14,310. A similar gain in all the counties of the "southern tier" would carry the State for the Republicans in November without going off the line of the Erie Railroad.

Hon. J. E. B. Santee, of Hornellsville, has been renominated for the Assembly from the Second District of Steuben, and J. J. Reynolds, of Pultney, from the First District. Both will be elected. The Democrats last year carried the First District, with W. B. Ruggles, by eighty-two majority, and have renominated the same candidate this year. In the Second District they have also renominated the defeated candidate of last year, Col. James E. Jones, who used to be Captain of the Port in New-York and was a serviceable tool of the Tweed Ring.

For Sheriff of the county the Republicans have nominated Frank D. Sherwood, of Hornellsville, who will be elected in spite of the Democratic attempt to injure him with his party by circulating the falsehood that he bolted the ticket because he failed to get the nomination three years ago. His opponent is Edward Armstrong, of Campbell. In a word, the Republicans of Steuben County propose to elect their whole county ticket this year, besides two members of the Assembly, and to give their electoral ticket 1,000 majority, at the lowest calculation. The Democrats do not, of course, admit all that their opponents claim, but they fail to show where they are going to get the votes from to prevent it.

HON. GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS AT NEWBURG—LARGE MEETING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

NEWBURG, Oct. 20.—The third mass-meeting of the Newburg Republicans took place this evening. There was an immense attendance at the Opera-house, hundreds being unable to enter the building. An effective speech was delivered by George William Curtis, and great enthusiasm was manifested.

SULLIVAN COUNTY REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MONTICELLO, Oct. 20.—At the Republican County Convention held here to-day John Murphy was nominated for Sheriff; C. T. Kilbourne, for member of the Assembly; James Graham, for Superintendent of the Poor; J. H. Hill and E. Champlain, for Coroners, and George R. Green, for Justice of Sessions.

LARGE AND ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING AT HIGH BRIDGE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HIGH BRIDGE, Oct. 20.—A large and enthusiastic Republican meeting was held at this place to-night, which was addressed by Hon. John Y. Foster in a ringing speech. The first hall in which the meeting was convened was found inadequate, and an adjournment became necessary to the large Town Hall. Rarely have our people heard a more able address. We are awake here, and will be heard from in November.

A GREAT REPUBLICAN RALLY IN TROY—FOUR THOUSAND IN THE PROCESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TROY, Oct. 20.—There was a monster Republican parade here to-night, the largest in years. Four thousand by accurate count were in line. Clubs from Troy, Albany, and other towns in the vicinity participated. Business men who had never been in a procession before were out, including manufacturers, professional men, and merchants, with Hon. J. M. Francis, the veteran editor, at their head. The streets were thronged until midnight with fully thirty thousand people. Whole blocks were illuminated, and great enthusiasm prevailed. Nothing has compared with to-night's demonstration in the present campaign. Though Troy is strongly Democratic, the Republican Party will give a good report on election day, if there is a fair ballot. The Democrats are making a "still hunt." Registration is frightfully fraudulent in some wards, and this is our only cause for fear.

THE BROOKLYN REPUBLICANS.

EFFORTS OF THE RING TO CREATE DISSENSIONS IN THE RANKS—PROBABLE ACTION OF THE CITY CONVENTION.

It is more than probable that the Brooklyn City Republican Convention, which was adjourned from Wednesday until this evening, will nominate for the offices of Controller and City Auditor two earnest Republicans. It was rumored on Wednesday, after the Committee of Conference appointed by the Republicans had been some time in consultation with the Independent Democrats, that the office of City Auditor had been conceded to the latter. The rumor proved to be groundless, and there is reason to believe that the Democrats did not seriously think of obtaining either of the nominations mentioned after the representation given them on the County ticket. They expect, and probably will receive, some representation on the City Judiciary ticket. Within the past few days evidence has not been wanting to show that the Democratic Ring has tried every means in its power to bring dissension into the Republican ranks. It is generally believed that the opposition of Mr. David Williams, and the other gentlemen in the City convention who opposed a coalition with the Independent Democrats, was the result of honest conviction. A like honesty of purpose has not been credited, however, to a certain ex-Commissioner of City Works, who claims to be an honest Republican, but whose affiliations have left him open to suspicion. He bitterly opposed the nomination of Mr. Chittenden, than whom no stronger candidate could have been nominated by the Republicans in the Third Congressional District; and when the County Convention placed before the people a first-class ticket he had only words of condemnation for the action of the delegates. A great many Republicans are inclined to believe that a deep-laid scheme has been hatched by the Ring to defeat the tax-payers of Kings County in November, and that the corruptionists have found allies among men who have many times professed enmity to the public plunderers. As a result of this scheme it is said the Ring procured the publication in the New-York Tribune, which professes to be a Republican paper, of an article on Wednesday last containing some extraordinary statements. In the article referred to it was set forth that although it was generally supposed that there had been much corruption in the Board of City Works, the evidence thus far given in the Fowler investigation did not warrant the supposition; that many honest Republicans believed the removal of Fowler and the investigation of the charges against him and the service of subpœnas in the suit brought by the tax-payers against Archy Bliss, were merely moves for political effect; that the Republicans could not in the coming election obtain a two-thirds majority in the Board of Aldermen without fraud; that the organization of Independent Democrats was a sham, and that there was a color of truth in the accusations made by the Democrats that the Republicans were colonizing the odd-numbered wards. It was rumored on the streets that the Tribune had "solid reasons" for publishing the article referred to. The position of the Ring in Brooklyn is a desperate one at present. All their efforts are directed now toward making trouble between the Republicans and Independent Democrats so as to prevent a coalition. The Independent Democrats who have joined with the Republicans in this campaign have already received a fair proportion of representation on the County ticket, and it is not likely that they will claim either of the places on the City ticket. For the first place on the ticket—that of Controller—the Republicans speak of nominating Mr. Ripley Ropes, the President of the Brooklyn Trust Company. Mr. Ropes is probably the very strongest candidate that could be named, and with a good nomination for the second place the City ticket could not fail to be successful. For City Auditor the names of ex-Police Commissioner James Jansen, Herman Schaarmau, of the Twenty-first Ward, and John W. Coe are mentioned. All these gentlemen are Republicans, and any one of them would make an excellent candidate. Yesterday Mr. Jansen seemed to have the greatest number of supporters, but nothing definite will be known as to the strength of the gentlemen mentioned, or whether they will be named at all, until the convention assembles. There were some rumors afloat last evening in political circles to the effect that two of the places on the City Judiciary ticket would be given to the Independent Democrats.

REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS FOR ASSEMBLY.

The following Republican nominations for Assembly have been made in Brooklyn:

First District—William Rome.
Second District—Richard Marvin.
Fifth District—Col. William W. Stevenson.
Sixth District—Jacob Worth.
Eighth District—Adrian M. Suydam.

REPUBLICAN RALLY IN PATERSON, N. J.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Oct. 20.—The Republicans of Paterson held to-night one of the greatest meetings ever known in New-Jersey. Three thousand people were in the wigwam. Gens. Banks, Garfield, and Conway addressed the meeting, which was not over till nearly midnight. The Democratic meeting which was to have been held this evening was a total failure.

THE FOURTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

Mr. Solomon Spitzer, who was nominated on Thursday night for Congress by the Republicans of the Fourth (Brooklyn) District, is a well-known merchant of this City. He has not hitherto been prominent in political affairs, but his abilities fit him for the responsible position for which he has been named. Mr. George C. Bennett, formerly editor and proprietor of the Brooklyn Daily Times, was a candidate for the nomination until Mr. Spitzer's name was mentioned in connection with it. He then withdrew from the field, and, in a letter to his former journal, paid a graceful tribute to the mental and moral qualities of Mr. Spitzer. The Brooklyn Times says of the candidate: "Mr. Spitzer is one of the most intelligent Germans in this city. He speaks English fluently, but as a German orator he has few if any superiors. He is eloquent and effective in the highest sense. Solomon Spitzer as Congressman would make a record for himself of the highest character and importance."

MURDER IN THE SIXTH WARD.

Quimbo Appo, a Chinaman, well known as one of the most desperate criminals in this City, last night added a brutal murder to the long list of crimes chargeable to him. For some time past Appo has been gaining a livelihood by selling cheap cigars, and resided at the Home Lodging-house, No. 192 Chatham street, a place frequented by indigent mechanics and laboring men. Among the lodgers, besides Appo, was John A. Kelly, who of late had been in the habit of gaming with Appo for small sums, which the Chinaman, who as a petty gambler is an expert, usually managed to win. Last night the two men contended in several games of checkers, and as usual Appo defeated Kelly, who it appears became angry at his own ill-luck, and struck Appo. The latter retaliated, and during the scuffle that ensued drew a knife and stabbed his antagonist three times, once in the chest directly above the heart, once on the left arm, and again on the left shoulder blade. Kelly, on being stabbed, fell to the floor and bled to death within a few minutes. The murderer, seeing what he had done, ran from the house toward Mott street, followed by a person who was a witness to the affray. This person pointed out the retreating Chinaman to Officer Michael Hogan, of the Sixth Precinct, who at once arrested Appo and took him to the station-house, whence the body of Kelly was also removed. The Chinaman, in giving his version of the affray, denied having used a knife on Kelly. His statement was that they were playing checkers on the third floor of the lodging-houses, and that Kelly assaulted him because he [Appo] had succeeded in winning the games. As an evidence of ill-treatment at the hands of Kelly Appo exhibited a discolored eye and several bruises on the legs, where he had, as he alleged, been kicked by his antagonist. In consequence of the lateness of the hour at which the murder was committed it was difficult to obtain an accurate account of the circumstances beyond what is given above. Appo is one of the most notorious criminals known to the Police. Several years ago he brutally murdered his wife, and was sentenced for life to Sing Sing, but was pardoned by Gov. John T. Hoffman. Since his release he has spent three additional terms of imprisonment for minor offenses, such as larcenies and assaults.

THE HOSTILE INDIANS.

A MOVEMENT BY GEN. TERRY AND GEN. STURGIS ON BOTH SIDES OF THE MISSOURI.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Advices have been received at the War Department that Gen. Terry will immediately leave Fort Abraham Lincoln in pursuit of the hostile savages.

ST. PAUL, Oct. 20.—A special to the Pioneer Press from Bismarck says Gen. Sturgis, with eight companies of cavalry, three of infantry, and a section of artillery, will move South to-day on the east side of the Missouri. Gen. Terry, with four companies, moved south on the west side. Nobody knows where they are going. Whitney and others arrived from the Black Hills to-day bringing the body of Dodge, killed by Indians in April last.

THE WEATHER.

PROBABILITIES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21—1 A. M.—For the Middle Atlantic States, falling followed by rising barometer, increasing north-east winds, backing to north or west, and rainy succeeded by warmer, clearing weather.

For New-England, falling barometer, increasing north-east to south-east winds, nearly stationary temperature, and threatening and rainy weather.

NAVY AND ARMY ORDERS.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Master C. E. Emmerick is detached from the Shawmut and ordered to proceed home and await orders; Surgeon S. F. Shaw has reported his return home, having been detached from the Kersarge, Asiatic Station, on the 25th of August last, and has been placed on waiting orders; Paymaster H. T. Skelding has reported his return home, having been relieved on the 31st of July last of the charge of stores at Nagasaki, Japan, and has been ordered to settle his accounts.

First Lieut. Thomas Sarvey, First Cavalry, is appointed to act as Inspector of certain unserviceable camp and garrison equipage and recruiting property on hand at the recruiting rendezvous of Capt. Lloyd Wheaton, Twentieth Infantry, Chicago, Ill., and for which Capt. Wheaton is responsible. Second Lieut. Lea Febiger is relieved from duty at Fort Columbus, New-York harbor, and Second Lieut. A. Dyer from Columbus Barracks, Ohio, and both will report in person at their regimental head-quarters, Omaha Barracks, Nebraska.

DISTURBANCE IN THE CALIFORNIA GRAIN MARKET.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 19.—Commercial circles are considerably excited over the warlike news from Europe, which has had the effect to strengthen the demands of holders of wheat, in anticipation of higher rates at an early day. Very little business has been transacted since the news was received, such small sales as have been effected running from two and a half to five cents per cental above previous quotations, holders generally asking much higher figures, which buyers at present decline to pay.

OFFICIAL RETURNS OF THE OHIO ELECTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 20.—Official returns have now been received from all the counties but one. Taking the telegraph statement of the vote in that county as correct, the Republican majority for Secretary of State is 6,446, and the majority for Supreme Judge about two thousand more.

PROPOSED JUDICIAL CHANGES IN VERMONT.

MONTPELIER, Oct. 20.—In the Legislature today a bill was introduced to reduce the number of terms of the Supreme Court from fifteen to two, and both of these to be held in Montpelier before the full Bench. There is also a bill before the Senate reducing the number of Judges from seven to six. The Legislature will have to elect Judges next month. Judges Pierrepont, Barrett, Wheeler, Royce, and Powers will be re-elected. For the remaining two Judgeships several candidates are mentioned, among them Judge Poland.

THE MISSIONARY CONVENTION.

RICHMOND, Oct. 20.—In the National Christian Missionary Convention to-day resolutions were adopted that the members of the convention, as preachers, devote a portion of the coming year to mission work; that preachers everywhere be urged to do the same, and that money be raised in said missionary meetings to be sent to the Corresponding Secretary of the general convention. Addresses were made by several members of the convention, mostly in acknowledgment of the cordial treatment they had received at the hands of the brethren here, after which the convention adjourned sine die.

THE TANNERS.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 20.—The National Tanners' Association concluded their session in the Shoe and Leather Building on the Centennial Grounds to-day. An address was delivered by Col. Williamson on the prospects of business between this country and Buenos Ayres, and a resolution was adopted directing the Executive Committee to make efforts looking to the passage of a bill by Congress for the humane treatment of cattle in their transfer by rail. New-York was selected as the next place of meeting.

DISASTERS IN THE ST. LAWRENCE.

QUEBEC, Oct. 20.—The steamer Lady Head has been ordered to proceed to Matane and tow in quarantine the schooner Marie Louise with about thirty persons on board, the Captain having died of small-pox. The loss on the north shore of six fishing schooners is reported. In one instance the crew, seven in number, perished.

THE SITUATION IN EUROPE.

TURKEY AND RUSSIA FACE TO FACE.

THE SERVIAN MASK WORN BY RUSSIA RECOGNIZED BY EUROPE TO BE THROWN OFF—POSSIBILITY OF TURKEY RELINQUISHING THE EUROPEAN PROTECTORATE AND TREATING DIRECTLY WITH RUSSIA.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—The Paris correspondent of the Times calls attention to the fact that since Russia's refusal of the long armistice she has been face to face with Turkey, no other power having approached Turkey; that by strange accord entire Europe has abandoned the fiction by which discussion has been carried on in the name of Servia and Montenegro. By one of the most singular transformations in history Russia and Turkey are virtually at war when Europe is trembling at the prospect of such a conflict. It will be, therefore, no surprise if Turkey throws overboard the so-called collective protection of the powers, and opens direct negotiations with Russia. In the programme of Russia's wishes, [which was given in the Associated Press dispatches yesterday,] there are points to which Turkey will easily resign herself, but which the mediating powers would oppose. Turkey cannot abandon her magnificent Bulgarian provinces without committing suicide. Turkish statesmen believe she may, in dealing only with Russia, save Bulgaria by granting the liberty of the Bosphorus. It is true Turkey is bound by the treaties of 1856, to which the freedom of the Bosphorus is contrary; but the powerlessness of Europe is driving Turkey into negotiations with her bitterest enemy, and the Porte may break the treaty in despair.

RUSSIA AND THE OTHER POWERS.

THE ENGLISH POLICY OF ABSTENTION—TONE OF THE LONDON PRESS—GERMAN INFLUENCE THROWN WITH RUSSIA—POSITION OF FRANCE—THE CZAR OVERRULED BY HIS FAMILY AND THE NATIONAL PARTY.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The British Cabinet at its meeting yesterday decided upon a policy of abstention for the present, at least, and in this policy they have the support of the press and the people. This removes from the consideration of the chances of the peace of Europe one of the elements which in Wednesday's panic was certainly reckoned upon to disturb it in case Russia crossed the Danube. There is nothing in this morning's news to relieve the uncertainty about Russia's intentions. The London journals editorially seem inclined to abandon all hope of the preservation of peace between Russia and Turkey. The Berlin newspapers, on the contrary, express the opinion that all the powers of Europe, including England, are equally interested in and responsible for Russia's actions in consequence of the failure of their joint efforts at Constantinople, and that it is unjust to suspect Russia of following the dictates of self-interest. The French papers agree that France will do her best to maintain peace, but will not take an active part should the crisis end in war.

A Times dispatch from Vienna confirms the report of Germany's rejection of the proposed six months' armistice, and its acceptance by the other four powers. The correspondent thinks that Germany throws her influence with Russia in order to force the other powers to agree upon a compromise which Russia can accept. He sees in this a prospect of peace, but, nevertheless, regards the situation as most critical.

The same correspondent says: "The Italian design of depriving Austria of her semi-Italian districts is unanimously opposed in Germany."

The Pall Mall Gazette's dispatch from Berlin says: "The reported alliance or understanding between Russia and Italy is denied from a trustworthy quarter."

A special dispatch from Vienna to the Daily Telegraph says: "It is generally considered certain here that the Czar has been overborne in the Livadian Councils by the predispositions of the Empress, the Czarewitch, and Prince Gortschakoff, all of whom favor the views of the National party."

A Renter telegram from Athens announces that the Ministry have submitted to the Chamber of Deputies bills authorizing a general levy and the reorganization of the forces. Additional taxation and the settlement of the old debt of Greece are also proposed.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—The council to be held by the Queen on Monday is summoned to meet at Balmoral. The further prorogation of Parliament will then be ordered. At the close of last session Parliament was prorogued until Oct. 30, 1876. On Monday the prorogation will be extended probably until February next.

THE QUESTION OF AN ARMISTICE.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR A TRUCE TILL DEC. 31 IN PROGRESS.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Constantinople says: "Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Ambassador, will today present his credentials to the Sultan. It is believed that negotiations are about to reopen between the Porte and the Ambassadors of the powers on the basis of the English proposals."

The Pall Mall Gazette has a special dispatch from Berlin which says: "The representatives of the mediating powers are actively negotiating for an armistice until Dec. 31. Its acceptance is considered probable."

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.

FIGHTING NEAR SAITSCHAR—THE SERVIANS REPULSED—REPORTED CROSSING OF THE PRUTH BY THE RUSSIANS—THREE RUSSIAN CORPS IN THE SOUTH-WEST ORDERED TO MOBILIZE.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—A special dispatch from Belgrade to the Standard says: "Serious fighting occurred near Saitschar on Tuesday and Wednesday. The Turks are trying to force their way to Paratchin where their march to Belgrade would only be interrupted by the weak fortifications at Chapria. Considerable anxiety prevails here as to the issue, especially as the movement seems to be made in concert with operations on the Drina. The weather has suddenly changed from tropical heat to heavy rain, gales, and cold. This favors the Servians."

A special dispatch from Vienna to the Daily News says: "The Turks at Saitschar have repulsed the Servians and driven them to the plateau of Kopita, and it is said they now intend marching on Paratchin."

A dispatch to the Times from Belgrade says: "It was rumored here on Wednesday that 20,000 Russian troops had already crossed the River Pruth, the boundary between Moldavia and Bessarabia. The French, Italian, and Austrian Consuls-General went to Orsova to ascertain whether the rumor was true, but there is no confirmation, so it is probably false. It is also rumored at Belgrade that Russia is about to present to the Porte a six weeks' armistice and the English proposition as an ultimatum.

The Times' Vienna correspondent says that the report that 250,000 Russian troops were ready to pass through Roumania is undoubtedly a gross exaggeration, but the correspondent has trustworthy information that the three army corps of Kiew, Kharkow, and Odessa are under orders of mobilization, and there are other signs of preparation in South-western Russia. But there are indications, on the other hand, that the eventuality against which this preparation must be made is not looked upon as immediately impending. The force which these three South-western corps might put in the field is estimated at 100,000 men.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—The man-of-war Shah, carrying twenty-six guns, and reported to be the swiftest vessel in the Navy, has been ordered to reinforce the British fleet at Besika Bay.

The Post has information that Russia has ordered the mobilization of the corps d'armée which has head-quarters at Warsaw.

A dispatch from Belgrade to Reuter's Telegram Company states that the Turks have captured Schlicovaz and taken the heights of Gredetin.

EFFECT OF THE WAR NEWS ON TRADE

AN ADVANCE IN GRAIN, AND THE MARKET VERY FIRM—THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE FIRMER.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 20.—A leading grain circular says: "Under the threatening aspect of the Eastern question holders of wheat are less inclined to part with their stocks. At the same time there has been an active inquiry resulting in considerable business, chiefly for cargoes to arrive, at daily advancing prices, the improvement in yesterday's markets being one to two shillings per quarter. Since Tuesday the transactions have been large in this and neighboring markets, and four pence per cental over previous currencies has freely been paid. Maize was also in good request and improved six pence to nine pence per quarter. Wheat at the market to-day was firmly held at four pence per cental above Tuesday's rates, which checked the demand, and only a moderate business was transacted. Flour was a shilling per sack and barrel dearer. Corn being in limited supply improved one shilling and three pence per quarter, but the demand was not active.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—The Stock Exchange opened firmer this morning with an upward tendency all round, consols being 94½. The market is weaker now but quiet and free from movements of a panicky nature.

FOREIGN BUSINESS MATTERS.

THE LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET—THE PRICE OF SILVER.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 20.—The circular of the Liverpool Cotton Brokers' Association, in its review of the week ending yesterday, says: "Cotton has been in fair demand throughout the week, but with a dull market and a continued desire to sell. The tendency of prices has been in buyer's favor. American has been in fair request. It has, however, been very freely offered, and prices have partially declined 1-16d. In Sea Island there has been more doing at prices 1@1 lower than those of a month since. In futures business has been comparatively limited, and prices have declined about 3d. from last Thursday's."

Silver at 12:30 P. M. was quoted at 52 11-16d. per ounce.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

GERMANY AND THE FRENCH EXHIBITION—THE ALLEGED SPIRITUALISTIC FRAUDS.

LONDON, Oct 20.—A special dispatch from Berlin to the Pall Mall Gazette says: "A majority of the Chamber of Commerce have reported in favor of Germany's attending the French Exposition, and recommend that the Government grant a subvention for that purpose.

LONDON, Oct. 20.—Three new summonses have been issued against "Dr." Slade, the American spiritual medium, and Simmons, his assistant, for fraudulent pretenses. These summonses are made returnable to-morrow, when the original case will also be up again.

SAN SEBASTIAN, Oct. 20.—A decree has been issued ordering all civilians possessing arms to deliver them to the authorities within ten days. Troops have occupied the various forts on the frontiers.

WASHINGTON NOTES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—Charles H. Moulton, a real estate agent in this City, has left here, leaving debts estimated at from $50,000 to $100,000. The Citizens' National Bank cashed one of his checks yesterday for $2 000, which, with a previous amount overdrawn, makes $4,401 due that bank. The officers of the bank this morning filed an attachment suit against him. Other parties have filed similar suits amounting to about thirteen thousand dollars additional.

The following were the balances in the Treasury at the close of business to-day: Currency, $13,126,397; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $39,760,000; coin, (including $32,070,600 in coin certificates,) $70,720,294; outstanding legal tenders, $368,494,740.

United States Minister Turner, who arrived here this morning, will soon return to Liberia. He states that the war between the colonists and several of the native tribes is over, and that the latter have become citizens of the republic. The people there only need the moral influence of the United States Government to increase their success.

Two petroleum accidents occurred yesterday. In one the woman was badly burned about the face and neck while using the oil in kindling a fire, and in the other the sexton of a church attempted the same thing with a like result.

H. H. Griffiths, of Iowa, is appointed Receiver of Public Moneys at Des Moines, Iowa.

The President to-day appointed William R. Ellis to be Postmaster at Goshen, Elkhart County, Ind., vice E. W. H. Ellis, deceased.

Frank L. Eddy was to-day appointed Revenue Storekeeper for the Fourth District of Georgia. The following Gaugers were also appointed: J. A. Knight, for the Seventh District of Ohio; Samuel M. Duke Hart, for the Third District of Maryland, and Hugh Douglass for the Second District of West Virginia.

The receipts from internal revenue to-day were $345,243 09, and from Customs, $298,525 56.

RACING AT POINT BREEZE.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 20.—The running races at Point Breeze Park were concluded this afternoon. The track was in good condition, the running excellent, but the attendance was small, not more than two hundred people being present.

The first race was half-mile heats, for all ages; $125 to first horse, $25 to second. Four horses started, with the following result:

Leamington H.	2	1	1
First Chance	1	2	2
Hobkirk	3	3
Grey Lag	dis.

Time—49¾, 49¼, 49¾.

The second race was a dash of three-quarters of a mile; $20 to first horse and $50 to second. Three horses started, and the race was won by Waco, with Waterec second and Tom O'Neil third. Time—1:17½.

The third and last was a hurdle race, mile and a half, over six hurdles. Lorena and Stanford started, and the race was taken by the former. Time—3:00.

A BARK OVERDUE.

BOSTON, Oct. 20.—The bark Susan A. Blaisdell, Capt. Sawyer, of Searsport, Me., from Quebec to Glasgow, is now out fifty-eight days, and some anxiety is felt for her safety. Twenty per cent. premium was paid in this city Wednesday on her insurances.

CONVICTED OF MURDER IN THE SECOND DEGREE.

Patrick Carr, who has been on trial during the past three days, at Paterson, N. J., for kicking his wife to death last Summer, was last night convicted of murder in the second degree, the penalty for which is imprisonment for twenty years. The accused is seventy years of age, and had lived with his wife for forty years. The plea of insanity was ineffectually raised.

THE YELLOW FEVER.

SAVANNAH, Oct. 20.—The total number of interments to-day was eight, of which three were yellow fever cases.

RIFLE SHOOTING IN CONNECTICUT.

NEW-HAVEN, Oct. 20.—The annual meeting of the Second Regiment Rifle Association was held here to-day at the Whitney Range. Each company furnished a team of eight to compete at 200 and 500 yards for team medals; five shots at each range. The first prize was taken by Company E, of this city, by a score of 275; the second by Company K, by a score of 265; the third by Company F, by a score of 256; the fourth by the Governor's Foot Guards, by a score of 223; the fifth by Company I, by a score of 219. A large number shot for individual prizes at 200 yards, the winner of the Col. Smith medal being John N. Lane, of Company I, by a score of 22 out of a possible 25. About forty men made scores of over 17, and several valuable prizes and medals were awarded. The result shows great improvement over the scores of last year.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The Philharmonic Society gave its first public rehearsal at the Academy of Music, yesterday afternoon. Two hours were expended upon a rendering of the first act of "Die Walküre," most of the particularly difficult passages being repeated, of course, again and again. "Die Walküre" is unquestionably the most melodious opera of the famed trilogy. It is replete with themes of exceeding loveliness, its harmonies are of infinite richness and suavity, and the marvelous power of characterization exhibited by the composer is observable in every page of the score. The portion of "Die Walküre" rehearsed yesterday embraced the scene between Siegmund, Sieglinde, and Hunding, and its prominent numbers were Siegmund's fine recitative, descriptive of his early life; the tenor's lovely "Spring Song," and the varied and impassioned duet between Sieglinde and Siegmund. When Dr. Damrosch's orchestra is quite equal to its task—a thing hardly to be expected at a preliminary rehearsal—a performance of great symphonic interest may be counted upon. The vocalists at the rehearsal were Herr Bischoff, Herr Remmertz, and Mme. Pappenheim, and their respective efforts—and especially Herr Bischoff's singing—were highly effective. We shall defer, however, a detailed review of the music—some account of which has already been supplied to the readers of this journal in form of letters from Bayreuth—until its finished execution here, under Dr. Damrosch's baton, can be spoken of. We should meantime advise the intending listener to look into the score of the opera, or into the libretto, if obtainable. We apprehend that the gratification of the hearer unacquainted with the progress of the action, step by step, and with at least a fair part of the dialogue, will be more sensuous than intellectual and thoroughly appreciative.

MR. THOMAS' CONCERTS.

A programme of Scandinavian music was last evening interpreted by Mr. Thomas' orchestra and the Swedish Ladies' Quartet at Steinway Hall. Its numbers were representative of Gade, Tahnke, Söldermann, Svendsen, Griegg, and other composers of the same nationality, and although something of the beauty and force of contrast must be lost in the preparation of a programme illustrative of one order of musicians only, the selections were full of interest. Gade's Symphony in C minor opened the concert, and was its most important orchestral element. In the matter of vocal performances, the Swedish Lady Quartet, whose agreeable voices and nicely-shaded delivery were far more conspicuous than when first heard at Booth's Theatre, sang four Swedish songs, and Mr. Werrenrath was also listened to twice. Two piano pieces were executed by Mr. W. H. Sherwood, a young artist who effected his début on the occasion we refer to. In Griegg's concerto Mr. Sherwood supplied evidence of the possession of considerable technique and power, and, in two rather bizarre compositions by Söldermann, he revealed thoughtfulness and delicacy of shading. It will be more satisfactory, however, to await Mr. Sherwood's rendering of less fanciful music before assigning him definitely a place among local pianists. The concert attracted a numerous audience; a matinée to-day, and a Beethoven and a Wagner night next week, are to round off the series of entertainments which has now been in progress a fortnight.

GENERAL MENTION.

The New-York Aquarium may be visited afternoon and evening, daily.

An afternoon performance of "Baba" is set down for to-day at Niblo's Theatre.

At the Fifth Avenue Theatre, "Life" will be acted this afternoon and this evening.

Mr. Barnum's show may be visited this afternoon and to-night at Gilmore's Garden.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" is to be represented twice to-day at the Grand Opera-house.

"Forbidden Fruit" will be the play at the matinée at Wallack's Theatre, this afternoon.

Mrs. Pomeroy appears in "The Lady of Lyons," at the Lyceum Theatre this afternoon.

M. Cazeneuve gives a matinée and an evening entertainment—his last—at Chickering Hall, to-day.

The Theatre Comique, the Eagle Theatre, and the Olympic Theatre supply matinée entertainments to-day.

A matinée performance of "The Two Orphans" may be enjoyed to-day at the Union Square Theatre.

Kelly & Leon's Minstrels and the San Francisco Minstrels announce matinée entertainments for to-day.

"Sweethearts" and "Tom Cobb" will be represented at the Park Theatre this afternoon and this evening.

Mr. Thomas gives a matinée concert, with the Centennial inauguration programme, at Steinway Hall, to-day.

HOME WORK.

Monday next is the last day for registration in Brooklyn. Be sure you register. The hours are from 8 to 11 A. M., and 4 to 11 P. M.

A meeting of the German Republican Association of the Eighth Assembly District was held last evening at No. 77 Essex street. Speeches were made indorsing the Republican nominations and exposing the weakness of the Tammany candidates.

SWINDLERS ARRESTED.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 20.—W. Y. Sedam, Alexander Harland, and M. Moser, managers in Covington of lotteries claimed to be drawn under the Frankfort grant, were arrested to-day on an affidavit accusing them of illegally conducting a lottery. The parties were released on bail to appear on Thursday next. The lottery wheel and other implements of the office were seized and drawings will probably cease for a while.

ESCAPE OF ILLINOIS CONVICTS.

JOLIET, Oct. 20.—Six prisoners escaped from the Penitentiary here about dusk this evening, by tunneling under its walls.

NEWS NOTES.

The cable steamer Farraday is preparing to leave Halifax, Nova Scotia, for London.

The Hartfords beat the Bostons in a game of base-ball, in Boston yesterday, by a score of 5 to 0.

Ninety-four thousand and eighteen cash admissions were registered at the main Exhibition turnstiles yesterday.

The light-house at Rondeau, Ontario, was destroyed by fire last night. The range light only can be shown for the present.

Alfred Lucier, a well-known merchant of Nashua, N. H., was killed by the accidental discharge of his own gun while hunting yesterday.

goes wrong in the Navy, and thus encouraging carelessness and blundering, continues to bear its natural fruits. One day it is the Thunderer which is blown up on a trial trip; soon after the Alexandra is disabled on a similar occasion by a weakness in the machinery which the contractors failed to detect; and now we have another case of breaking down on a trial trip. The following particulars are given in the Times: "The Shah, unarmored corvette, Capt. Hedford, having received her powder and shot on board on Tuesday, at Spithead, left her anchorage yesterday morning, with topgallant masts down, for a six hours' continuous full-power trial of her machinery. After a short run the trial was brought to a premature conclusion by the giving out of the cross-head by which the connecting-rod of the after engine is fastened to the piston-rod. The defect will be readily repaired. It may be expected that, if this sort of thing goes on, the Navy itself will give out."

It is also known that there is such a dearth of efficient naval engineers at the present moment that it is impossible to get certain ships commissioned, although they are urgently wanted. Strong remarks are also made in the service on the absurdity of trusting a good ironclad to the command of a fancy sailor like the Duke of Edinburgh, who is quite incapable of understanding its complicated construction and working. Altogether it is to be hoped the Navy will not be wanted just now for any serious business, for if it is it will be a bad look out.

An odd controversy is going on as to a story told by Canon Liddon and Rev. Malcolm McColl, two well-known High Church clergymen very much taken up with the notion of a union of the English and Greek Churches, and who have gone on a tour through Bulgaria, Servia, and the adjoining districts, to hunt up material for exciting the English public on this subject. They report that, in the course of a steam-boat journey through Turkish territory, they beheld on the river-side a figure impaled on a pole, which Mr. McColl, who wrote the letter for himself and his friend, estimated at twenty feet high. This has been denied by the Turkish Ambassador here in a positive way.

Among literary news it is reported that Mr. Tennyson has finished another historical drama, which will before long be published. It is not intended for the stage. Mr. Trevelyan, encouraged by the success of his life of his uncle, is understood to have in preparation a selection from Macaulay's writings, with explanatory notes. Mr. Froude has undertaken to give the opening address at the Edinburgh Philosophical Institution. His subject is "The Uses of a Landed Gentry," and his treatment of it is looked forward to with much curiosity.

MONEY LOANED ON MORTGAGES.

From the London News.

When the Providential man, who took so many liberties with France in the cause of order and good government upon a certain 2d of December, had finished the rougher parts of his task he had still a great deal of fine work left upon his hands—work which had to be finished somehow or other. In the first place, he had several adherents who were extremely eager for their wages; and for the life and soul of him he did not know what to give them. Yet it was clear that they must be satisfied, and the worst enemies of the Bonaparte family have never accused them of any want of generosity in distributing other people's property among their own followers. It was all very well to talk of prefectures and foreign missions to those who had any fancy for things of that sort, and who had not yet found out the vanity and vexation of spirit which attends ambition out at elbows. But such men as the late Duc de Morny of blessed memory had a way of recommending those marks of imperial favor for the acceptance of his friends, while he magnanimously declined them on his own account. Indeed, when he had politely taken as much of the real power of the State into his own hands as they could hold he nobly renounced many of the smaller pomps of office. Neither the Duke nor his Imperial relative, however, could disguise from themselves that the ordinary emoluments of Government employments in France, even when most discreetly selected, were scarcely of the sort which make less men grow fat, and they consequently turned an attentive eye to the richer fields of financial enterprise.

Fortunately enough it turned out upon well-directed inquiry that there was quite a nice speculation just then coming on ready to be taken up by enterprising hands amid the general applause of an enlightened public; and it was in this way that the famous institution of the Crédit Foncier was called into being. M. Wolowski, a high authority on finance, had lately contrived to make even the dry subject of mortgagors and mortgagees attractive to the French mind, and his writings had exercised such a spell over small capitalists in search of large interest and tangible security for their savings, that every cotton nightcap maker in the Rue St. Denis was cock-a-hoop on a project for lending his neighbor money on landed property.

The Providential man of December and the select circle of more or less anonymous persons who then formed the Government of France took the national aspiration toward money lending into their right cheerful consideration. There were a few troublesome political economists, M. Thiers among others, (for that eminent thinker has ever had a hankering after arithmetic,) who said that if the small capitalists wanted to lend their money on land they might be safely left to do so in their own way. But the Providential man would not hear of such a pusillanimous idea, and impartially received to help each other many one or more mortgage monopolies advantageous to his own immediate connection and under his august supervision.

It is unnecessary at this time of day to recall the funny legislation which followed in view of this paternal object, though it might be a not unprofitable study for any philosophic historian who has not yet made up his mind about the benefits which may be conferred upon mankind by Cæsarism carried out to its extreme consequences, precisely as it was in the second year of the second half of the present century. It is perhaps enough to say that a decree of the 28th of March, 1852, authorized thirty and one capitalists to constitute themselves into a company, under the title of the "Banque Foncière de Paris." There were thirty-one capitalists, "because," as M. de Morny pleasantly observed to M. de St. Arnaud, another illustrious Bonapartist, "there is luck in odd numbers." The capital of the new company was fixed at 25,000,000 francs, a sum which will bear a good deal of financing in able hands, but the next thing that happened was a wild outcry of anger proceeding from the Bank of France, jealous of any infringement of its rights and title. The name of "bank," therefore, had to be dropped like a hot coal, for Cæsar was in no mood for offending M. d'Argout and the potent gentlemen who did business in the ancient palace of the Counts of Toulouse. The name of "Crédit Foncier" was thus finally decided on, and a decree dated July 10, 1852, approved the statutes which were to regulate its future proceedings. Almost the first act of this promising society was to borrow 200,000,000 francs on a lottery loan, which must have been a most agreeable affair for the parties principally interested. There was some quite delightful manipulation of this money, though some, but, if so, the story is an old one now, and need not be revived. There are always some merry folks about when gold is jingling, and very likely it is good for trade that people should quickly grow rich and spend their money freely, or who would live in all the new things in M. Chevet's windows, and who would have given the immortal fame to M. Worth? Soon after the Crédit Foncier Company were heard chinking their napoleons so joyously, M. Mirès, another free-handed hero of the period, of course turned up in connection with them. This interesting gentleman, who had subsequently a large and intimate acquaintance with the inside of prisons, was just making still more money for the company than it could make for itself, and the company was nothing loath to profit by the lights of M. Mirès, cast upon the higher regions of finance. But M. Mirès, like most men of original genius, seems either to have had enemies at court, or to have been backward in rewarding his friends there, for Cæsar suddenly put a stopper on all M. Mirès' ambitious career of anguish and protestations, which will be heard through the ages—Mirès being a tuneful creature who could set a sum in the rule of three most pathetically to music when the result was unprofitable to him.

Nevertheless the Crédit Foncier managed to survive the discomfiture, and even the threats of M. Mirès. It could hardly do otherwise, for a monopoly based upon any want which is widely felt throughout a rich and prosperous country can scarcely fail to thrive. There are, indeed, people who complain of its methods of dealing, but there will always be grumblers, and it is never worth while to pay attention to unlucky gossip. It is, therefore, with all due respect to everybody concerned, that it may be observed that rumors are about which suggest that the Crédit Foncier is a little too fond of mystery; and the judgment which is passed upon it as a public institution of general utility has, at least, two sides. It gives an undue preference to the inhabitants of towns and to the proprietors of house property; and it is, moreover, urged that the Department of the Seine alone absorbs more than two-thirds of the benefits derived from it, and which should be equitably spread over the whole country. In short, it is said to do more for builders than agriculturists, and has been, let us hope, overlightly named "The Freemasons' Refuge."

Such is a brief account of the parentage, birth, and adventures of one of the most flourishing institutions of French finance, and there are divers morals in it for those who care to hunt them out. Other and wiser readers will more comfortably content themselves with small morsels, of which there is seldom any lack even in this world, so that we only keep our eyes shut and our tongues quiet. Moreover, after all, it does not much matter how or where a child is born, or what was the amount of the accoucheur's fee for presenting him to good society, if he is doing any sort of fair work which needs to be done. The latest quotations of the Crédit Foncier on the Stock Exchange create no alarm among the parties interested. They have often received very satisfactory dividends on their property, and surely all is well that ends well.

THE NEW-YORK DEMOCRACY

TAMMANY DISTRICT CONVENTIONS.

THE PROGRESS THAT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE NOMINATIONS—NAMES OF THE NOMINEES.

As soon as it became evident that there could be no combination for the spoils formed between Tammany and Anti-Tammany, the Tammany Conventions in the Congressional, Assembly, and Aldermanic districts received the cue from John Kelly that they could convene and nominate the candidates which he had "slated" for them, and this has been done with the following results:

The convention in the Fifth Congressional District has adjourned until next Tuesday without making any nomination. Edwin R. Meade is the "slated" candidate in this district for a renomination, but there are three other Democratic candidates, ex-Justice Edward Hogan, James Oliver, and Col. James E. Kerrigan, and it was thought better to postpone immediate action. In the Sixth District Samuel S. Cox has been renominated by Tammany, and will receive the support of Anti-Tammany, which is united with Tammany on national candidates. In the Seventh District the convention will meet this evening to nominate a candidate in the place of Smith Ely, Jr., who has accepted the Mayoralty nomination. It is probable that Coroner Anthony Eickhoff, who was slaughtered in the Tammany County Convention by Flanagan's Irish friends, who swore that there were "enough Dutchmen on the ticket," will be given the nomination, in order to propitiate the German element, which Mr. Ely was supposed to represent. In the Eighth District Elijah Ward was nominated by Tammany Hall, and last evening the Anti-Tammany Convention, presided over by Timothy Shea, the man who so violently denounced John Morrissey at the meeting of the Anti-Tammany County Convention, indorsed Mr. Ward's nomination. This is a district that can be easily carried by the Republicans, and it is thought that Hon. Frederick A. Seward, who is very popular in the district, will be the Republican nominee. Fernando Wood, who has a perpetual claim of succession in the Ninth District from Tammany Hall, in consideration of his not entering into any Anti-Tammany combination has had the usual nomination tendered him. In the Tenth District Abram S. Hewitt has been renominated by Tammany Hall, and will receive the warm support of Anti-Tammany. This nomination was not relished by John Kelly, but he deemed it prudent not to oppose it, as Mr. Hewitt would have run on an independent Democratic ticket, supported by Anti-Tammany and could have beaten any Kelly candidate who might have been presented. In the Eleventh District Col. Benjamin F. Willis has been nominated by Tammany and Anti-Tammany, but he is personally unpopular in the district and can be defeated by a good Republican candidate.

Only a few of the Tammany Assembly District Conventions have made nominations. In the Fifth District Peter Mitchell has been nominated, and, it is said, will receive the Anti-Tammany indorsement. In the Seventh District the convention is to meet on Monday evening, and Smith E. Shaw is "slated" for the nomination, but will undoubtedly be beaten by the Republican nominee. The Tenth District Convention meets on the 23th inst. to nominate Christopher Fiecks, and the Fourteenth District Convention on Tuesday evening to nominate James Daly or Luke F. Cozzens. The other Tammany Assembly District Conventions are to meet shortly, and all the nominations will be made within ten days.

In the Fourth Aldermanic District "Tommy" Sheils and James J. Slevin have been nominated for Aldermen, and in the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth have all adjourned without making nominations.

The Tammany Hall Fifth Senatorial District Convention met last evening to nominate a candidate to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Hon. James W. Booth, but simply appointed a Conference Committee, and adjourned to next Friday evening. James Kiley, Col. Frederick A. Conkling, and Gregory S. Bosworth, Jr., are the candidates for the nomination.

THE ANTI-TAMMANY ORGANIZATION.

MEETING OF THE COUNTY CONFERENCE COMMITTEE—THEY BELIEVE A COMBINATION CAN BE FORMED TO DEFEAT TAMMANY.

John Kelly never pleased his opponents more than when he dictated the nominations made on the County ticket ratified by his convention on Thursday afternoon. The Anti-Tammany men are delighted at the result, and say they can easily form a combination to beat the ticket, which is exceedingly unpopular even among the Tammany adherents. The Anti-Tammany County Conference Committee met yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock in Irving Hall. There was a very full attendance, and Hon. Ira Shafer presided. Ex-Sheriff O'Brien was present, and he said that everything was progressing in the most favorable manner in relation to forming a combination against Tammany. He said he had no personal ambition for office to gratify, and was perfectly willing to withdraw any claims for office, if it would further a coalition to defeat Tammany Hall.

The Subcommittee on Conference, of which Hon. Emanuel B. Hart is Chairman, reported that consultations had been had with the Independent Citizens' Organization, the German Democratic Reform Association, the German Tammany organization, and other organizations, with all of whom it was probable that a coalition would be formed. The committee was instructed to continue its duties and report at the next meeting of the Conference Committee. Mr. John Henry Ford, chosen by the delegates from the Eleventh Assembly District [John Morrissey's] to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Morrissey, was received as a member of the Conference Committee to represent that district. It was announced that the subcommittee which had conferred with other organizations would meet this afternoon at 3 o'clock to have a further conference with those organizations. Among the members present yesterday was ex-Supervisor James Hayes, a warm friend of Morrissey, who took an active part in the proceedings. The Conference Committee adjourned to 4 o'clock on Monday afternoon.

MEETING AT THE STAATS-ZEITUNG OFFICE.

An Anti-Tammany meeting was held at the Staats-Zeitung building yesterday afternoon, consisting of delegates from the Citizens' Association and several gentlemen appointed at the recent Cooper Institute demonstration where Hon. Andrew H. Green was nominated for Mayor. The session, which was conducted with closed doors, was presided over by Emanuel B. Hart, and after a short discussion on the plan of action to be adopted, they adjourned to meet this afternoon. Mr. James O'Brien and several other prominent politicians were present at the meeting, and they expressed themselves as being confident of defeating Tammany's popular ticket. Richard Flanagan is the only man on the ticket they consider worty of their support. They say that he is a man of character and independence, and that his nomination was secured despite the protests of Boss Kelly. Several of the friends of Isaac Somers, the defeated candidate for Coroner, were at the meeting, and they express great indignation because of his rejection by Tammany. They say that a fair test of his popularity at the convention was prevented by Boss Kelly holding the party lash over the heads of his subservient adherents, and forcing them instead to nominate a more pliant tool who could be depended on to run with the Tammany machine. The Twentieth Assembly District, where Mr. Somers resides, is in open revolt against Tammany Hall, and they are making active preparations to get even with Tammany.

Mr. O'Brien is marshaling his numerous forces to join issue with John Kelly at the coming election. He feels confident that decent and independent citizens will not support such a ticket, made up as it is of political hacks, young clerks, and "one in particular who was charged with his capital offense. Mr. O'Brien stated that in a few days the citizens of New-York will have a ticket worthy of their respect and suffrage. Meantime he did not care to punish his plans until they were thought out and matured.

DISSATISFIED WITH THE TICKET.

PROMINENT DEMOCRATS PREPARING TO OPPOSE KELLY'S NOMINATIONS—VIEWS OF JOHN MORRISSEY AND OTHERS ON THE SITUATION.

"Tweed, when he was at the head of the Tammany Hall party, never would have had the nerve to put such a ticket in the field as John Kelly did at the convention last Thursday." This was said yesterday by a prominent Democratic politician who was very familiar with the methods of action of Kelly's predecessor when he was in supreme control of the City. No ticket for City and County officers was ever created by the so-called "regular Democracy," which caused such general dissatisfaction among the rank and file of the party. It is impossible to find a Democrat in the City who has ever been active at the polls who will say that he is satisfied with all the nominations that have been made. John Morrissey, in conversation with a TIMES reporter last evening, said that he did not like the ticket at all. A much better one might have been selected by the convention. He then went on to say that he had never at any time since he had severed his connection with Tammany Hall said that he would support its candidates under any circumstances, and that anything which may be said to the contrary is untrue. He was anxious to have the men nominated by the Democratic National and State Conventions elected, but he would act independently in relation to the local candidates. His action in the City canvass, he said, would depend entirely upon "the shape which the opposition to Tammany Hall would take." Concerning the "shape" which he wanted the opposition to take, Mr. Morrissey was reticent. If, however, it should be according to his views, it would, he said, secure his earnest support. If it was not what he desired it to be, he would remain neutral in the local political strife, using no effort to influence others and voting for the candidates he himself preferred.

Many members of the Tammany Hall General Committee do not disguise their sentiments in regard to the ticket. Nicholas Muller, of the First Assembly District, who was a candidate for Coroner, openly declares that he had enough votes in the convention to nominate him, and would have been nominated if the votes had been fairly counted. To understand why Muller takes this position, it must be explained that when the Chairman of the Convention (Mr. Henry L. Clinton) called for the votes of the several districts and wards, the Chairmen of their districts or delegations announced the vote of each body. Muller claims that the Chairmen of some of the delegations did not give a correct account of all the votes cast for him, and that he was therefore defeated fraudulently. He threatens to resign from the Tammany organization in consequence.

William R. Roberts, whose friends were sanguine of his nomination for County Clerk, is also disappointed over his defeat by Gumbleton, and his followers, who are very numerous, would desert from the ranks of the "regular Democracy" to-morrow if he would say so. Alfred T. Ackert, of the Sixteenth Assembly District (Tilden's own district) said in front of the St. James Hotel last evening, that he considered the ticket nominated a weak one in some respects. He did not like the nomination of Croker for Coroner. Mr. Tracy, ex-Warden of Ludlow Street Jail, a member of the Tammany General Committee is much dissatisfied with the nomination of Bernard Reilly for Sheriff. He will probably support James O'Brien if the latter runs for that office. The friends of County Clerk Walsh are universally disgusted because he was not renominated. In the lower districts active Democrats are now eager to join with any opposition that will nominate the man of their choice. A local politician in the Fifth Assembly District said last evening that the only Democrats in his district who would vote the whole Tammany ticket were members of the Tammany Hall General Committee.

Among the candidates put forward by the opposition to Tammany Hall are the following: For Mayor, Andrew H. Green, Democrat; for Surrogate, William C. Traphagen, Democrat; for Sheriff, Jacob Hess, Republican; for County Clerk, Thomas Murphy, Republican; for Judge of the Superior Court, John J. O'Gorman, Democrat; for Judge of the Marine Court, Joseph Koen, Democrat.

Prominent Anti-Tammanyites, in speaking of the nomination of Mr. Green for Mayor, say that at this late stage of the local canvass they cannot afford to place any man in the field as their candidate of their own party for Mayor who is not well known by the people. Mr. Green, they say, has a public record which is unassailable, and, though he does not belong to the Anti-Tammany organization, his election with the aid of the German Democratic vote would, they say, be very probable. A conference to be held between organizations at present supporting Mr. Green and the Anti-Tammany Party to-day at Engineers' Hall, No. 30 West Twenty-third street, will probably develop something of a tangible shape in the Democratic opposition to Kelly's ticket, which is undoubtedly very formidable.

MR. HEWITT AT COOPER UNION.

The "fifth grand mass-meeting" at the Cooper Union last night, under the supervision of the Central Tilden and Hendricks Club, was one of the dullest, proslest, and most unenthusiastic political meetings ever held in New-York. There were people enough present of the regular Tammany stripe, but there were none of that class known as "prominent Democrats." The speakers were Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, E. S. Cleveland, of Connecticut, and a man named Flowers from Watertown. Wheeler H. Peckham presided, and prefaced his introduction of Mr. Hewitt with a violent tirade on the military order of President Grant. He said that order was an infamous challenge from the Executive Chamber to the people of this county. It was the business of New-York to answer in part this challenge, and to tell the anxious world, if by its consent, such a method of election as the Executive of the nation had proposed for South Carolina should prevail. Mr. Peckham fairly boiled with indignation as he discussed the instrument in which the President had declared his intention to maintain the Constitutional rights of the white and black Republicans of the South. It was a relief to the audience when he closed his address and introduced Mr. Hewit, whom he called "The pride of New-York." Mr. Hewitt came forward in response to the call of the Chairman, and as soon as the cheers and yells of the audience had subsided began his speech. It was nothing more than a long, rambling harangue in which the speaker arraigned the personal character and public career of Mr. James G. Blaine. Mr. Hewitt's address, when in type, if printed, would nearly cover a page of THE TIMES. Whatever may have been the merit of Mr. Hewitt's document, it certainly fell upon a most unappreciative audience. Hundreds left the hall before the close of its reading. After Mr. Hewitt came Mr. Cleveland, from the Nutmeg State. He was introduced as a man who had been eight years a Postmaster under the appointment of Abraham Lincoln, and that was the highest by the Republican Party as long as his conscience would allow him." He was now a Tilden and Hendricks man, believing that the election of these men was all that could save the country from political death. He made a grand effort. That fact was clearly evident from the quantity of perspiration he wiped off his forehead. But what he said or what he was trying to say was more than anybody could ascertain. The hall was nearly well thinned out by the time Mr. Cleveland finished, and there was some little consultation between Chairman Peckham and Hon. Mr. Englehardt, who acted as lieutenant of the mass-meeting, as to whether another speaker should be introduced. It was finally decided to run the risk of a short address from Mr. R. D. Flowers, whom Mr. Peckham introduced as "a strong young Democrat from Watertown." This Mr. Flowers had not spoken two dozen words before the remainder of the audience began to grow uneasy, and before he had delivered his exordium he had less than a thousand listeners. In contrast with the Republican meeting in Cooper Union last Monday night, and even in comparison with former Democratic meetings, last night's demonstration was a stupid failure.

BY MAIL AND TELEGRAPH.

A BRIDEGROOM SHOT.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat of Wednesday, says: "Yesterday morning Mr. Theodore Ahrens and Miss Bolte were married at the German Catholic Church in Florissant. As is well known, it was, in the long ago, customary among the Germans for the friends of the bride and groom to discharge fire-arms in honor of the occasion, and yesterday the usual custom was observed, but, unfortunately was attended with a serious accident. Just after the bridal party left the church, and the happy couple were riding by the grocery store of Charles Griese, the proprietor came rushing out in front of the store and began firing his revolver at a furious rate, and, being rather careless, one of the shots, after passing through the bride's wedding dress, struck the bridegroom on the calf of the leg, inflicting a painful though not dangerous wound. He was taken home and every attention possible was bestowed upon him, but up to the time the informant left the ball had not been extracted. The shot, of course, was not intentional."

A PERPETUAL PUBLIC CHARGE.

The Boston Transcript of Thursday says: "William N. Knowles, twenty-seven years old, has been in reformatory and charitable institutions all but two years and three days of his life. He was born on Deer Island and remained there until he was eight years old, when he was sent to Rainsford Island, where he was kept as a pauper for several years, and on being released remained in and about Boston for two years, but was finally sent to Deer Island again for some offence. On being discharged from the island a short time ago he started to visit his mother in Marwich, but while in Saudwich he was arrested on a charge of committing a felonious assault on a girl under ten years of age, and being convicted, he was sentenced to twenty years in the State Prison, and was brought to the institution on Tuesday."

GOOD FOR EVIL.

The Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard has the following: "There were a lot of Republican torches in the Democratic procession last evening. It happened in this wise: The Democrats being short of torches, applied to the Mollie Pitchers for the loan of theirs, and the request was readily granted. The Mollie Pitchers gave them three cheers, the Democrats returned the cheers. The account stands thus: The Democrats have stoned every Republican gathering in the city, with one exception, and the return made by the Republicans is the loan of torches to help out their own torchlight procession, which, of course, was not molested in any manner. This shows one difference between the two parties."

THE CAINHOY (S. C.) AFFAIR.

AN OFFICIAL REPORT BY THE UNITED STATES MARSHAL—THE TIMES' ACCOUNT VERIFIED IN EVERY PARTICULAR.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The following official report of R. M. Wallace, United States Marshal for South Carolina, addressed to Attorney General Taft, was among other papers on the condition of the South which were read at the Cabinet meeting to-day:

CHARLESTON, S. C., Oct 17, 1876.

Hon. A. Taft, Attorney General, Washington, D. C:

SIR: I have delayed giving you a report of the recent unfortunate political riot at a place near the town of Cainhoy, in this county, until I could get a correct statement of facts. It is one of the legitimate results of the intimidation policy, or Mississippi plan, adopted by the Democratic Party in opening their campaign for the purpose of breaking down the Republican majority in this State. The first meeting in the county at which the Democrats put their "shotgun" policy into practice took place over a month ago on Cooper River, some ten or twelve miles from the scene of the late riot. The Republicans had called a meeting, and the Democrats in the City chartered a steam-boat and took about one hundred and fifty well-armed men to the meeting. They formed their men in line near the stand and demanded that they should have half the time for their speakers. The Republicans did not relish this kind of "peaceful political discussion," but the request was backed up with 150 Winchester repeating rifles in the hands of men who knew how to use them, and they consented to a "division of time." Other meetings followed this with a similar display of arms, and in order to avoid a collision, which was imminent at each meeting, the Executive Committees of each party arranged to have a series of joint discussions, and agreed that their people should not come armed to the meetings. The discussions in the county had been going on with more or less bitterness and animosity, mainly growing out of the fact that the Democrats carried a large force of men from the city to every meeting, who irritated the Republicans by their violent denunciation of their leaders and their party. The meeting at Brick Church, near Cainhoy, was called by the Republicans, and was largely attended by the men who were present at the first meeting, and which the Democrats had entforced their demand to speak, but had attended none of the joint discussions, and many of them, being suspicions of the Democrats, carried such guns as each man had at his home, consisting of old muskets, shot-guns, and fowling-pieces; but no militia men attended with State arms and ammunition, as the Democrats claim, and the best evidence of that fact is that all of the dead men were shot with buckshot, and not with rifle balls. When these colored Republicans arrived at the place of meeting their leading men told them that they were violating an agreement by coming armed, and that they must deposit their arms at some place away from the grounds. The colored men complied with the request, and some guns, say fifteen, were placed in an old dilapidated building some fifty yards from the stand, and others were placed across a ravine in the woods. About one hundred and fifty Democrats accompanied their speakers from the city on a steam-boat, and soon appeared at the meeting. The first speaker was a Democrat, a candidate for Prosecuting Attorney of the circuit. He was heard through very patiently. He was followed by W. J. McKinley, (colored,) who was a delegate to the Cincinnati Convention from this State. Soon after McKinley commenced speaking a commotion was observed in the crowd on the side next to the dilapidated building, and McKinley jumped off the stand and said, "Those white men in that house have guns, and are going to shoot." The colored men raised a shout that the Democrats had seized their guns, and made a rush for the other guns. The white men, who had secretly slipped into the house and seized the guns, then fired, and the first shot killed a colored man about seventy years of age, who was standing leaning on a stick, and is the only colored man who is known to have been killed. The colored men returned with their guns very soon, attacked the party at the old house, and then commenced a general fire on the Democrats, who were generally armed with pistols, but were forced to retire rapidly toward the boat under a heavy fire. The colored men became furious when they saw that some of their arms had been seized and one of their old men killed. Sheriff Bowen, whom they recognized as their personal and political friend, rushed among them and tried to stop the firing, but they did not cease until all the white men were driven away from the church. Six white men were killed or have died, and one colored man. Several white men are wounded, but none seriously. It is not yet known how many negroes are hurt. As soon as the fight ceased the steam-boat returned to the city for arms and reinforcements, and over one hundred men went back on her on two hours' notice with arms for themselves and for their hundred men already there. The next morning about two hundred more armed men were up on the same boat, which had returned. These armed men were the military companies, or a portion of the companies, which Gov. Chamberlain ordered to disband two weeks ago. On the night of the riot I telegraphed to Sommerville, to the officer in command of the troops, for company to go to Cainhoy. He replied next morning that he had only one artillery company, which had no small arms. I then telegraphed to Gov. Chamberlain to know where I could get troops, and he referred it to Gen. Ruger, at Atlanta, who ordered a company from Columbia, which will arrive to-morrow morning, and I will proceed at once with them to Cainhoy. I will require the armed men there to disperse, and will see that no further rioting takes place. Very respectfully,

R. M. WALLACE,
United States Marshal.

MOVEMENTS OF TROOPS.

THE GOVERNOR'S ISLAND DETACHMENT ON THE WAY TO SOUTH CAROLINA.

RICHMOND, Oct. 20.—A detachment of United States troops from Governor's Island, New-York, numbering 170, composed of a battalion of the Third Artillery, and a part of the Eleventh and Twenty-third Infantry, and commanded by Col. L. L. Livingston, arrived here to-day on the way to Columbus, S. C. They were compelled to lay over on account of a delay at Wilmington, Del. Soon after their arrival a number of the Richmond military called on Col. Livingston and asked permission to entertain the men, which he deemed it expedient to deny, but expressed great pleasure at the compliment. Several officers, however, were entertained at the Exchange Hotel. The troops will leave here at 7 o'clock to-morrow morning, with eight other companies which will pass through at that time.

THE CABINET MEETING OF YESTERDAY.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 20.—The Cabinet was in session two hours to-day. The principal subjects of discussion were reports from officials of certain Southern States made to the Attorney General. A number of other matters of a routine character were also under discussion. Secretary Cameron was not present. The State and Interior Departments were represented by Messrs. Cadwallader and Gorham respectively.

TERRIBLE CRIME IN PENNSYLVANIA.

GLENLOCH, Oct. 20.—About 8:30 o'clock this morning a colored woman, the wife of Ira Baker, residing at this place, was seen running along the road in a frantic manner. When she reached the railroad station she stopped a moment, and volunteered the statement to a gentleman standing there that she had just killed her four children, and then resumed her journey. The gentleman then drove to the house, and not finding the husband at home hunted him up. The two then visited the house and found three children, aged respectively two, four, and six years, in an almost lifeless condition, their heads being beaten to a jelly with a heavy club. The baby, aged about two months, was found covered up with a heavy feather bed, the intention of the mother being to smother it. Fortunately it was rescued alive. Dr. Carly was immediately summoned, and Dr. Brinton, of West Chester, and other physicians are on their way to this place. The three children cannot possibly survive. The people are fully aroused and have gone in search of the murderess.

EQUALIZING FREIGHT RATES.

DETROIT, Oct. 20.—Representatives from all the leading Eastern and Western fast lines met here yesterday to perfect arrangements for equalizing rates. The Commercial Express, the Erie and North Shore, the Erie and Milwaukee, and the Diamond Lines, running over the Erie, Michigan Central, Detroit and Milwaukee, and Canada Roads, were consolidated, to be known hereafter as the Erie and North Shore Line. J. W. Smith, of Chicago, was appointed General Manager, with headquarters at Detroit. The diminution of branch offices located in different cities was decided on. It is rumored that a decided advance will be made in the uniform rates at to-day's meeting. It is also rumored that the lines running over the New-York Central Road will consolidate with the new organization.

An important meeting of the Union League Club will be held this evening, at which the more important issues of the campaign will be fully discussed. The Executive Committee have exteaded an invitation to Carl Schurz, who is expected to deliver an address.

The German Republican Association of the Eighth Assembly District met last evening and passed resolutions instructing the Executive Committee to recommend a nomination for the office of member of Assembly in the district.

An altercation occurred between two women last night in a disreputable house kept by a woman named Annie Smith, at No. 126 West Twenty-seventh street, during which one of the participants was struck with a wine-glass and severely injured on the head. Capt. Williams, hearing of the disturbance, visited the place and arrested eight women, including the proprietress.

GENERAL MISCELLANY.

THE EIGHTY-ONE-TON GUN.

ENGLAND'S EXPERIMENTS AT SHOEBURYNESS—THE FIRING OF A HEAVY GUN—AN INTERESTING ACCOUNT OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

The experiments in firing the 81-ton gun at Shoeburyness, England, were continued on the 3d inst. The charge of powder on this occasion was, as before, 370 pounds. The cartridge was in the silk bag, as before, with hollow tubing so constructed that the point of ignition should be in the centre of the powder, a contrivance—said not to be a new point—which, it is believed, gives the whole force of the powder to the projectile, instead of some being puffed out of the gun unburned. The first projectile fired was a shrapnel shell, with its powder chamber uncharged, weighted up to 1,740 pounds, and bearing a muzzle-loaded fuse, the blowing charge being four ounces of powder—just sufficient powder, in fact, to show whether the fuse would catch the flame. The loading by hand was displaced this time in favor of the loading by machinery, and some little time was spent over the loading. When the first shell was rammed home, it was found that a necessary part of the business had been overlooked, and the shell had to be drawn out. Such an occasion had been foreseen by a committee of so wide an experience as this, and then use had to be made of the instrument provided for the purpose—the instrument being one which, though constructed similar to the one in use for other guns, has an arrangement by which it can be disengaged from the head of the projectile while it is in the bore. The fuse having been adjusted, the projectile was again rammed home. Capt. Ellis, who commands the gun detachment, set the gun at 5° of elevation, and gave the signal to fire when the coast was clear. All who had the chance, from being on the seaside of the gun, ran on to the sands to watch the progress of the shell. The projectile could be both heard and seen. As the roar of the gun died away, the shell made its progress over the water with the sound of a continued peal of thunder in the distance, broken only at the intervals when it made each ricochet. The interval between its leaving the gun and its first blow on the water was 7.9 seconds. A doubt arose whether the fuse in this instance acted, some saying that there was a visible trace of powder, others inclining to the belief that the charge would have given more decided effects than a mere trial. It had been considered very probable that this shell, being dependent for its ignition upon the flame from the powder, would not ignite from the fact that the gas check, which is on the breech of the shell, would so spread out into the groove of the gun as to effectually keep back the flame. It was therefore determined to load the gun for the second shot with a shell bearing a breech-loaded fuse, and carrying its own ignition. This was fired, and the interval between the shell leaving the gun and first striking the ground was taken as 8.1 seconds; but in this, as in the other, the fuse was not seen to "blow." * * * * The next day the gun was run up by Sergt. Tristram's detachment as soon as the tide was in, and the gun was loaded with the 370 pounds of powder and a "live" shrapnel-shell, with a bursting charge of four pounds of powder, charged with 880 sand-shot and 1,083 four-ounce shot. The shell had a muzzle-loaded fuse—one which took its ignition from the flame of the gun—and a gas-check on the breech. When all was clear, Capt. Ellis gave the signal to fire, and the gun, which was elevated to 5°, exploded with what seemed a greater roar even than when charged with the uncharged shell. The projectile made a high trajectory, and burst well in the air at about 1,200 yards' distance, the time of the burst being 2.7 seconds after leaving the muzzle. The charge spread very well, and could be seen dropping for some moments; and when the shell and its contents had disappeared beneath the waves the sound of the burst came to the firing point. The second shot, it was arranged, should be fired at a lower degree of elevation, this time at 3°, with a like fuse to that in the first shot—namely, bored to six-tenths, in order that the burst should be nearer to the water. The loading was performed by hand, as far as the ramming home was concerned, the derrick of the loading-gear still being used to raise the powder and projectile to the mouth of the gun. The rails being split, the gun had now and then to be "started" with handspikes over the defective part of the line. The second shot was fired quickly after the first, and the projectile was seen making its way with a whistle clearly over the large expanse of waters, and when at about one thousand yards the burst was seen, the time being twenty-four seconds from the moment of the shell leaving the gun. The "scatter" of the shot was an interesting sight, and was pronounced by the artillerists to be most successful. The fall of the shots, nearly two thousand, could be distinctly seen, the places where the broken shell fell were marked by the heavier splashes. The shell had burst and the water was free from the splashes of shot for some moments before the sound of the shell's bursting came to the firing point, even though the wind was dead on shore. As the fire was one which depended upon the flame from the explosion for ignition, it established beyond doubt that the gas-checks on the breach of the projectiles do not effectually keep the shell from being enveloped in flame, as has been suggested by some would be the case. The gun was then loaded with the same quantity of powder, 370 pounds, and a "case shot" was the projectile. The case shot is loaded with sand shot, and the whole weighs about the same as the other projectiles, 1,760 pounds. One degree of elevation was given to the gun, the Union Jack was run to the masthead as a warning to all whom it might concern to keep out of danger, and the bugle sounded for the benefit of those on land. The signal to fire was followed by a very great double explosion—that of the gun appearing sharper than on any of the other occasions, and the water was first struck within a hundred yards of the muzzle, the shot spreading in a manner which would have completely cut up and destroyed a column of troops at there had been one in front at the time. The ricochet of the shot carried some of the missiles in the case to about one thousand yards. There were 1,874 eight-ounce shots and about three hundred small bullets in the case. The ricochet was seen spanning along the water, and pieces of the case would have added to the general destruction of any thing in front. It was intended to examine the interior of the gun with a machine to see if any part of the case had broken up inside the gun, but as there was prima facie evidence that this had not occurred, the committee contented themselves with an examination by Capt. O'Callaghan, who took a view with a mirror of the rifling. It was decided, for the satisfaction of the naval authorities, to fire one more case shot, this time at a degree higher of elevation, namely, 9°. The change of elevation was shown in the first graze being at a further distance, and the shot spread far and wide, as far as about one thousand eight hundred yards, considerably damaging a flock of gulls, some of whom were left dead upon the sands. The elevation throughout the day was taken with a tangent sight the ordinary way of laying a gun, and not by the quadrant from the trunnion axis."

REBEL CLAIMS.

ENORMOUS PAYMENTS TO BE DEMANDED IN CASE OF DEMOCRATIC SUCCESS.

In a speech in Pennsylvania Hon. Edward McPherson said:

"The Democratic Party, as now organized, is a perpetual menace to the country. As far back as 1873 the scheme was broached of claiming from the United States $400,000,000 in bonds of the United States in compensation for slaves emancipated. And no less conspicuous a person than Robert M. T. Hunter, of Virginia, wrote a letter Oct. 31, 1873, now in print, in which he points out a mode of avoiding the denying provision of the fourteenth amendment. He takes the ground that the claim of the late rebellion for compensation rests upon the alleged taking by the Government of that 'property' for public use; that the claim is of the individual owner; that the States, by

A REPUDIATING SOUTH.

FACTS FOR THE PEOPLE TO REMEMBER.

THE DEBTS OF THE STATES LATELY IN REBELLION, AND HOW THEY WERE CONTRACTED — REPUDIATION IN ALL BUT ONE—INTEREST ON STATE BONDS NOT PAID — DEMOCRATIC OFFICIALS OPENLY URGING REPUDIATION.

We published some time ago a letter from a correspondent in Alabama, giving an abstract of the report of the committee appointed by the Legislature of that State "to ascertain, adjust, and liquidate all claims against the State arising from bonds issued and indorsed in its name." That report showed, as we then stated, a deliberate purpose on the part of its authors to present, under the guise of a scheme of adjustment, a real plan for the repudiation of a large portion of the debt of that State. Alabama is not alone in that respect. A careful examination and analysis of the debts of the eleven States which made up the so-called Southern Confederacy reveals the fact of a similar scheme of repudiation in every one of them. We have taken the pains to collate the reports of the proper State officials, and below we give the results in each case, with a short history of the means resorted to in contracting these debts.

ALABAMA.

The total amount of the indebtedness of the State on the 22d of January, 1876, was reported as $30,837,563. Of this sum $2,810,670 was stated to be owing to the trust or school fund, and may be treated consequently as a nominal debt. The total indebtedness, therefore, in which the public are interested may be put at $27,236,893. Of this sum, $4,117,100 is what may be termed the ante-war debt, having been originally contracted as far back as the year 1840, and prior thereto, although a portion of this debt was subsequently renewed. The indebtedness created since the war, therefore, together with arrearages of interest, amounts to $23,109,793. In place of an indebtedness of $27,236,893, bearing interest at the rate of nearly eight per cent., the State proposes to substitute an indebtedness not exceeding $9,702,760, bearing interest for the first five years at a rate of about two per cent. annually, or about one-tenth of the rate accruing on the old indebtedness. It is not suggested or claimed in the report of the committee that any of the indebtedness originally created by the State was not for a good and valid consideration. The amount of the old debt as classified is as follows:

Class No. 1, (less trust funds)	$3,866,800
Class No. 2	1,156,000
Class No. 3	2,573,093
Class No. 4	14,641,000
Total	$27,236,893

On the consummation of the plan proposed the amount of indebtedness of each class will be as follows:

Class No. 1	$7,806,761
Class No. 2	596,000
Class No. 3	300 000
Class No. 4	1.000,000
Total	$9,702,761

In other words, the indebtedness of the State, amounting to $27,236,893, (not including the trust or school funds,) and bearing interest at the rate of about eight per cent., currency, is to be reduced to $9,702,761. The interest annually accruing on the old debt equaled about $2,173,151; on the new it will equal for the first five years $211,945, or only one-tenth that accruing on the old debt. Upon the sum of $7,806,761, however, no interest accrues during the current year, so that the total interest to be paid for 1876 equals only $55,800. The interest on the above sum for the first five years at two per cent. on all but $596,000—which is at five per cent.—equals $264,348, which is equal to the interest at seven per cent. on $3,700,000. In other words, the debt of the State, not including trust funds, is, for five years at least, reduced by its own independent act from $27,226,893, bearing a rate of interest equaling fully seven per cent. in coin, to about one-tenth of that sum, capitalizing the interest proposed to be paid at the rate of seven per cent. currency. No interest, however, is to be paid on the indebtedness shown in class 1 for 1876, so that the burden upon the Treasury the present year will be only about $55,800. The total revenues of the State for the current year are estimated at $1,040,000. The current expenses, not including interest, are estimated at $798,280, leaving an apparent balance of $241,720.

ARKANSAS.

We have been unable to obtain any report of the debt of Arkansas since Oct. 1, 1874, at which time it amounted to $12,108,247. This debt was made up as follows:

Old State debt	$2,434,719
Old State debt refunded	3,050,000
For railroads	5,350,000
Deficiency bonds	300,000
Accrued interest, &c	973,528
Total debt	$12,108,247

Of this debt nearly one-half, or $5,484,719, probably belongs to the period prior to the war, and the series of bonds issued since the close of the war were for the purpose of providing for that indebtedness. Under the $5,350,000 issued in aid of railroads, some 450 miles of road have been constructed and are now in operation. The bonds were largely sold, and at good prices, in the Northern and European markets. At the time of their issue the State had almost entirely recovered from the disasters of the war. Its wealth and population were largely increasing, as is shown by the fact that, while the valuation for 1870-71 was $94,528,843, that for 1872-3 was $104,972,329, an increase of over seven per cent. in two years. Indeed, the valuation of real estate was greater than in 1863, prior to the war, and the year of great prosperity. Like many of those built during the same period, the railroads proved unproductive; and the Legislature of 1875, after reciting in a series of preambles that "the government of the State had been taken from the hands of the people and placed under the control of alien adventurers," and that "during the reign of these men there was collected in taxes from the people $6,674,511 in six years, but feeling faith in our resources, and knowing it to be the wish of the people to do all in their power to discharge their liabilities," they resolved "that the State Board of Finance be and is hereby authorized and directed to correspond with the holders of the outstanding bonds of the State, or, at their discretion, at such time and place and upon such notice as they may elect, to call a convention of the bondholders of the State to meet them for the purpose of discussing the questions involved, with a view of procuring uniform action by those interested; with a view to effecting a consolidation and settlement of all just debts on a basis that will be satisfactory to the people and within their ability to pay." This is an improvement on Falstaff's royal command, "Every pint pot shall hold a quart;" for it provides that after the contents of the aforesaid quart of sack are swallowed the drinker need not pay even for a pint or a gill, but may invite the landlord to discuss the question of payment on a basis satisfactory to the drinker! In February, 1874, the State Treasurer wrote that he had intended, in July, 1873, having the money on hand for the purpose, to pay the interest due the previous January, but that the Supreme Court of the State had decided that the "taxes collected for that purpose must remain in the Treasury until the Legislature again assembles." Payment on the interest of other bonds was stopped by injunction. The Legislature assembled in January, 1873, and with the result stated above. The annual interest on the $3,050,000 funding bonds amounts to $183,000, and on the $5,350,000 railroad bonds to $371,500, a total of $554,500 a year—being less than one-half of one per cent. on the valuation—and this for a State in which more than a million a year was raised for six consecutive years in taxes. The claim that the bonds were issued "by alien adventurers" is too preposterous to claim a moment's notice, except as showing the disposition of the Government at that time. All the questions involved had long before been settled by the United States Government in all its branches, legislative, executive, and judicial. There would be just as much ground for Massachusetts repudiating the debt contracted for the Hoosac Tunnel. One is equally binding with the other, and both would deserve only the contempt of every honest man.

FLORIDA.

The recognized debt of Florida amounted on the 31st of December, 1875, to $1,195,320. But, in addition to this, the State had issued in 1870 bonds to the amount of $4,000,000 in aid of the Jacksonville, Pensacola and Mobile Railroad, on which it has paid no interest for years. On some trifling technical point the question of the validity of the issue was raised, after the bonds had all been disposed of, the proceeds expended, and 179 miles of railroad built, and it is understood that the Supreme Court of the State has declared the issue of the bonds unconstitutional. The annual interest on these bonds amounts to $320,000. The valuation of the State is $35,000,000. The loss to the State from the war was comparatively small, and its growth in population since has been large and steady. The valuation of real estate in 1860 was $21,722,810, and in 1870 $20,197,691. The repudiation of the debt was not an act of legislation, but of the Courts, and on a technical ground entirely.

GEORGIA.

Georgia was once called the Empire State of the South. Its extent, climate, variety of productions, extent of manufactures, and internal improvements rendered the title a fitting one. It had, in 1860, 1,420 miles of railroads, a mileage greater than that of any other Southern State. The State also owns the Western and Atlantic Railroad, from which it derives an income of $300,000 per year At the close of 1875 there were 2,264 miles of railroad in operation, 760 of which were built between 1866 and 1872. With the restoration of peace came the renewal of the ambition to keep Georgia in the front rank of the Southern States, and accordingly the State made provision for the issue of a considerable amount of bonds in aid of railroads, and for indorsements of the bonds of several companies. The State bonds so issued or indorsed amounted to $12,453,000, of which the State has repudiated $10,035.000 on one pretext or another, notwithstanding the fact that a portion of this debt was declared valid by successive Legislatures, and that by means thereof 760 miles of railroad were built, and the value of taxable property increased $30,000,000 a year. No sufficient reason is assigned why these bonds are repudiated. In some cases a pretext is found in the language of the act, although the issue was confirmed by subsequent legislation, but in each case the money was had and expended, and the State received the benefit of it before the discovery of the invalidity was made. A singular circumstance connected with this repudiation is the fact that a portion of the bonds authorized to be issued are declared valid, and others, issued by the same authority, under the same act, and signed by the same officials, are declared invalid. On what principle this distinction is made does not appear. The State has taken possession of some of the railroads to which its aid was granted. The Governor, in his Message of Jan. 13, 1875, uses the following language: "I respectfully suggest the propriety of authorizing the issue of an amount of State bonds sufficient to redeem the bonds of the companies on which the State is liable. In settling the details of such an arrangement a material benefit might be secured for the State without doing any injustice whatever to the holders of the bonds." That is to say, the State can issue its bonds, then, when they have depreciated through failure to pay the interest thereon, and exchange them for other bonds at the depreciated rate "without doing any injustice whatever to the holders of the bonds." This is a lesson in financial morals from the "solid" State of Georgia, the Empire State of the South.

LOUISIANA.

In this State default has been made on the interest of ever twenty million dollars of bonds, of which $15,346,000 were for internal improvements in the way of canals, levees, and railroads. Of these $2,500,000 have been declared void. The lawless condition of things in the State is too well known to require further notice. The present State Government have reduced the expenditures, as compared with the previous year, over four hundred thousand dollars, and the rate of taxation twelve mills, or from fifty-one and a half to thirty-nine and a half, besides making a reduction in the debt of over one million three hundred thousand dollars. The expenditures for levees, amounting to $7,952,000, were for the purpose of reclaiming and securing the rich lands bordering on the Mississippi River, all the former levees having been destroyed during the war. The benefit of these expenditures was felt by every land-owner in the State; indeed, without them a large part of the State would be utterly unproductive. To repudiate such a debt is equivalent to repudiating the payments due on one's farm. The value of the land is created by the levee. To do justice to this State it must be said that some effort seems to be made to settle with its creditors on some terms approaching justice. The Governor, in his Message of 1875, says: "When the present State Government came into office, the public debt, contracted by previous Democratic and Republican Legislatures, was confessedly out of all proportion to the resources of the State, and the incoming administration had to face the alternative of repudiation or compromise with the creditors of the State. The advice of the Chamber of Commerce and leading business men was asked and obtained; and the State, anxious to pay its just creditors to the utmost limit of its capacity, fixed the rate of funding at ten per cent. higher than the limit which experienced financiers, who had examined into our resources, deemed the State able to pay." Accordingly, a constitutional amendment was adopted limiting the debt to $15,000,000, and prohibiting the issue of warrants beyond the amount in the Treasury at the time.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The debt of this State is divided by its officers into six classes:

1. Old or ante-war bonds	$8,378,200
Accrued interest	3,498.890
Total	$11,877,090
2. Bonds issued since the war under acts prior thereto	$2,207,000
Accrued interest	791,910
Total	$3,088,910
3. Bonds issued during the war	$1,128.000
Accrued interest	586,590
Total	$1,714,590
4. Bonds for funding interest	$4,120.100
Accrued interest	1,484.040
Total	$5,604 140
5. Internal improvement bonds	$1,622.045
Accrued interest	577,158
Total	$2,199,203
6. Special tax bonds	$11,407,000
Accrued interest	3,528.930
Total	$14,935,930

Total of all classes of bonds and accrued interest, $33,921,843, or, deducting special tax bonds, $23,985,918. The State has flatly repudiated, in terms, the special tax bonds. As to the rest, it has practically repudiated them by refusing to pay interest thereon. Whatever may be said or thought concerning the special tax bonds, there can be no question as to the binding validity of the first two classes, which now amount to more than fifteen million dollars. They were issued long before the title "carpet-baggers" was known. Besides, the State of North Carolina has never been in any way under the control of carpet-baggers. Its legislators and State officials have all been natives, or long-time residents, of the State. And as to the justice of the issue of the special tax bonds, Mr. August Belmont, late Chairman of the National Democratic Committee, has such faith in their validity and the obligation of the State to pay them, that he commenced suit against the Auditor to compel the payment of interest by mandamus, and had the suit transferred to the United States Court on the ground that justice could not be had in the State court, "by reason of prejudice or local influence." Such a suit seemed to the State Treasurer "a monstrous iniquity;", and he administers to the ex-Chairman of the Democratic National Committee this rebuke for his violation of one of the fundamental articles of the Democratic faith: "It seems to me impossible, when our forefathers incorporated in the Constitution of the United States a prohibition against the suing of a sovereign State, except with our own consent, that this provision can be easily invaded to the sure destruction of the rights of the States." The reason given by the State Treasurer for the failure to recommend any steps looking toward the payment of the interest on the bonds whose validity is acknowledged, is that he sees "great difficulties in the way of the adjustment of even the honest debt while this and similar suits are unsettled." To put it in other language, you should not pay your honest debts if your creditor has sued you for a disputed claim. And the Governor joins the Treasurer in his lament. "The people," he says, "cannot pay the annual interest on the entire debt." But he is hopeful, and he does not insult the creditors of the State, as the Alabama committee did. He urges the Legislature to provide for a settlement of the debt, "because it is filled with the fate of future consequences which may ultimately redound to the honor and good name or the shame and humiliation of the State." Like the debt in all the other South. ern States, this was contracted to aid internal improvements, chiefly railroads. Since the close of the war nearly six hundred miles of railroad have been built in that State, none of which would have been constructed except for the aid of the State. And in regard to the railroads built before that time the same is true. They all shared in the receipts of the State bonds. The result of the investment was unfortunate. In the language of the State Treasurer: "The State has nothing to show for it except whatever general increase of property has been made by the partial construction of the works."

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The greater portion of the direct debt of South Carolina properly belongs to the period long anterior to the war. Of the $7,674,704 75 due Oct. 1, 1875, $6,391,201 81 was either bonds and stocks issued prior to 1864, or in exchange of such bonds and for past due interest on the same. In addition, there are contingent liabilities for indorsements of railroad bonds amounting to $4,797,608 20, secured by a first mortgage on the roads themselves. The net earnings of these roads exceed $700,000, more than enough to pay the interest due on the bonds. The debt was at one time, in 1873, considerably in excess of the present amount; but a compromise was effected with the holders of certain classes of bonds which it was claimed were illegally issued, resulting in a reduction to the amount above stated. In addition to the contingent debt above stated, there were issued $963,000 of State bond, in aid of the Blue Ridge Railroad, all of which has proved unproductive. This issue was all made in 1854. The interest on the debt of South Carolina was paid in January, 1875, and the State has since failed to make paymont. The valuation has increased from $141,624,952 in 1874, to $145,143.023 in 1875, and the rate of taxation reduced from 10.4 mills to 10.2 mills. There can be no doubt that there was at one time great recklessness in the management of the South Carolina Treasury, but during the last two years there has been a decided improvement.

TENNESSEE.

The entire debt of Tennessee, which at one time amounted to $38,945,852, grew out of the issue of bonds in aid of railroads, of which there are 1,630 miles in the State, with the exception of $1,000,000 of bank stock, $706,000 for State Capitol and purchase of Hermitage, and $1,803,357 for miscellaneous purposes. On more than $15,000,000 of the bonds the roads paid the interest, and the value to the State on the additional $21,000,000 was estimated at fifty cents on the dollar in 1871, leaving as the real burden to the State the interest on some $10,000,000. This interest was paid until 1870, when, by a change of administration, the taxes were reduced from more than $1,500.000 to some $500,000, and then made payable in the depreciated notes of the State Bank. The following year the tax was a little over $800,000. The debt was largely reduced by the operations of an act passed in 1870, authorizing the various railroad companies to discharge their indebtedness in State bonds at par. In this way the debt was reduced Jan. 1, 1873, to $20,966,382, and the interest due July, 1874, and a portion of that due January, 1875, was paid, but has since remained in default. This State is another instance of the dependence which can be placed on the Government when once it comes under the control of those men who plunged the nation in the war of the rebellion. Although the acts of its Legislature from 1866 to 1869, under the rule of the Union men of the State may not always have been the wisest, they honestly kept faith with the holders of the State securities. The moment the adverse party came into power they reduced the taxation, as above shown, and have not since made any strenuous effort to restore the lost credit. The resources and wealth of the State are unsurpassed, and only such an administration as has had the effect to check immigration and prevent investments and enterprise has kept it from becoming one of the richest and most populous States in the Union. The interest on the present debt amounts to $430,654, and the valuation for 1875 was $340,000,000, including $51,000,000 of railroad property. The rate of taxation needful to cover all expenses of every kind is less than eight mills, but with a fatuity that seems incredible, the amount is fixed at only four mills, with a consequent deficit of something like $1,000,000 a year.

TEXAS.

The funded debt of Texas is comparatively small, and the interest is promptly paid. During the last few years the wealth and population of the State have largely increased, owing to the extension of railroads, most of which have been built without State aid.

VIRGINIA.

"Last scene of all that ends this strange, eventful history" is the great State of Virginia—Mother of Presidents, cradle and home of statesmen, &c. The debt of this State amounts to over forty-eight millions of dollars, and no interest has been paid thereon since July, 1874, when two per cent. of the interest falling due the previous January was paid. The annual interest, now increasing the debt by the same amount yearly, is nearly one million of dollars. By far the greater part of this debt was created long prior to the war, and in aid of internal improvements in the State. Of the total debt $34,653,578 is the ante-war debt, and $7,692,310 was created since to pay the accrued interest on the old debt. In the creation of this debt Virginia took substantially the same course with New-York in the creation of its canal debt. The scheme of uniting the Ohio and the James Rivers by canal was for years a favorite one with the State, and a large amount of money was expended in carrying it out. Moreover, more than ten million dollars was subscribed outright for railroads, of which there are nearly seventeen hundred miles in the State, of which more than one thousand miles were built by State aid. It is needless to repeat what has already been said about the advantage which these roads have been to the Commonwealth. Whatever of prosperity it has had is due to them. The State of Virginia has never been under Republican rule, certainly never under so-called "carpet-bag" government. It has always prided itself on its political and financial integrity. Its resources of every kind are unsurpassed. Yet to-day it silently and sullenly marches under the flag and keeps step to the discord of repudiation. More than any other State it has been honored and caressed by the General Government. Beyond any other it seems to have accepted the degrading policy of absolute indifference to its plighted faith.

SUMMARY.

Every one of the States which attempted to establish the Southern Confederacy in 1861, except Texas, is to-day a defaulter on its bonds. In every one of them the bonds were mainly issued for internal improvements; they mostly were sold for fair value—scarcely any at such discount as the United States were subjected to in disposing of their bonds—and the money expended for the purposes for which the bonds were issued, if not always wisely, or honestly at least, with as much wisdom and honesty as is usual under such circumstances. By the aid of the money so obtained from our Northern capitalists, over six thousand miles of railroad have been built and are to-day doing their part toward the development of those States. In no one of these States is the rate of taxation excessive or the valuation extravagant. Crops have been good, and the general condition of things has been prosperous. The amount of valuation, debt, &c., is as follows:

	Assessed Valuation.	Debt.	Ratio Debt to Val'n.	Debt per Capita
Alabama	$148,000,000	$30,000,000	$20.27	$28.54
Arkansas	105,000,000	12,000,000	11.43	20.90
Florida	37,000,000	5,500,000	14.86	23.90
Georgia	275,000,000	23,000,000	8.36	18.04
Louisiana	200,000,000	22,000,000	11.00	28.02
Mississippi	158,000,000	.....	.....	.....
No. Carolina	125,000,000	39,000,000	31.20	34.15
So. Carolina	177,000,000	13,000,000	9.09	18.00
Tennessee	290,000,000	23,000,000	7.93	17.00
Texas	223,000,000	5,000,000	2.25	4.17
Virginia	330,000,000	47,500,000	14.40	37.70
Total	$2,068,000,000	$220,000,000	$10.81	$20.00

The annual interest on this debt is in the neighborhood of $14,000,000, which would give as a rate of taxation for interest alone $7 on $1,000, a rate by no means excessive or beyond the power of any ordinarily prosperous community to pay. The total population of these States is not less than 10,500,000, so that the debt per capita is $20.

The debt of New-York City is over $132,000,000, the tax-rate 2.9 per cent., or nearly four times the rate of the combined Southern States; and $126 per capita, or more than six times that of the eleven States mentioned. Compared with North Carolina, it will be seen that that State has a larger population than New-York City, while its debt is not one-third so great. The debt of New-York has increased with far greater rapidity than that of North Carolina, and by means of frauds far more flagrant than were ever asserted concerning that State. The existence of such shameless as were the crimes committed by the leaders of the Democratic Party in this City, where is there a citizen—much less a public officer—who dares even to hint at the repudiation of the debt? Yet as long ago as 1873, the Treasurer of North Carolina declared in his report: "Already the policy of repudiation is advocated by men of influence, and there is danger that it will become popular." And in 1874 he went so far as to proclaim: "The payment of all this debt would be a monstrous iniquity."

It will be seen that nearly every one of the States which attempted to establish a confederacy has defaulted on the payment on the interest of its debt; and that in most of them such a proceeding is justified by the leading State officials. In each of these States the debts were contracted chiefly for railroads, or other internal improvements. There are in operation in those States to-day 15,000 miles of railroad, the greater portion of which would never have been built but for the money contributed to their construction, in the purchase of State bonds, by persons who had confidence in their integrity and capacity. The benefits are reaped by the people, who now refuse to levy taxes to meet the debt which they voluntarily contracted. Let a united South once more come into power in the national councils in the person of Mr. Tilden and his fellow Democrats, and how long before they would find concerning our national debt, as they have found in Alabama concerning its State debt, that "sagacious capitalists must have foreseen that the State would not be able to protect its indorsement and that they would not have expected the tax-payers to contribute a sufficient amount of revenue to pay their obligations;" or, as in North Carolina, that the idea "that the State shall pay their bonds in full cannot be entertained for a moment!" This is a question which goes at once to the issue of the present campaign. On its answer depends the maintenance or the repudiation of our national debt, and so of our national existence.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

COLUMBIA'S NEW BOAT-HOUSE.

FORMAL OPENING OF THE EDIFICE—FOUR WELL-CONTESTED RACES—DANCING IN THE EVENING.

The new boat-house of Columbia College, situated on the Westchester shore of the Harlem River, just above the Fourth avenue railroad bridge, which has just been completed at a cost of $10,000, was formally opened yesterday. The completion and opening of the house was celebrated with a regatta in the afternoon, and by dancing in the evening. A very large number of students were present with their friends. The house itself is a very fine building, and is stated to be the finest college boat-house in the country, excepting, perhaps, that of Yale. It has two floors, the lower devoted to the boats of the college and the upper to a reception and dressing room. In the reception-room there is painted over the main door a picture of Saratoga Lake on the day of the college regatta of 1874. Thirteen college boats are shown, all being held at the start. The entire building yesterday was decorated with blue and white flags. The exercises of the day consisted of four well-contested races, the distance in each being one mile, in which Mr. Lindsay Watson, of the Nassau Boat Club, acted as Referee, and Mr. Henry Mills, of the Gramercy Club, as time-keeper. The first event was a four-oared shell race, with the following entries: Blue and White—P. Seeley, bow; R. Colgate, No. 2; C. S. Boyd, No. 3; E. E. Sage, stroke. Graduates—L. A. Sprague, bow; J. Griswold, No. 2; P. Simpson, No. 3; J. T. Goodwin, stroke. Seniors—F. D. Weeks, bow; M. Mitchell, No. 2; M. Ward, No. 3; H. P. Brown, stroke. Goodwin took the lead on the start, Brown following in second place, lapped by Sage. These positions were held for a third of a mile, when Sage went to the front and won by a length and a half in 5m. 34s. The Graduates were second, in 5m. 44s., and the Seniors third, in 5m. 49s. The second race was also for four-oared shells, with crews as follows: P. Timpson, bow; R. Colgate, No. 2; J. G. Murphy, No. 3; P. Seeley, stroke. E. E. Sage, bow; J. Griswold, No. 2; C. S. Boyd, No. 3; J. T. Goodwin, stroke. F. D. Weeks, bow; M. Mitchell, No. 2; M. Ward, No. 3; H. P. Brown, stroke. Goodwin's crew—the Centennial crew—gave the other two crews ten seconds start. At the start Seeley took the lead, closely followed by Brown. Goodwin was unable to catch Seeley, although he passed Brown. Seeley won in 5m. 24½s.; Goodwin, 5m. 29½s.; Brown, 5m. 38s. The third race was for single sculls. The contestants were E. H. Snyder, Class of '80; W. H. Brown, '79, and H. Cushman, '78. Brown led from the start, pulling a long and slow but powerful stroke, leaving the others far in the rear. Brown made the mile in 7m. 51½. Snyder following eleven seconds afterward. Cushman's time was 8m. 15s. The last race was between six-oared shells, the crews being selected from the college and the School of Mines as follows: College—Sprague, bow; Eldridge, No. 2; Brown, No. 3; Colgate, No. 4; Griswold, No. 5; Goodwin, stroke. School of Mines—Seeley, bow; Newberry, No. 2; Murphy, No. 3; Boyd, No. 4; Royd, No. 5; E. E. Sage, stroke. From the start the race belonged to the college six, who rowed in much better form and swing than their opponents. They led all the way, giving the wash to Sage, and embarrassing him greatly by taking his water and holding it, although but a short distance ahead. The college six won by three lengths in 5m. 20s., the six from the School of Mines crossing the finish eleven seconds later. The regatta was in every way a success, and the day was closed by dancing in the evening at the club-house.

CONVICTION OF A "STRAW BAIL" MAN.

The trial of John Volz, the veteran "straw bail" man, was begun yesterday in the United States Circuit Court, Criminal Branch, before Judge Benedict. It was charged that the accused perjured himself in going bail for Sherdon P. Somerville, arrested in this City some time ago for alleged connection with the Washington safe burglary. In April last he swore before United States Commissioner Osborn that he was the owner of certain property, afterward found to be recorded in the name of another person. Mr. Somerville yesterday appeared as counsel for Volz, and at once made a motion to quash the indictment, claiming that as the person for whom Volz went bail was indicted in the District of Columbia, the United States District Judge was the only person competent to determine the sufficiency of the accused as a bondsman, and that above all the Commissioner was not a proper person to administer an oath preliminary to the execution of a bond of recognizance. The motion to quash was denied by Judge Benedict, who remarked that if the prisoner was found guilty, a remedy could be had on a motion for a new trial subsequent. The trial then proceeded, and at its conclusion the jury, after an absence of about five minutes, returned a verdict of guilty as charged. The accused was remanded for sentence.

NATURALIZATION STATISTICS.

The number of aliens who have had certificates of naturalization issued to them since committees to take charge of this work were appointed by the two political parties, amounts in all to 6,275. These certificates have been issued by the various State and United States Courts as follows: Court of Common Pleas, Judge Robinson, 3,100; Superior Court, (estimate,) 2,500; United States District Court, 475; United States Circuit Court, 200. The latter court has been receiving applications for papers only during the past five days. The approximate number of certificates of naturalization issued on soldiers' discharge papers is 77. The naturalization records of the courts are not yet in such shape that the nationalities of the newly-made citizens can be ascertained; but from those of the Superior Court the following figures have been taken on this subject: Irish, 850; German, 1,110; Russians, 100; Polish, 95. Scotch, English, French, and other nationalities appear on the records of this court, but the applicants were few. One Mexican, several Chinese and Japanese, and five persons who are described as "Turkish," were among the numbers absorbed into the governing class of the Republic.

ANOTHER MOCK AUCTION HORSE SALE.

William B. Nelson, whose connection with the mock auction horse sales has been exposed in THE TIMES, advertised a sale yesterday at No. 11 West Twenty-seventh street, of all the valuable, high-bred, fast-trotting, road, track, saddle, and family horses, together with the elegant top wagons, pony phaetons, harness, &c., the property of a private gentleman who retires from the road on account of ill health. Brown Dick, Bay Prince, Harry Lamoert, Lady Bashaw, and Fred were the names given to the horses, and they had an excellent record of performances and pedigree attached to the notice of sale. The sale, it it may be called such, lasted about half an hour, and it is a remarkable fact that there were no persons present except the hangers-on. Two wagons and three horses were knocked down to the "cappers," and then the auctioneer adjourned the sale.

BOARD OF APPORTIONMENT.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment held a brief session yesterday. Controller Green offered a resolution, which was adopted, authorizing the issue of bonds to the amount of $75,000 to pay judgments against the City. The Controller also offered a resolution directing Col. Thomas Dunlap, the Commissioner of Jurors, to furnish to the board immediately a list of the clerks employed in his office, with their yearly compensation, and also the amount of fines and fees received by him since his accession to the office. The resolution was adopted. Commissioner Campbell sent in a requisition for a transfer of $20,000 to the fund for street improvements, which was granted. An application from the Fire Department for an appropriation to purchase 20,000 feet of hose was referred to the Controller. The board then adjourned until Monday at 11 o'clock, when the estimates for 1877 will be taken up.

THE WASTE OF CROTON WATER.

The following general order was issued by Superintendent Walling to the Police Captains yesterday:

By request of the Commissioner of Public Works you will notify residents and persons doing business in your precinct that owing to the limited supply of Croton water the strictest necessary to use every precaution to prevent any waste thereof. In many saloons water is running continually through the fountains or boxes kept behind the bars for washing glasses, and there are also many urinals where the water is kept running day and night. You will in all cases direct a discontinuance of this waste, and in case of refusal or neglect to comply you will notify the parties that the water will be shut off altogether from the premises. In all cases after notice has been given and the parties fail to comply you will report the fact of such neglect to the Department of Public Works, giving name and location.

THE WEST INDIA HURRICANE.

Dr. Penrod, the signal service observer at this station, reports that the hurricane which prevailed in Cuba on the 18th inst. has made its parabolic curve, passed over Florida, and is now central off the Georgia and South Carolina coasts, and moving south-eastward along the coast. Danger signals were displayed at this station at 7 o'clock last evening.

STOLEN PROPERTY RECOVERED.

Two boys, named John Callahan, of No. 146 Leroy street, and James Murphy, of No. 96 King street, entered the soap factory of Welsh, Holmes & Clark, No. 149 Barrow street, yesterday afternoon, and offered for sale a large quantity of sperm wax, of which they had with them several cakes as samples. Suspecting that the property had been stolen, the firm notified Detective O'Neil, of the Ninth Precinct, who, when the boys left the place, followed them to Pier 49 North River. When he arrived there he found that the boys had already been arrested by Sergt. Thompson and Roundsman Buckley, of the steam-boat squad, who found them under the pier with a small boat containing 600 pounds of wax, valued at $1,000. The boys were locked up at Police Head-quarters, and the wax is now at the Central Office awaiting a claimant.

FRAUDULENT NATURALIZATION.

HOW A TAMMANY SUPERVISOR OBTAINED CITIZENS' PAPERS—HE IS ARRESTED BY A DEPUTY MARSHAL.

The arrests for alleged fraudulent naturalization continue, and those of yesterday were of more importance than any that have yet been made. The principal one was that of John McSorley, a Democratic Supervisor of Election in one of the up-town districts. He is said to be one of a gang of six or eight working in the interest of Tammany Hall, and doing the most work in the State courts, and beyond this, he is quoted as one of Alderman Sauer's gang, having their head-quarters at Fourth avenue and Twenty-sixth street. McSorley is accredited with taking contracts to supply naturalization papers to persons whose scruples will not permit them to take oath before a Judge, and he has been caught in this business. McSorley has been a citizen of this country for several years, yet on the 17th inst. he appeared before the Court of Common Pleas, and made application for papers in the name of Michael Murphy. Henry Schroder, alias Stahrling, appeared as his witness, and the papers were granted, and they were afterward given—probably sold—to a person of that name who has not yet been found. This operation was watched by Deputy United States Marshals Crowley and Denbest, and both parties were yesterday arrested and held by United States Commissioner Shields for examination. McSorley, despite his application for papers on the 17th inst., under the name of Murphy, attended to his duties as supervisor on the following day.

Marshal Crowley also arrested yesterday James McManus and Barney McDonald for connection with alleged naturalization frauds. McManus is the President of the Fourteenth Assembly District Tilden and Hendricks Club, and McDonald Secretary. McManus is Vice President of another club and McDonald Sergeant at Arms. The former, who is said to be a deserter from the United States Marine Corps, had two Tammany Hall naturalization tickets in his pocket, one signed by John Tyler Kelly, the Mayor's Marshal, and the other by Coroner Woltman. Both, it is alleged, have been witnesses in the registration of persons living outside of the City. One named Riley, living in Jersey City, has already been arrested, and another will probably be taken into custody to-day. McManus and McDonald were held for examination next Monday.

MARRIED OR NOT MARRIED.

THE FREAKS OF A CONSTABLE IN JERSEY CITY—HE MARRIES "IN FUN" AND IS SUBSEQUENTLY CONFRONTED BY A FORMER WIFE.

Constable Andrew Love, of Jersey City, on Wednesday wedded in fun in Justice Garrick's office, on Washington street, a young girl of prepossessing appearance, named Mollie Wilson. The young lady was surprised when told that the marriage was a legal one in every respect and that she would have to abide by the consequences. She went to Counsellor Daley's office to learn the legal status of her case. He repeated to her what the Justice already told her, that she was legally married. Her parents are much incensed at the joke, and now want Love to make good his marriage by living with their daughter, in which case they offer to settle some property upon them. Love said he was willing. Miss Wilson, or Mrs. Love, flutters between hope and fear, and evidently hopes she is married, while she fears that she is not. Some of her friends have advised her to apply for a divorce, but she hesitated to take this course. She professes, and so does Love, that they were married only in fun. Love made Miss Wilson's acquaintance in Justice Garrick's office several days before in connection with a case in which Miss Wilson is plaintiff, and in which he had served the papers. On Wednesday they met in the office and began a flirtation, during which Love suggested that they should get married, with the results above stated. Yesterday morning a young and pretty woman, neatly dressed, stepped into Justice Garrick's office, and inquired it what she had heard of Love's marriage was true, or if it was only a joke. The Justice replied that the marriage was a legal one. She then stated that she had married Love in Williamsburg on Christmas Day, 1873, and he lived with her until April, 1875. They had two children, one of whom died. The trial then proceeded, and at its conclusion the jury, after an absence of about five minutes, returned a verdict of guilty as charged. The accused was remanded for sentence.

NATURALIZATION STATISTICS.

The number of aliens who have had certificates of naturalization issued to them since committees to take charge of this work were appointed by the two political parties, amounts in all to 6,275. These certificates have been issued by the various State and United States Courts as follows: Court of Common Pleas, Judge Robinson, 3,100; Superior Court, (estimate,) 2,500; United States District Court, 475; United States Circuit Court, 200. The latter court has been receiving applications for papers only during the past five days. The approximate number of certificates of naturalization issued on soldiers' discharge papers is 77. The naturalization records of the courts are not yet in such shape that the nationalities of the newly-made citizens can be ascertained; but from those of the Superior Court the following figures have been taken on this subject: Irish, 850; German, 1,110; Russians, 100; Polish, 95. Scotch, English, French, and other nationalities appear on the records of this court, but the applicants were few. One Mexican, several Chinese and Japanese, and five persons who are described as "Turkish," were among the numbers absorbed into the governing class of the Republic.

ARRIVALS AT THE HOTELS.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, of Georgia, is at the New-York Hotel.

Congressman John L. Vance, of Ohio, is at the Albemarle Hotel.

Rev. Dr. R. B. Fairbairn, of St. Stephen's College, is at the St. James Hotel.

OBITUARY.

Mr. Louis Fellowe, a member of the New-York Bar, died on Wednesday last of typhoid pneumonia. Mr. Fellows was a graduate of the College of the City of New-York and of the Columbia College Law School, and having since his admission to the bar devoted himself with great earnestness to the practice of his profession, especially to the branch of real-estate law, had gained the respect and confidence of his brethren, and gave promise of future eminence. His sudden and untimely death has caused profound sorrow, not only to his family and numerous relatives, but to a wide circle of friends, to whom his generous nature and his frank, genial manners had endeared him.

MUNICIPAL NOTES.

The Board of Aldermen will meet to-day to transact unfinished business. It is understood that the resolutions of Mr. Morris, presented on Thursday, in relation to securing a proper supply of Croton water for this City, will come up for discussion.

Brooklyn Republicans would do well to remember that the last opportunity for registration in that city will be afforded on Monday. The places of registry will be open from 8 to 11 A. M., and from 4 to 11 P. M. No Republican can afford to throw away his vote by neglecting to register on Monday.

We present in another column a valuable contribution toward the elucidation of the details of Mr. Tilden's income. The writer of this communication is an ex-Director of the Chicago and North-western Railroad, and has had in the past tolerably intimate business relations with Mr. Tilden. He specifies with all needful detail a dozen separate items of income accruing to Mr. Tilden between 1862 and 1868, and amounting to at least $174,000. There is no evidence that any of these were included in Mr. Tilden's income-tax returns, and there is positive evidence that those earned in 1862 and 1863 could not possibly have been taken into account in preparing the sworn returns of these years. We have already published more than enough since the appearance of Mr. Sinnott's "answer" to prove our assertion that this document was merely an endeavor to conceal perjury by falsehood. We have by no means exhausted the data in our possession, but shall take an early opportunity of summing up the case against Mr. Tilden as already established.

War prospects in Eastern Europe continue as debateable as ever. There is a suggestion that Russia and Turkey will reopen negotiations on the basis of the English proposals. But these, it should be remembered, were refused by Turkey before Russia manifested her sudden, but tardy, interest in their adoption. But, while war between these two powers continues possible, there are indications that it will be confined to them. England has formally decided on the policy of abstention, at least, for the present. This means, of course, an attitude of armed and vigilant neutrality. There will only be interference on the part of England when the interests of the British Empire in the East imperatively demand it. The other great powers are reluctant to take any part in the pending conflict. Diplomacy is still at sea. Nevertheless, the general indications are more peaceful than they have been for a day or two, and there is some comfort in the reflection that a general European war seems less likely than it was forty-eight hours ago.

In other columns we print a carefully compiled exhibit of Southern indebtedness, and of the dishonest methods by which the Southern people have sought to lessen their burdens. It is a story which no honest American can study without a feeling of mortification, and which stamps with indelible disgrace the financial management of the States on whose votes Mr. Tilden mainly relies for success. Whether the South be "solid" for Tilden or not, it is at any rate solid in its repudiation of obligations legally incurred, and whose proceeds have contributed immensely to its improvement. It was profuse in its promises when money was desired for the construction of railroads or other works, and now it is unscrupulous in its robbery of creditors, and in its efforts to evade just liabilities. The record has an immediate value, because it reveals the readiness of the Southern Democrats, when they acquired power, to wipe out with a sponge debts incurred under Republican governments. The source of the fellowship which binds the Democrats of Alabama, Georgia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia to the repudiators of Indiana and Ohio is obvious enough. Whether their financial affinities are of a kind that should reconcile the country to the possibility of their accession to national power is a question that will be answered according to men's ideas of duty in the matter of debt.

The New-York Tribune, which published, on Wednesday, an article inspired by the Brooklyn Ring, with the view of casting odium upon the present effort of the citizens of Brooklyn to secure good government, came out yesterday with a remarkable indorsement of the ticket nominated by John Kelly. It probably does not matter a great deal to the Tribune how many Rings it goes out of its way to support. It has very little character to lose, and very little influence left to give away. Only, it may be worth while reminding that limited class of people who may be misled by the Tribune's advocacy of the Republican ticket into confounding its sentiments with those of the Republican party, that honest Republicans in both cities are tolerably unanimous in seeking to emancipate municipal affairs from political considerations altogether. Any one who casts obstacles in the way of the hearty co-operation of the good men of both parties in relieving New-York and Brooklyn from the tyranny of Rings and "Bosses," is simply doing the work of Kelly and McLaughlin as effectually as if he were paid for it. The Reform ticket for city and county officers in Brooklyn is just as certain of success as a similar ticket will be in New-York. And both will strengthen the political party which is their main support, because an honest and disinterested effort to secure reform in local government is the best guarantee of the sincerity of Republicans in seeking to reform the administration of State and national concerns.

MR. BELMONT AND THE PUBLIC CREDIT.

Mr. August Belmont is in a piteous predicament. His instincts as a Democratic politician conflict with his interests as a financial agent; his duty to Tilden and Tammany is at variance with his obligations to the Rothschilds. As a partisan, he has done his utmost to damage American credit; as a financier, he declares that that credit is of the highest, and will remain so. In his zeal for Tilden, he has declared that the country is galloping to ruin—that its condition is irredeemable under Republican Administration; that nothing less than the triumph of the Democracy can save it from bankruptcy and chaos. In behalf of his principals, the Rothschilds, he protests that politics have nothing to do with the public faith—that it is beyond the reach of party, whether Hayes or Tilden be the next President; that "our country is rich," and will fulfill its financial promises, "no matter what ephemeral politicians may say." The dilemma is an awkward one for any man, and it is particularly awkward for Mr. Belmont, who desires to retain the good will of his party and at the same time not to forfeit the confidence of the European bankers from whom he derives his importance.

This curious contest, Belmont versus Belmont, would probably not have been heard of just now but for the publication in an evening contemporary of the report referring to the effect of a Democratic victory upon United States securities, on which The Times commented yesterday. The accuracy of our contemporary's information we could not at the moment determine. What we said yesterday, and what we say to-day, is, that the uneasy feeling attributed to foreign bankers with regard to the public credit of the United States in the event of the election of Mr. Tilden, is not only not an unlikely feeling, but is the natural result of the course pursued by the Democratic Party. Mr. Belmont, in a published letter, declares that the statement is "a miserable partisan canard," and by way of proof he adds that "the operations of the syndicate are progressing successfully in London, as well as here." The question, however, is not how the funding process goes on, for everybody knows that, thanks to the confidence reposed abroad and at home in the integrity of Republican administration, the plan works excellently, but what would be its fate if the Government were transferred to the party which has systematically assailed the public credit, and done its utmost to embarrass the very operations which Mr. Belmont now pronounces successful. Mr. Belmont, as a financier, unconsciously pays tribute to the very party which, as a politician, he has many times unscrupulously assailed.

We coincide with Mr. Belmont's remark that the attempt to damage the public credit "for the mere selfish or partisan prejudice of an hour"—whatever that may mean—"is shamefully unpatriotic as well as silly." We further agree with him that the soundness of English consols does not depend on the party complexion of the ministry; but, unfortunately for his argument, the fact is not analogous to the order of things now existing in this country. It is, indeed, disgraceful that the credit of a country should be tampered with or weakened for partisan purposes, and that efforts should be made to create the impression that the country is on the verge of ruin, with no other object than the acquisition of votes. But Mr. Belmont has withheld his indignation too long, and now that he gives vent to it, he allows it to flow in the wrong direction. The real offenders are his dear friends, the Democrats, and among the offenders none deserves more censure than a certain agent of the Rothschilds, Mr. August Belmont himself. From the beginning of the Presidential campaign, the Democrats have been so "shamefully unpatriotic as well as silly," that they have on every conceivable occasion impugned the credit of the country under Republican rule, and have insisted that to avert bankruptcy the Government must be transferred to Democratic hands. Mr. Belmont knows well enough that these partisan representations are unjust and untrue. He knows that the success of the funding operations, so far as these have proceeded, is evidence of the faith entertained in the Republican management of the finances. And yet, with this knowledge of facts, he has not been ashamed, as a partisan, to employ the scandalous artifices which as a banker he condemns and deplores. Tilden, Hewitt, Pendleton, Hendricks, Belmont—rag-money men and hard-money men, repudiators and resumptionists—all have appealed to the basest passions of the ignorant and the knavish, to foster the demand for a change of parties. All of them—and none more shamelessly than Mr. Belmont—have assailed the Republican Party as responsible for the ruin which they have described as ingulfing the Republic.

It is too late now for Mr. Belmont to turn round and set himself up as a high-toned judge of the manner in which political controversies should be carried on. He has contributed rather more than his share to the demoralization of his own party and the infamous course it has pursued in this canvass in regard to the currency and the national credit. He has been more mischievous than Sam Cary, simply because, while the latter passes everywhere as a demagogue, Mr. Belmont has wielded the influence which attaches to his understood connection with the Rothschilds. Of all men he should be the last to complain that European investors look with distrust and apprehension upon a party whose leaders, from Mr. Tilden downward, have, for selfish purposes, assailed the foundations of the public credit, linked their partisan fortunes with notorious inflationists and repudiators, and demanded the abrogation of measures leading to the re-establishment of an honest currency. People in other countries cannot be expected to be familiar with the double capacity in which Mr. Belmont plays a part in American affairs. They are unable to draw the line between statements emanating from him as a Democratic leader, and statements printed over his signature as a banker. And they encounter the same difficulty in judging of the Democratic Party and its relations to the national credit. A party which makes war upon that credit so long as it is under Republican guardianship, must not be surprised if itself be deemed unfit to be trusted with the maintenance of the nation's financial honor.

GOVERNMENT BY THE BEST.

It is a significant fact that most of the stock arguments against civil service reform originate with those who have done most to debauch the service, and who have the most interest in the continuance of the spoils system. Whenever it is proposed to abolish or curtail that system, they manifest a tender solicitude lest civil service reform should injure the service. When a proposition was made in the Senate last Winter to organize a permanent non-partisan internal revenue service on the principles of civil service reform, with a view to the better collection of the taxes, a distinguished Senator, who had never shown much concern for the elevation of the service, exclaimed with a fine burst of indignation that we might as well have a monarchy at once. He did not explain the connection between monarchy and efficient service, or between Democracy and inefficient service, but he seemed to think that our republican institutions would be endangered by an effort to secure competency and experience in our public officers. He is not alone in this opinion. It is a very common argument against civil service reform, and one that alarms many worthy persons, that it would create an aristocracy of office-holders. This is simply a bugaboo conjured up by those who have a personal interest in the continuance of the spoils system. On the face of it, it would not appear to any one familiar with the miserable compensation of the great body of civil servants that such a ragged regiment could constitute a very formidable aristocracy, even if they should be selected with some regard to fitness and should be made reasonably secure in their places. So far as the argument is susceptible of rational analysis, it seems to be founded on the supposition that if the public servants were selected by some impartial test and retained during good behavior, they would not respond to the wishes of the people. This presupposes that the present system is responsive to the popular will, which is as far as possible from the fact. The people have very little to say about the public service. The Congressmen claim the patronage, as representatives of the people, it is true, but they use it, when obtained, for their own personal ends. So far from giving expression to the will of the people, it is constantly used by designing politicians to defeat the free choice of the people. The offices, especially the local offices, are bestowed upon the adherents of the Congressman, with the full understanding that they are to work for his re-election or advancement. If he is shrewd enough to select for his appointees—for he virtually does appoint—men who have the control of the machine, and are skillful in the manipulation of caucuses and conventions, it is in his power to renominate himself against the wishes of a majority of his party. It is notorious that every successful party chieftain has an army of followers in his train, who work for his ends, and are paid for their devotion to his cause by places in the public service. Municipal, State, or national, as the case may be. For the spoils system is not an evil that infects the national service alone. It permeates all public administration carried on by appointive officers, down to the lowest administrative subdivision of the State. It is only because the business of the national Government has grown to so large proportions, and because the expense of conducting it has become so onerous a burden upon the people, that public attention is specially attracted to the methods by which it is performed.

Civil service reform would utterly destroy the ability of self-seeking politicians to use the public service for their own purposes. It would no longer be in their power to secure their own nomination by the bestowal of places in the public service upon their followers. They could no longer reward devotion to their personal fortunes out of the public Treasury. They could not surround themselves with troops of claqueurs and mercenaries at the expense of the public service. Men seeking a nomination to Congress or other elective office would have to depend on their own merits. The people would be left free to choose the man they believed to be best fitted for the place, uncontrolled by the arts of scheming party managers, working in the interest of the candidate who promised the best reward for their zeal.

It is the present system, not the proposed system, that is oligarchical. It takes the real power out of the hands of the people and intrusts it to a selfish junta. In districts where there is a decided majority of either party, the action of the caucuses and nominating conventions of the controlling party constitute virtually the election, and in all other cases it narrows the choice to two contestants of opposite politics. It is here that the power of political mercenaries is most effectual, and it is here that the benefits of civil service reform would be strikingly apparent. Inasmuch as it would restore to the people the freedom of choice of which the spoils system has divested them, civil service reform, so far from being aristocratic, would be a purely democratic measure.

It would be a democratic measure in another sense. It would throw open the places in the civil service to the competition of the whole people, subject only to such necessary qualifications of health, age, citizenship, and the like as should apply equally to all. It would be a contest of merit, not influence. Now, the doors of the service are closed against even the most deserving, unless they can command a Congressman's magical open sesame. Then, they would open wide to the son of the humblest and obscurest citizen, if he could but exhibit the talisman of superior merit. Only the blindest bigotry or selfishness could denounce such a system as aristocratic. An aristocracy is hereditary, self-perpetuating. The reformed service would be neither. It would be constantly receiving accessions direct from the people, possessing no influence but their own merit and no tenure but their good behavior. Superior merit being the only passport to the service, its members could not perpetuate their power by the appointment of relatives or friends. And as the purse-strings of the nation would be in the hands of an independent Congress, with no selfish interest in the service, the temptation to multiply offices would be removed. In one sense only could such a system be termed aristocratic—it would be government by the best.

THE APOTHEOSIS OF CROKER.

It would appear that New-York City has for years been entertaining an angel unawares. Though we know that this City contains many admirable people, male and female, not until now were we convinced of the fact that one of the noblest works of the Creator dwelt among us. His name is Richard Croker. When the angel of Abou Ben Adhem again writes in his book of gold, we may be sure to find that the name of Richard Croker leads all the rest. The last time Richard Croker's name was conspicuously before the public was in November, 1874. On election day a fracas occurred between some politicians on the corner of Thirty-fourth street and Second avenue, in which one McKenna, a car conductor, was killed by a pistol shot. McKenna died, protesting that the fatal shot was fired by Richard Croker. Others swore that this was a true statement. Croker was taken to a Police station, but, being a friend of Kelly, he was accorded unusual privileges, as well as the best accommodations in command of the authorities. Mr. John Kelly was in charge of the Tammany fight that day, and, hearing of the vexatious detention of his friend Croker on charge of murder, he left his multifarious duties, sought out his other friend, Coroner Woltman, and demanded that a preliminary examination be held at once. Mr. Woltman, with that respect for power which men of his stamp always exhibit, made haste to attend to Croker's case. So, while McKenna was yet in the throes of death, Croker was out on the street again on a bail which would have been exacted of a cartman who had beaten his horse with unnecessary cruelty. Mr. Croker, the reader will not be surprised to learn, ultimately escaped punishment. He has now been renominated for Coroner by John Kelly's convention. It is worthy of remark that the obliging Woltman has also been renominated!

This admirable arrangement sufficiently justifies all the high expectations which were entertained of Mr. John Kelly when he assumed the toga hurriedly laid down by Mr. William M. Tweed, now on his way hither from a Spanish port. When the Tammany Convention of last Thursday night had recorded the will of Mr. Kelly, that gentleman said a variety of handsome things about the gentlemen whom he had given the party as municipal candidates. Of Mr. Smith Ely he said that he was "one we should all be proud of." If we could be as proud of Mr. Ely as we are of Mr. Kelly, we should be as conceited as a whole territory of peacocks. But Mr. Kelly was not willing that the story of Croker's escapade of November, 1874, should rest as it was recorded in the legal proceedings of the day. On election day, explained Mr. Kelly, the virtuous and meek-minded Croker was passing through a crowd of bloody-minded ruffians who were opposed to the Tammany ticket. Most men would have held back and demurred at having anything to do with such "a rascally crowd," as Mr. Kelly calls the assemblage. Not so Croker. According to the eminent authority from which we are now quoting, the gentlemanly Croker remarked to one of the ruffians, "in the most kindly manner," be it said, "You do not reside in this district; take my advice and go to your own district, and leave this people." How much like Croker that sounds! If he had said, "Please go away from here and refrain from stirring up strife," it could not have been more in the manner of the accomplished and gentle person who now divides the honors of the Tammany ticket with Smith Ely, Jr., and D. C. Calvin. But the objectionable Anti-Tammanyite did not go. A mêlée ensued, in which, according to Kelly, "a man was killed, or, rather, died from wounds received." About the fine distinction between dying from wounds received and being killed, we understand Mr. John Kelly to hold some nice discriminations. At any rate, McKenna died, affirming, it was said, that Croker murdered him. Croker ornaments the Tammany ticket, and John Kelly, appealing to his audience on Thursday night, asked: "Is there one of you who believes that Richard Croker shot that man?" At this, four hundred and seventy-five gentlemen, of refined manners, pale and intellectual cast of countenance, and French birth, shouted "No! No!" One of these, more enthusiastic than the others, said: "Faix, thin, I'd have done it meself!" There was nothing more to be said. Yet John Kelly, the lofty-minded and cultivated Kelly, added: "I consider Richard Croker one of the noblest works of the Creator." Mr. John Kelly is familiar with the works of the Creator, and he classes Croker with the noblest of them.

Wherefore should there be any discussion as to the divine nobility of Richard Croker, who was accused of murder in 1874, or of the divine wisdom of John Kelly, who now vouches for the exalted character of Croker? Because the last-named person is a candidate for an important office, and his backer is also his political creator. In 1874, Kelly, then the new Dictator in Tammany politics, though not a witness of the McKenna murder, was Judge, jury, Police, and sole director of the whole outrageous affair. Woltman, who is now rewarded by a place on the Tammany ticket, defied the law which he confessed ignorance of, and taking the case from the cowed Police, let Croker go free. Kelly ordered about policemen, Coroners, and Judicial functionaries, in hot haste to get his creature out of quod before the noon of election day was passed. Subsequently, with unabashed insolence, he marched into Judge Barrett's court, and attempted to browbeat the Judge on the Bench. Nevertheless, he lives, to eulogize Croker as "one of the noblest works of the Creator."

INVOLUNTARY INDIGESTION.

An ingenious Frenchman, whom, in order to guard against typographical errors, we may as well call Smith, has invented a new method of murder, which promises to be of great utility to the profession. Thoughtful murderers have long been thoroughly dissatisfied with the crude and dangerous implements which have hitherto been at their command. They have found it impossible to kill a man without at the same time furnishing evidence that a murder has been committed. If, for example, the reader were to kill Sergt. Bates, or some other person who is in equal need of that quieting process, and were to use the pistol, the knife, or the bludgeon, a Coroner's jury would have no difficulty in deciding that the victim had been violently done to death; and by a process of reasoning sufficiently simple to be within the power of even a juryman's mind, would draw the conclusion that some one had murdered him. When poison is employed, the evidence that murder has been committed is equally strong. Much as we boast of our free institutions, it is notorious that whenever a person dies with symptoms of poison, some ruthless and despotic Coroner promptly orders a post-mortem examination, and employs a scientific person with a keen scent for poison to explore the dead man's interior in search of arsenic or strychnine. It is a gross error to allege that dead men tell no tales. The stomach of a poisoned man is perpetually yelling in the mind's ear of the chemist, "Here's your nice, pure arsenic," or strychnine, as the case may be; while, as Shakespeare finely observes, the wounds of a person murdered by violence are accustomed to protest in trumpet tones against the deep profanity of his taking off. It is no wonder that cultivated and artistic murderers have been dissatisfied with such rude and treacherous tools, and have sighed for some new method of murder, which would neither excite suspicion nor furnish the slightest evidence against the operator. Such a method has at last been devised and put into successful operation by the astute French artist of whom mention has been made.

Mr. Smith was until recently a happy husband, but his happiness was brought to a sudden end by the discovery that a certain Mr. Partridge, doubtless of English origin, had led his wife astray from the path of duty. He promptly resolved to rinse out his stained honor in the blood of Mrs. Smith, but a little reflection showed him that he would be immediately charged with her murder and punished under the barbarous French law, which deprives Frenchmen of the sacred right of temporary insanity. Like most great discoverers, he hit upon the method of murder which he finally used merely by accident. He remembered that Partridge was the name of the destroyer of his peace, and that partridge is also the name of a bird which is a favorite among gourmands, and the thought occurred to him that to slay his wife with a partridge would be to perpetrate a practical pun which would amuse as well as avenge him. He thereupon conceived the plan which he subsequently put in practice. Six plump partridges were procured by his orders, nicely cooked, and served in his wife's own room. When all was ready, he escorted the doomed woman to the table, locked the doors, drew a pistol, and informing her that he knew all, requested her to devour the whole of the six partridges. In vain did the unhappy woman beg for his forgiveness. To her entreaties he sneeringly replied that he would forgive her when she should have finished the partridges, but that if she left a single scrap of uneaten bird, he should be compelled to shoot her. Sadly she seized her knife and fork and began her dreadful task. She devoured the six partridges and picked their bones to the complete satisfaction of her husband, and nine hours later died of indigestion.

Here was a murder that left nothing to be desired on the part of the operator. The woman was dead, but the most malicious Coroner could only prove that she had indulged too freely in the pleasures of the table, and had died by the act of her own stomach. There were no wounds, no bruises and no poison, to indicate that a murder had been committed, and Mr. Smith would have been absolutely safe against suspicion, had he not, in the artless joy of an inventor delighted at the success of his invention, written to a complaining friend explaining that he had slain his wife with force and arms, to wit, with six partridges.

As soon as the merits of Mr. Smith's remarkable invention become fully known the murderers will throw away their clumsy old-fashioned weapons, and equip themselves with the safe and effective implements of destruction which abound in every well-filled larder. Mr. Smith had especial reasons for using partridges, but much more efficient and cheaper weapons can be obtained. The assassin who arms himself with the deadly mince-pie, or the equally fatal doughnut, can compel his victim to eat himself into eternity in a wonderfully brief space of time, and without leaving the slightest trace that any crime has been committed. Of course, the authorities will, in time, make stringent laws against the carrying of concealed pie or doughnuts upon the person, but it would be impossible to forbid the sale of those arms, or to abridge the constitutional right of the citizen to own and bear them. The future is full of promise for the designing murderer, and the day is probably close at hand when the rifle clubs of South Carolina will be regarded as the representatives of a crude and barbaric art, and when a mere handful of zealous Southern statesmen, banded together in a White Pie and Doughnut Club, will be able to receive the support of a solid South for the Democratic Party by strewing that region with the colored victims of involuntary indigestion.

POLITICAL NOTES.

The eyes of Delaware and of all the other States in the Union are to-day upon New-York.

E. S. Gaylor has been nominated for Congress by the Greenbackers of the Third District of Iowa.

The Republicans of Buffalo have nominated John Fullerton for Assessor, and Charles H. Rauert for Justice of the Peace.

Tilden thinks one good turn deserves another, and sends to Virginia asking ex-rebels to come up and help him carry on his campaign.

The New-London Telegram believes that the Republicans of Connecticut will make large gains in the State Senate at the November election.

A Democrat in Madison, Wis., is credited with the statement that Congressman Frye's speech there will make fifty votes for Hayes and Wheeler.

The Tildenites in this State have sent to Virginia for Judge John A. Meredith, Hon. A. M. Kelley, Col. B. T. Johnson, and others to come up and help them.

Southern speakers for Tilden are very loud in their denunciations of the Republican administration during the past fifteen years. That includes the period of the war.

A vote was taken in a train in Oswego County the other day, and Cooper had more votes for President than Tilden, and Cooper's vote was one. All the rest were for Hayes.

Did one of those rampant Southern papers ever know or hear of an instance where any man, white or black, was prevented by the Government troops from voting as he wished?

Mr. Wallace W. Hartwell refuses the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Eighteenth District of this State. Judge Hasbrouck declines the Republican nomination in the Fourteenth District.

At a political meeting in Columbia, S. C., a night or two ago, a white Democrat got upon the stand and admitted that he gave a member of the Legislature $50 to influence his vote on a bill before that body.

With an ex-rebel Governor for each of the would-be seceded States, and a second Buchanan, in the person of Samuel J. Tilden, in the Presidential chair, what would prevent their carrying out their wishes?

The New-Orleans Times refuses to be deceived by the bureau nincompoops. It says that Connecticut and Indiana are still both doubtful, and that the result of the Presidential election is in greater doubt than at any contest since 1860.

The joint discussions between the rival candidates for Governor of North Carolina, which have been carried on for some weeks, will close on Saturday, and thenceforward Judge Settle and Gov. Vance will act independently of each other.

The Richmond Whig cries "Virginians to the rescue!" over an announcement that Hon. Gilbert C. Walker has been invited by the Tildenites to take part in the contest in New-York. And yet Walker is nothing but a carper-bagger from New-York.

Men say, and justly, that Sitting Bull is imprudent when he asks to be supplied with ammunition. Tilden, who called the Union soldiers trespassers, is trying to force himself as President upon the Union which they preserved. What shall be said of him?

We admire the impartiality of the Hempstead (L. I.) Inquirer. It prints the full tickets of both parties, and says: "The nomination of Hon. James W. Covert for Congress will give as entire satisfaction to the Democratic electors as did the nomination of Hon. John A. King to the Republicans."

The people of Fostoria, Ohio, held a great meeting on Wednesday afternoon and evening to rejoice over the election of Hon. Charles Foster for the fourth time to Congress. The town was decorated and illuminated, and Republicans and Democrats seemed to vie with each other in their endeavors to pay tributes of respect to their popular townsman.

Congressman Erastus Wells, of Missouri, refuses to accept the proposition of Col. Slayback to submit to referees the question of their candidacy for Congress. Mr. Wells says that he was regularly nominated, and that he has paid the amount assessed upon him by the Democratic committee to defray the expenses of the campaign, and he intimates very plainly that he intends to stick.

Notwithstanding the proclamation for an election of Congressmen on the 7th of November, the Chairman of the Colorado Republican State Committee has issued an address in which he claims that another election in that State for the Representative in the Forty-fifth Congress is not necessary and would be without authority of law. He says that at the late election Judge Belford and Hon. T. M. Patterson were supported for both the present Congress and the next, and that the votes so cast have been certified to the Board of Canvassers, and who ever has a majority will receive a certificate of election. The Democratic Committee, on the other hand, insist that another election must be held.

TILDEN'S FEES FROM A SINGLE CORPORATION.

NUMEROUS ITEMS WHICH MR. SINNOTT HAS NEGLECTED TO EXPLAIN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As a labored attempt has been made to discredit the allegations of The Times in regard to Mr. Tilden's income, the following facts concerning some of the sources from which he derived "gains, profits, or income," between the years 1861 and 1868, may prove of interest to your readers. It will be observed that all the receipts mentioned are for professional and other services in connection with the affairs of a single one of the numerous corporations for which he acted as counsel—the Chicago and North-western Railway Company—and that no mention has been made of the most important of these transactions, the details of which are reserved for a future date.

Leaving out of account the services rendered by Mr. Tilden in 1859 and 1860 in the reorganization of the Chicago, St. Paul and Fond du Lac Railroad Company, and the formation from it of the Chicago and North-western Railroad, as well as his services rendered in 1861 in preparing the trust deed and other papers, and acting as Trustee for the bonds in connection with what is called the Appleton Extension of the same road, for both of which services he was paid a large sum, it will be found that on at least a dozen different occasions he received income in the shape of either fees or profits, not a single one of which is alluded to in Judge Sinnott's "refutation."

First—On the 29th of October, 1861, Mr. Tilden commenced the purchase, in behalf of himself and others, through a gentleman then doing business in Wall street, of the bonds of the Milwaukee and Horicon Railroad Company, with a view to the consolidation of that company with the North-western. These purchases continued into the year 1862. The average price paid for the bonds was fifty-five to fifty-six per cent. of their par value. In the latter part of 1862, and in January, 1863, the bonds—or a considerable part of them—were sold at prices ranging from ninety-five per cent. to par. Mr. Tilden's net profit on $34,000 of these bonds, sold through the gentleman who had made most of the purchases, was about $14,500.

Was this profit taken into account by Mr. Tilden in rendering his statement of income for either of the years 1862 or 1863, and, if so, in which statement did it appear?

Second—In the year 1862, and early in that year, Mr. Tilden drew the trust deed and acted as Trustee for the bonds secured upon the Chicago and North-western Railway Company's Green Bay Extension and upon the land grant pertaining to the same. In the statement for which year—1862 or 1863—was his compensation for this service included? If in neither, why not? His usual fee for such service would be not less than $5,000.

Third—In 1863, and early in that year, the Chicago and North-western Railroad Company issued a seven per cent. equipment bond, secured upon the rolling stock purchased with the proceeds thereof. Mr. Tilden drew up the trust deed and all the papers relating to this bond. Subsequently he prepared all the papers, including the trust deed, for another seven per cent. equipment bond of the same company. He was liberally paid for this work, his usual fee was $5,000.

Did he take into account the compensation he received for it in estimating his "gains, profits, and income" from professional services in 1863? If not, why not?

Fourth—In 1863, and early in that year, Mr. Tilden drew the trust deed and acted as Trustee for the bonds issued by the Peninsula Railroad Company, of Michigan, subsequently consolidated with the Chicago and North-western. For this service it appears that he was paid in cash, on the 8th of February, 1864, $5,000.

By his construction of the laws of the United States levying an Income tax, to which year did this item of income pertain—to 1863, when the money was earned, or to 1854, when it was paid? If to 1863, as would seem to be claimed by him judging from the "defense," with which the public is familiar, was it taken into account in making up his returns for that year?

Fifth—But Mr. Tilden was one of the largest original subscribers to the stock and bonds of the Peninsula Railroad Company, in connection with the late Mayor Havemeyer, his brother Albert, Dean Richmond, and many others. The subscription price of these securities was twenty-five per cent. of the par value thereof for the stock, and seventy-five per cent. for the bonds. Payments on account of these subscriptions commenced May 29, 1863. Mr. Tilden took certainly not less than $100,000 of the stock, and an equal amount of the bonds. Subsequently the price of the stock rose above 70, and that of the bonds to par. Mr. Tilden's profits on the amount of stock and bonds held by him could not be fairly placed at less than $60,000 to $65,000; they are believed to be much greater—indeed, some parties put them at $175,000.

When the road was consolidated with the North-western Mr. Tilden drew all the papers relating to the consolidation, for which he was duly and liberally paid. His usual fee for such service was from $5,000 to $10,000.

Now, to what year did his "gains" from these services and from his profit on these securities pertain? If any part of it belonged to 1863, did it form a part of his "statement" for that year?

Sixth—In 1863 Mr. Tilden prepared all the papers for the surrender and exchange of the second mortgage bonds of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company for a preferred stock, and for the creation of that stock. This work was also liberally paid for. His usual fee for such services was from $5,000 to $10,000.

Did the compensation received for it form part of the amount specified by him as received for "professional services" in his income returns for that year?

Seventh—Mr. Tilden prepared all the papers for the consolidation of the Rockford and Kenosha Railroad with the Chicago and North-western. Purchases of the bonds of the former company commenced in August, 1863, in behalf of sundry parties, of whom Mr. Tilden was one. The transaction was completed and the consolidation effected in 1864, and paid a good profit to all the parties interested—to Mr. Tilden over $3,000, besides what he received for his professional services in the matter, which at his usual rate would be not less than $5,000.

Were these items taken into account in his "statement" for 1863 or subsequently?

Eighth—Between the years 1864 and 1868 inclusive, Mr. Tilden performed the following services in behalf of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company and the roads which it controlled, for each one of which he was paid a large sum:

1. He prepared all the papers for the consolidation of the Chicago and Milwaukee Railroad and the Milwaukee and Chicago Railroad with the Chicago and North-western; and,

2. For the extension of the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad to Council Bluffs, and for the guaranty of the bonds of that company by the Chicago and North-western.

3. His professional services were employed in negotiating a modification of the leases of the Chicago, Iowa and Nebraska Railroad and the Cedar Rapids and Missouri River Railroad by the Chicago and North-western, and in preparing all the papers for such modification.

He drew the trust deed and acted as Trus fee for the seven per cent. consolidated currency bonds of the Chicago and North-western Company, and was paid for that particular service on May 29, 1865, the sum of $7,250.

5. He prepared all the papers for the control by the Chicago and North-western Company of the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad, and for the guarantee of the bonds of the latter company by the Chicago and North-western.

6. He drew the trust deed and all the papers for the issue of the bonds of the La Crosse, Trempealeau and Prescott Railroad Company, and for the guarantee of said bonds by the Chicago and North-western Company.

7. He prepared the trust deed and other papers for the issue by the Chicago and North-western Company of its ten per cent. equipment bonds. These last-mentioned bonds were issued at ninety per cent. of their par value, but soon advanced to from five to seven per cent. premium. Mr. Tilden took a large line of the bonds at ninety per cent., and of course realized a handsome sum from the advance.

Ninth—In June, 1864, Mr. Tilden drew all the papers for the consolidation of the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Company with the Chicago and North-western. For this service he was paid on the 29th of May, 1865, the sum of $10,000.

Not only so, but although he did not contribute a cent of capital to the transaction, he also had an interest in round numbers of one-ninth part in the pool which in March and April of 1864 bought up sufficient stock of the Chicago and Galena Union Company to control the election to be held the following June for the purpose of consolidating that company with the North-western, of which Mr. Tilden was a Director and one of the Executive Committee.

As his share of the supposed profits of that speculation, Mr. Tilden received in August, 1864, the sum of $36,000. But it has since been clearly ascertained that his true share of the actual profits of this transaction was less than $4,000, and he has been repeatedly called upon to restore the excess of $32,000, paid to him by mistake, but he has persistently refused to do so, and still retains the whole $36,000.

It is proper to state, in conclusion, that it was not Mr. Tilden's habit to present an itemized bill for services rendered, with specific charges for each item. In nearly every case the bill would consist of a long statement—covering, perhaps, a year or more—of services rendered, advice given, &c., in behalf of the party to be charged, followed by a sum in lump for the whole amount. This, doubtless, fully explains the difficulty experienced by Judge Sinnott in finding among Mr. Tilden's papers any statement of specific items of income as set forth by THE TIMES, and also shows that, after all, THE TIMES is almost every particular is substantially correct.

AN EX-DIRECTOR OF THE CHICAGO AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILROAD.

THE NEW CAPITOL BUILDING CASE.

ALBANY, Oct. 20.—Judge Van Alstyne to-day commenced taking testimony on the charges preferred against J. W. Eaton, Superintendent of the new Capitol, of neglecting his official duties. L. W. Rosendale appeared on behalf of the State, and Henry Smith and Matthew Hale for Mr. Eaton. Dudley Olcott testified that in the erection of the building for the Mechanics and Farmers' Bank in in 1874-5 J. W. Eaton & Sons were to furnish material and labor and receive a commission of from five to ten per cent. on the cost. Mr. Eaton was not at the building constantly. His son was frequently there. They received in commissions $2,595 81. The account ran from August, 1874, to June, 1875. James Long, a mason, testified to working on the bank building, and seeing Eaton there occasionally. He worked under direction of young Eaton. Several other workmen gave similar testimony as to seeing Mr. Eaton about the buildings and also about the Albany Savings Bank building, and the Water Works, all of which were progressing at the same time; but they all testified that he was there only occasionally, not more than two or three times a week.

SMUGGLER AGAIN DEFEATED.

BOSTON, Oct. 20.—The second race between Smuggler and Great Eastern, which came off at Mystic Park to-day, was won easily in three straight heats by Great Eastern. Smuggler barely escaped being distanced in the second heat.

PIANO AWARDS.

WEBER ANALYZES THE AWARDS.

WEBER PIANO ROOMS, FIFTH AVENUE, CORNER SIXTEENTH STREET, Oct. 20, 1876.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The awards of the judges upon Musical instruments at the Centennial Exhibition are believed by the press and public to be made without discrimination either of judgment or language, and in consequence are receiving the usual share of ridicule.

Permit me to say (and to prove) that this is an error. In so far as the piano manufacturers are concerned, the distinctions are wisely and nicely made, and both the Messrs. Steinway & Sons and myself have every reason to applaud the justice and the exactness of the verdicts.

In order to make this plain, it is necessary to understand what has been aimed at by the piano-makers of the world for the past fifty years, and more particularly by the Messrs. Steinway & Sons and Albert Weber during the last twenty years.

The development of the instrument from the original virginal clarichord, as your readers probably well know, has been in the direction of power and expression.

The clarichord, which was not devoid of expression, was almost destitute of power, and power was for a long time the great desideratum in manufacture.

Unfortunately for the ultimate pianoforte, which was to grow out of this prodigious human effort, it was found, after many years of experiment, that it was much easier to gain power than to command expression.

The use of iron and steel and the adaptation of machinery only served to accelerate progress in the direction of power. We obtained larger vibration, but our materials and appliances were incapable in themselves of heightening the sensibility of the instrument.

One is not surprised, therefore, to find in the history of the American pianoforte that the invention of the iron frame (claimed by two rival makers, but used by all) doubled at one step the power of the instrument and betrayed the character of the improvements which were being made here.

The complaint of every great musician up to our era was, that the piano failed to respond with the same alacrity and delicacy to the individuality and the emotion of the performer that are found in the violin.

There can be no doubt that the force of this objection was enhanced by the prodigious efforts of the makers to gain strength and sonority of tone, at any cost. With the great struggle of '68 in the Paris Exposition, the enormous strides that had been made, in the direction of powerful tones, were first apparent.

The American instruments commanded and received on all sides the most extraordinary commendation for their volume and carrying qualities. But it was perceived by experts that the material advantages were not secured without a sacrifice. The official report of the International Jury of that year, specifically mentions this fact, (vide official report republished by Steinway.) "It cannot be said," remarks M. Fetis, "that this formidable tone received nothing but praise. The European manufacturers of Pianos reproached the Americans with having sacrificed all other necessities of art, namely, sweetness, delicate nuances, and clearness."

While the American pianos were thus reaping all the honors due the prodigious strength, and the world of art was lamenting the sacrifice of the nobler qualities of sensibility and expression, there came into the field the Weber piano. The avowed purpose of the maker of this instrument was from the start to correct the errors of his illustrious predecessors, and, if possible, combine in the instrument the two requisites of the ideal piano, namely, sensibility or sympathetic quality with the greatest power.

Mark the distinction. The responsive delicacy and reliability of utterance are after all the ultimate objects in all manufacture of musical mechanism. A piano to be perfect must, as Leigh Hunt expresses it, be a piece of furniture with a soul in it.

While the Messrs. Steinway were traveling one road, an honorable one, I admit, I was traveling another and newer one. They had clutched all the laurels that were accessible to mechanical ingenuity. Their instruments were everywhere justly praised for their largeness of tone, volume, and duration of sound.

It now remained for somebody to add the sympathetic quality, which the incessant struggle for power had left out of sight, and to secure the prize never yet awarded for the combination of the two opposite excellences.

This Weber set himself to do!

If you turn to the awards of the jurors at Philadelphia, you will find that they have, with remarkable exactness, bestowed upon the Messrs. Steinway the special commendation to which the persistent and honorable efforts of that firm for so many years have entitled them. That is to say, the Steinway instrument is praised again for "largest volume," "duration of tone," and "purity." This of course is the old recognition of force.

If, on the other hand, you turn to the Weber award, you will perceive that my efforts in another direction have been recognized with equal promptness, and I alone, of all the forty competitors, am accorded the highest honor for sympathetic, pure, and rich tone, COMBINED with the greatest power. This is the new recognition of sensibility.

Surely there need be no "ingenious torturing of words" to understand the significance of these awards. So far from having lacked discriminating knowledge and courage, the jurors, who were all experts, appear to have hit every nail on the head. If some of these nails prove to be driven into grand coffins instead of grand pianos, it is not the fault of the Centennial Judges, who were only invited to deal the blow, and had no hand in preparing the tools.

The Messrs. Steinway, I am glad to see, accept their award as a just one. They have the loudest piano. I have the most sympathetic and powerful. This is an official embodiment of a popular verdict, and I shall not be behind them in accepting my award gladly, after having worked for so many years for this very recognition. Each of us has his position fixed to some degree in the field of musical manufacture. One of us is recognized as the pioneer firm, and that firm proudly achieved all its greatness in a pioneer epoch of our industry and art.

During the reign of the Steinway instrument, America worshiped force and magnitude. The material condition of our civilization was felt even in our music. But there came a time inevitably when with culture and taste expanded and ripened, we began to perceive that force was not so desirable as finesse, and that in the domain of art particularly, "feeling, exactness, sincerity, and sympathy were of far more account than vehemence, loudness, and immensity.

With this change came a change in the fabrication of musical instruments. Art was necessary to supplement mechanical contrivance, and musical taste must lend its spirit to iron and steel. According to the world's judges at Philadelphia, that has been done. The Weber piano, in the words of the jury, effects the alliance of sensibility or sympathy and power. In this alliance, so frankly avowed and acknowledged, only in connection with the Weber instrument, I find my reward. It opens a new era, the era of feeling based upon strength. In a word, the era of the Weber Piano!!

ALBERT WEBER.

STEINWAY'S VICTORY AND LAURELS.

The following official report of the Judges of Awards, accompanying the Medal, and certified by the United States Centennial Commission, A. F. GOSHORN, Director General; J. R. HAWLEY, President; Attest: A. R. BOTELER, Acting Secretary, shows conclusively that the highest honors in the gift of the Centennial authorities were unanimously awarded to STEINWAY & SONS, viz.: "For greatest concert capacity in Grand Pianos, as also highest degree of excellence in all their styles of pianos, viz.: largest volume, purity and duration of tone, and extraordinary carrying capacity, with precision and durability of mechanism; also, novel disposition of the strings, and construction, and bracing of the metal frame."

The report then minutely describes and emphatically indorses the six principal patented improvements which have made the Steinway

THE STANDARD PIANOS OF THE WORLD.

Referring to Steinway's exhibits in Machinery Hall of samples of hardware, metal frames, and patent tubular actions, the report further states:

"These articles of composite metal show the highest perfection of finish and workmanship and the greatest firmness and uniformity of metal structure, a steel-like and sounding quality, with a tensile strength exceeding 5,000 pounds per square centimetre, as demonstrated by actual tests. The full metal frames, of cupola shape, possess an unequaled degree of resistance, permitting a vastly increased tension of strings, without the slightest danger of break or crack in said metal frames, thereby considerably increasing the vibratory power, and augmenting the lasting qualities of their instruments."

THE FINANCES OF FRANCE.

A NATIONAL BANKING INSTITUTION.

EXPENDING OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY—AN ENORMOUS DEFICIT—HOW PRIVATE INCOMES WERE INCREASED—A BANK ESTABLISHED BY NAPOLEON I.

From the London News.

There appears no trace in history of any attempt to found a National Bank of France before the reign of Louis XV. The predecessors of that august monarch had arbitrary methods of dealing with their subjects' assets, and were for marching against their creditors sword in hand rather than for settling with them amicably; so that Government loans could only be undertaken by courtier financiers such as Jacques Cœur and farmers of the public taxes, who knew that it was worth their while to make a high bid for royal favors. All private moneyed men preferred safe hiding-places to kingly bonds. Thus, although Louis XIVe, who had such liberal views of expending other people's property, created some paper money after the disastrous year of 1709, and left no less than half a milliard of francs among his faithful people in these doubtful securities, the first project of a French bank was that of Law, which formed part of the Mississippi scheme, and which, though often enough anathematized, added the rich province of Louisiana to the possession of France. It was rather a pettifogger's affair, considering the vaulting ambition of the great Scotch calculator who founded it, the capital thereof being limited to the modest sum of 6,000,000, or say two hundred and forty thousand pounds of our money, as still appears by the concession dated 20th May, 1716. This financial institution had a regular good time at its beginning, for the bank charged its customers no less than two and a half per cent. discount per mensem on approved bills, and it might have prospered on till now had not Law become intoxicated with success, so that the upshot of the promising enterprise ultimately showed a deficit of 2,696,400,000 francs. It is quite painful to imagine the feelings of French men at the contemplation of such figures as these placed to their country's debit, and it was not considered quite safe to talk about banks in mixed society for many years afterward, though several illustrious personages of the very first rank had nobly added to their private incomes by the national disaster. Thus the Duc De Bourbon handsomely appropriated no less than fourteen millions in gold to his own use out of the bank deposits, and the Duc De Bourbon had generously contrived to get clear off with 25,000,000 in gold before the crash came.

Fifty-six years passed away before the consternation of the French people was sufficiently abated to warrant a certain Mr. Bernard in making a new effort to captivate public confidence in the banking direction; but on the 24th March, 1778, this speculative person obtained a concession which enabled him to set up a "Caisse d'Escompte," with a poor, trumpery, frightened little capital of fifteen million francs. M. Bernard did a paddling sort of business for a while, half distracted by the exactions of impecunious Ministers and their sweethearts on the one hand, and by the not unnatural suspicions of the commercial community upon the other. He made but a scanty profit out of his meagre business, and at length fell a victim to the merciless joke of a lady who had been refused accommodation, and who promptly revenged herself by ordering her hats to be made without a crown to them, and this head gear she demurely called "Chapeaux sans fonds, ou chapeaux à la Caisse d'Escompte." Even French men of business, who are a vastly different race to English men of business, laughed at the impudent jest, and the credit of M. Bernard's establishment proportionately diminished. Nevertheless, it continued to exist in a dreary, half moribund way, till it was peremptorily abolished by a decree of the convention in 1793. Then, after a brief saturnalia in banking, during which every man emitted his own banknotes if he had a mind to do so, Napoleon appeared on the scene, and clutched this lucrative branch of public business in his stern consular hands. It is remarkable that the French nation, though made up of individuals so eminently thrifty and so pathetically impressed with the value of the smallest coin, has never legislated with much respect for banks or bank notes, and the spirit in which Napoleon entered upon their affairs seems to have been compounded in about equal parts of greed and mockery.

It was in 1800, the twenty-fourth pluviose year VIII., that a few warm men got together to settle the statutes for a new bank, with a capital of 30,000,000 francs, divided into 30,000 nominal shares. Their names were Perregeaux le Conteulx-Canteleu, Mallet frères, Récamier, husband of the famous beauty, and the tobacco manufacturer Rothlard. Perhaps these gentlemen are strictly entitled to be called the founders of the Bank of France, but their deliberations would scarcely have arrived at any very brilliant or even satisfactory conclusions had not Bonaparte looked with good-humored contempt over their work and approved it.

The law of 22nd of April, 1806, is that which still governs all banks of issue in France; and it is therefore interesting to learn the opinion on banks in general, and on the Bank of France in particular, of the principal author of that law, who was the Emperor himself. Now these are the instructive terms in which his Imperial Majesty expressed the sentiments of his breast when the law was discussed in the Council of State on the 27th of March, or rather less than a month before he ratified it: "I consent," observed the sovereign with grim humor, "that the chief of the bank shall be called Governor, si cela peut lui faire plaisir, for titles cost nothing. I consent, also, that his salary shall be as high as you please, because the bank will have to pay it. The sum may be fixed, for aught I care, at 60,000 francs a year. But with respect to the proposal that the Governor shall be an independent functionary, I think that whatever we do it will be difficult to prevent the chiefs of the bank making private use of the knowledge they must necessarily have of the operations of Government and the variations in the value of public securities." His Majesty then graciously proceeds to give some instances in point, and notably cites a queer case of dabbling in piastres. He also points out some abuses not unworthy the attention of our own age and country, for this French despot was well informed enough when he desired to sift a question to the bottom. For the rest his notions of bank management let in a curious side light upon that deep and early policy of his which seemed at one time likely to hold half the world in thraldom. He thought and said with perfect frankness that a national bank belonged as much to the Government as to the shareholders. He held that an assembly of shareholders only resembled an electoral college; that they could never be considered as proprietors of the bank, but merely as Trustees who might be removed and indemnified by the simple return of their investment. "I desire," said he, "that the bank shall be sufficiently in the hands of Government, though not under its irresponsible and absolute control. I do not require that the bank shall always lend the State money, but I insist that it shall facilitate all the pecuniary transactions of Government on easy and equitable terms." Having thus delivered himself, his Majesty further advised the Chief of the Bank specially to put its surplus into the public funds and to eschew all private investments, because he had known "more than two brothers," both friends of his, who had been ruined by a private banker. "Indeed," resumed the Monarch, affably, "the most respected private persons become bankrupt, as we have seen in the case of M. Recamier, the unfortunate man who worked without me, who can hardly pay his creditors ten per cent. on their dues, though you have all been so good as to condole with him in his insolvency. On the other side, behold me! I have never made a single bankrupt, though I have suffered much from bankrupts of other folks' making. One private person owes me 30,000,000 francs, another 20,000,000, another 6,000,000. I will have no private speculations with the bank moneys. Moreover, the whole business of French banking must be under State control. Also with respect to the nomination of Governor, I cannot think of presenting candidates to the committee of shareholders. It would restrain my liberty of choice and put me into a humiliating position. I must be master in everything that concerns the bank, which belongs much more to the Emperor than to the shareholders. I was quite amazed to hear that the government of my bank had nearly fallen into the hands of M. Talon, who was an emissary of Pitt. I will have no more of this. I shall create a new class of men to administer the Bank of France. I will pay their salaries; good salaries. It is by money that moneyed men can be managed." These abrupt sentiments, which are set down without a one-sided unlikeprudence, will be all found in those strange outpourings of Napoleon I.'s opinions, which were reverently collected by Baron Pelet de la Lozère, a writer much unknown to the English general reader. The law ultimately based upon them is that which now rules the Bank of France, so that we may see the principle at work in its foundation. There is, however, a wonder much greater than this, for the principle, good or bad, has worked so successfully in practice that in 1871 the establishment which had such small and hazardous beginnings in the Government of the third Republic 1,500,000,000 of francs, or about £60,000,000 sterling. It is now among the richest institutions in the world, and its name is a synonym for credit and security.

REPUBLICAN SUCCESS A GUARANTEE OF PEACE.

In a recent letter ex-Senator Willard Warner, of Alabama, says: "Eleven years' residence in Alabama has given me ground to speak advisedly when I say that it is not safe to trust the Democratic Party with national power. To do so would be to take a long step backward. Nor do I expect reform by Mr. Tilden, who failed to discharge one of the first duties of a citizen by paying his honest share of taxes for the support of the Government under which he lived, and to which he has owed protection and guarantee for all his personal and property rights. I deplore the sectional character which the contest has taken, but if the South is to be made solid for Tilden by the revolver and the club then public safety demands that the North shall be solid against him. If the Democrats come into power, and do as well as they may, there will be a year or two of suspense and uncertainty, during which all enterprise will linger and all business languish. The Republican policy will be known beforehand, and I look to the election of Hayes and Wheeler to do much to set the current of business actively and immediately in motion."

THE REAL ESTATE MARKET.

The following business was transacted at the Exchange yesterday, (Friday,) Oct. 20:

Blackwell, Riker & Wilkins, by order of the Supreme Court in foreclosure, S. Marsh, Esq., Referee, sold a five-story brick double tenement-house, with lot 24 by 74.4, on Front st., north side, 57 feet west of Roosevelt st., for $12,250, to Jacob Cromwell, one of the defendants in the legal proceedings.

PARTY RECORDS REVIEWED

ADDRESS OF HON. L. BRADFORD PRINCE.

THE TWO POLITICAL PARTIES REVIEWED AND CONTRASTED—REDUCTION OF NATIONAL TAXATION BY THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION—TILDEN'S RECORD EXAMINED AND CLEARLY DEFINED.

Hon. L. Bradford Prince addressed a Republican meeting in the village Hall, New-Brighton, Staten Island, on Wednesday night. Mr. J. W. Simonton, the President of the club under whose auspices the meeting was held, acted as Chairman, and introduced the speaker, who said:

Mr. Chairman: In the political contest this year, as in other years, there are two great parties. These parties are not new parties; they are the same which have divided the country for twenty years. A candid man who desires to choose wisely will look at the history of the parties themselves and see what records they have made. And in looking over these records no candid man can have a doubt as to which of the parties deserves to have power intrusted to it. The Democrats say this is not a fair criterion this year. That these matters of history are all old issues, and that now there is a new state of affairs and but one issue, and that the issue of administrative reform. This is not the fair and proper way to judge of parties; but take this one issue, and if we find that Republican government has been marked by extravagance, and Democratic government by economy and reform, then let bygones be bygones and let us place the Democracy in power. What are the facts? We read in Democratic papers, and hear in Democratic speeches, a great deal about the weight of taxation under which the country has been placed by the Republican Party. I ask your attention to some events which have occurred within a few years. Ten years ago the internal revenue tax was upon everything you ate and drank and wore—there was no trade or profession not subject to it. In 1866 it amounted to $309,000,000, and it was reduced by Republican administration until in 1874 there remained but $102,000,000. Ten years ago there was an income tax which every man who had an income, and was willing to admit he had, was bound to pay. That also has been removed by the Republicans.

The speaker then showed by a long array of figures the immense reduction in the national debt which had been effected during the Republican administration, and compared this record with that of the Democratic Party in places in which it held power. In 1860 in New-York the debt was $18,000,000, and the Democrats reduced it in their own peculiar way until it was only $115,000,000. [Laughter.] In Brooklyn in 1860 the debt was $6,000,000, and there they reduced it—in their own peculiar way again—until it was only $38,000,000. Where can there be found in modern history, he asked, another instance in which an administration has succeeded (as the Republican Party has) in reducing the public debt and taxes at the same time? It seems to be impossible. How was it made possible? By a sentimental reduction in the expenses of Government and by the honesty of those who handled the funds. In 1860 the expenses of Government were $322,000,000; they have been reduced year by year under the administration of President Grant until the reduction has amounted to $63,105,000.

THE NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION.

The time which succeeded the war was a time of general demoralization. Defalcations in banking houses, in insurance companies, and in other branches of business, were frequent. Dishonesty seemed to be the rule and honesty the exception. This dishonesty, it might be supposed, would have existed in an extraordinary degree in the Government. What is the truth? We have had, within these last six or eight months, investigations by the score; they have probed to the bottom of everything which served to give an opportunity for developments. Every effort which partisan zeal or malice could suggest has been made. They sent for witnesses to the Pacific slope, to Europe, to the prisons, and, in one memorable instance, even to the lunatic asylum. What has been the result? It is such as to make us proud of the national honesty which has been developed. Instances of wrong-doing have been discovered which are sources of national sorrow, regret, and shame; they belong to no party; their discovery should not afford cause of congratulation or joy to any party. There is no true American, of any party, who does not feel the blush of shame at the fall of Belknap; who does not regret that Babcock was not more particular in his friendships. But these instances can be counted on the fingers of one hand. Beyond this these investigations have shown that there is a greater amount of national honesty and integrity in this country than in any other country on the face of the globe. During the twenty-five years before 1861 the amount lost out of every $1,000 that passed through the Treasury $9 02; during this war and after, the loss has been seventy-eight cents out of $1,000. In the time of Jackson it was $10 55; of Van Buren, $21 15; of Buchanan, $6 98; in the time of Abraham Lincoln, with all the war on his hands, but $1 41. [Applause.] In the first administration of Gen. Grant the amount lost out of every $1,000 was forty cents, and in his present administration only twenty-six cents. [Applause.] You may look through all history, you may go where you will over the face of the earth—to the most despotic country, where dishonesty on the part of an official would bring instant death—and nowhere will you find such another exhibit or absolute official honesty. Could such a state of things with that of New-York during the building of the new Court-house. Out of each thousand dollars there were stolen not only a few dollars or cents, but $650—sixty-five per cent.

TILDEN'S RECORD.

But Democrats will say, "That is not what we mean—we are a new party—the party of reform, the Tilden party. He is a reformer, and if elected to the Presidency he will control the Government." Now, that is not a fair way to do; no party has a right to put up one man and ask us to judge of them by him and to ignore the rest. Still, to accommodate them, let us take Tilden as the representative of the party and look at his record. Tilden made his record in the State of New-York; he never held office outside of the State. I do not, of course, allude to those little offices in railroads called "rump" companies. [Laughter.] He has held two offices—as a member of Assembly in 1872 and as Governor. The Legislature of 1872 was the first reform Legislature. No body of men ever had a better chance than they to distinguish themselves—they had to do the work of cleaning the Augean stables which had become filled during the administration of Tweed. No man could ask for a better chance to prove his character as a reformer than as a member of that Legislature. Tilden was a member of that Assembly. He was scarcely ever in his seat—scarcely ever took part in the debates, scarcely ever recorded a vote. A monthly neglect of every duty which pertained to the office which he held. I have taken his record from the Journal of the Assembly. I had the roll-calls counted. There were 1,565 of them. Tilden voted on 107 and neglected to vote on 1,461. [Laughter.] "But," some Democrat will say, "Tilden was a member of the Judiciary Committee, and had to be absent in New-York attending to the duties of his office and other affairs." That is true. He was absent with that committee part of the time, and I caused the roll-calls of the committee to be counted. There were 291 of them, and, giving him credit for every one of these, he still failed to vote on 1,170. Never has there been a case where a member, sick or well, made such a record of neglect. "But," they may say, "Mr. Tilden was a great man. He was interested in important reforms. So he picked out the 107 reform bills and voted on them, and did not take the trouble to vote on the others." I looked to see what bills he had voted on, and was astonished. Out of all the important sessions and meetings, Tilden voted on only one—and on that one he voted the wrong way. [Laughter.] That was on the bill of the Committee of Seventy to reform the charter of New-York. He voted no, and voted to continue in force the Tweed power, under which the City had been robbed. We hear a great deal of Tilden as a tax reformer, and you would suppose he would have availed himself of an opportunity to vote on bills designed for this object. Yet, on the Appropriation bill, and the Supply bill, which call for millions of dollars, and on which from three to five votes are taken during their passage, he did not vote once. One of the first measures of reform was one to reduce the expenses of the Legislature itself, which had grown to enormous proportions through sinecures and other causes produced by the Tweed government. On the final passage of the bill on this subject Tilden was not present, and did not vote. There were three reform bills to reduce the expenses of State prisons; Tilden did not vote on one of the three. "But," they say, "what he took interest in were the Canal bills; he did not want to flitter away his time with these minor matters." There were three Canal bills—the Ordinary, the Extraordinary, and the Seven-mill Tax bills. The Ordinary bill came up; Tilden was not there to vote—perhaps because it was an ordinary bill. [Laughter.] The Extraordinary bill came up. He was not there to vote—perhaps because it was an extraordinary bill. Then the Seven-mill Tax bill came up—a most important bill—on which there was a close vote, and on which we wanted the vote of every man to record what would undoubtedly prove to be a "steal;" but Tilden was not there. And the result was that during the 134 days—one of the longest sessions we ever had—Tilden did not vote on a single Canal bill.

THE CANAL RING.

We hear a good deal from the Democrats about canal reform and tax reform. They are both dangerous matters, because the statements made in favor of Tilden contain self-truths. The Canal Ring has been beaten and destroyed. Who did it? The people of the State, when, two years ago, they voted the amendment to the seventh article of the Constitution of the State. All the money that came to the Ring came in the way of "extra compensation." The amendment to the Constitution said in so many words, "Hereafter no extra compensation shall ever be paid to any contractor." When the people passed that, they destroyed the Canal Ring. This was in 1874; Tilden came into power in 1875. Tilden did a great deal that he deserves credit for. He made suggestions to the Legislature for the passage of certain laws, and the Legislature met him half way, and passed every bill he recommended. But it is an absurdity for Democrats to assert that he destroyed the Canal Ring, which had been destroyed by the people two months before he went into office.

In regard to the statement that Tilden reduced the taxes, the half-truth in that is that the taxes were actually reduced, but not by him. The reduction of the tax, Mr. Prince showed at length to have been brought about by several causes—by the previous payment of the last installment of the bounty debt; by results consequent upon the increased valuation of property in the State recommended by the State Assessors; by the previous payment of $293,000 of canal debt; by the appropriation of $300,000 less for the new Capitol than the previous year—all matters in which Tilden had no hand, but for which he received credit because the beneficial operation of these causes was not apparent until he came into office.

Mr. Prince concluded his address by reviewing the war record of Gov. Tilden and contrasting it with that of his competitor for the Presidency.

SPURGEON ON PREACHERS.

WHAT A LONDON PREACHER HAD TO SAY OF PREACHERS AND PEOPLE.

The London Telegraph of the 4th inst. says:

Mr. Spurgeon took part yesterday in the proceedings in connection with the laying of the foundation-stone of a new hall in George street, Camberwell, in which Ned Wright proposes for the future to carry on the mission service, for which his present wooden and iron structure has become inadequate. There was a very crowded attendance, and Mr. Wright seemed to have many sympathizers, by one of the most liberal of whom, Mr. R. A. Gray, the stone was laid. I came here to-day, said Mr. Spurgeon, to help a neighbor. The time was when nobody would go inside any place of worship unless he agreed with all that was said and done there; but we have now come to rejoice in diversity of operations where we can see that they are directed to the service of the same Lord. I believe there is not half as much ground for the anxiety people feel when they look at the various denominations in the Church as they suppose. I have known one place in a town as dead as dead could be, and another place was opened, and then both were filled. [Hear, hear.] For my part, if Ned Wright or anybody else can run away with my congregation—[a laugh]—they are uncommonly welcome; but it will take them all their time, for I always think that if there is a new coach put on the road the old coach should be horsed better, so as to keep customers. [Great applause.] What we want to do is by some means to get the great mass of our people to hear the Gospel. I am always hearing it said the great problem is to get the working classes to listen to the Gospel. I do not believe that to be the problem at all, and I deny altogether that the working classes of London attend less at the house of God than other classes in London. In proportion to their numbers they attend as well as any other class. At least that is my experience. People come to the Tabernacle, and when they see the congregation coming out they say no working classes go there, because they would not be so well dressed. But why should not a working man wear as good a suit of clothes as he possibly can get? Do you expect that on Sunday he would wear the same clothes in which during the week he is bricklaying or carpentering, in which he is up to his neck in dust, or in which he goes down a sewer? One of the first things I notice about a man when he turns from his evil ways is that he gets a decent suit of clothes and if ever he had such a thing before I am afraid he was in the habit of leaving them with the pawnbroker. [Laughter.] I don't believe any one in Europe could tell the difference between a workman in his best clothes and any other swell. [Renewed laughter.] I suppose two-thirds of my congregation at the Tabernacle are working men, and whenever you have a vigorous, living church you will find that the bulk of it is made up of the very men whom it is said to be the problem to get to go to the house of God. There is a problem I should like to see solved, and that is how to get the people of the West End into church, because although there are many places in connection with the Church of England in which the gospel is truly preached, I must say I do not call it going to the house of God when a man goes to witness processions and pomps and shows. And I know there are hundreds of thousands of people living in the suburbs surrounding London, having large houses and fine houses, who do not attend church any more than many of the workpeople do. Let us look at the objections people urge to going out on Sunday. Some say their clothes are not good enough, but they are good enough if they have been paid for. [Laughter.] I admit there are persons who should never go to church—those who wear boots and shoes with their toes and umbrellas that always falling down with a snap. Then you find people who say they don't go because of the heat and the bad air. I could indicate some places where they could have three pews to themselves if they liked [laughter] and plenty of air. To all sextons and chapel-keepers I would give this wrinkle—open your windows often. [Laughter.] I often preach in country chapels where the people are packed like herrings in a barrel [laughter,] and I have tried to get the windows opened, but they wouldn't, for they never had been opened. [A laugh.] I went into one of these places once, and it was so close and hot that I asked every gentleman near a window to smash a pane or two. [Laughter.] Those was soon a very grand smash (it is said in the beautiful language of the street) and I paid the bill afterward like an honest man; but it was much better to do that than bear the cruelty of preaching in such an atmosphere or forcing people to listen when they were more disposed to sleep. There is a common complaint that the preacher can neither be understood nor heard, and there is some truth in it. I wish some preachers who mumble as a very great fault would get a new set of teeth. If men have anything worth being heard, they should speak out. I have heard of clergymen in Australia and Africa—I do not say in England—[a laugh]—of whom it is said that when you hear them once you hear as much of them as you want to hear. [Laughter.] Preachers use various kinds of English—one with many-syllabled words, the other the Saxon monosyllables in which they themselves began to use when they prattled as children. I heard a story once of a number of sailors who were playing cards up aloft, and had a light for the purpose. The captain sent a midshipman to tell them to put it out, and the midshipman told them to "extinguish that luminary." But the sailors did not understand him. Then the Captain called out, "Jones, put that glim"—and out went the candle. [Great laughter.] I should not have said that, but I should have taken a middle point, and said, "Put out that candle, old boys." [Laughter.] I believe "highfalutin" is too much used in the pulpit. We preachers should speak so that people could not misunderstand us even if they tried to do so. Some men occasionally stay away from communion because their wives have a large family, [a laugh,] and these good women cannot leave the children. I should like to whisper in the ears of some Christian young woman that they might go and take care of the children for a Sunday and let the mother get out. [Applause.] As for the husbands, I don't think they always take their fair turn with their wives, for see some Christian men out on Sunday whose wives never get out for a month together. I think, too, that people have a good deal to do with the filling of the churches and that they might bring friends when they could, and certainly when they found it necessary to say the good man preaching had his wife a wool-gathering, they ought only to say it out in the country, when there was no one within a mile or so of them. [Laughter.] I'll tell you what I often find. When I go into a street and ask for a chapel I am told it is round the corner by the Duke of Prussia, or the Marquis of Granby, or the Mother Red Cap; but I don't find that the churches are conspicuous places. Don't let this happen to you. Advertise, distribute handbills, or the life of business is black ink. You ought to distribute tracts—I mean good ones—and if I knew where you could get good ones I should tell you, for they are generally superficial articles. [Laughter.] Mr. Spurgeon concluded, after an earnest exhortation, by remarking that as book numbers sold best when they were illustrated with plates, so in that meeting they were going to see what could be done with plates. A handsome collection was taken up, Mr. Spurgeon beginning it with £10.

HOW SOUTHERN INTERESTS WILL BE ADVANCED.

In his speech in Philadelphia, Thursday night, Hon. Jonathan Norcross, of Georgia, said: "Do you ask me which candidate for the Presidency is required to be elected by the best interests of the South? I answer, unhesitatingly, that they require the election of Rutherford B. Hayes and the continuance of Republican rule. If he is elected, all matters at the South will be quieted down. Under his administration capital and immigration will flow to the South to help build up our waste places. Under him we shall know precisely what to expect. We shall know that there will be no violent changes in the policy of the Government; there will be no working up of another rebellion, or something else equally bad and dangerous to our interests. But let Samuel J. Tilden be elected and the Democratic Party installed in power, then fear and trembling will take possession of every man. Everything would be thrown into suspense and uncertainty; and what is more significant, the great body of the Democratic Party being at the South, and only its tail here at the North, Mr. Tilden would be a mere puppet in the hands of the Southern Democracy, to dance to the tune of Ben Hill, Dr. Tucker, and Wade Hampton; and what is still worse for us, instead of capital and immigration going to the South to train under such leaders, thousands of Republicans would have to leave the South or be trampled into the dust. To tell you the plain truth, fellow-citizens, I can never believe that the people of the North can ever be so stupid and visionary as to hand the Government of the country over to the party and the men who risked everything and fought through four years to destroy that Government. I repeat, there is a strong element in the South, and, perhaps, a majority of the people, who have become reconciled to the new order of things, and who much prefer to have them remain as they are than to encounter the risks that would follow reaction, and the confusion that bankruptcy alone would produce."

GLEANINGS FROM THE MAILS

BOSS TWEED.

HIS RECEPTION ON BOARD THE GOVERNMENT STEAMER FRANKLIN — THE ARRANGEMENTS TO SECURE HIS SAFE PASSAGE "HOME."

Correspondence of the Baltimore Sun.

AT SEA, OFF CAPE ST. VINCENT, COAST OF PORTUGAL, Sept. 23, 1876.

Before this reaches you you will doubtless know that our ship has been awarded the flattering honor of conveying to the land of his birth no less noted a public celebrity than Boss Tweed. I say we have been thus honored, but as a few days must yet elapse ere we arrive at Vigo, the bulky, but shippery, old eel may again evade the clutches of the law and want to know "What we are going to do about it?" We arrived at Villefranche, from Spezia, on the 9th inst. A few days later the Marion joined us, and on the 14th the Admiral took official leave of us, together with the officers of his staff who remain out with him, and transferred his flag to the Marion. All this ceremony was done in due style—officers and crew in full dress on the quarter-deck. The old gentleman was very loath to leave the fine old ship, and displayed much emotion in his farewell speech. As his barge left the gangway, his flag was hauled down and saluted with thirteen guns, being hoisted with the same ceremony as he went on board the other ship. When the Admiral's flag came down, and the Franklin ceased to be the flag-ship, there was a man stationed at the main-truck who threw to the breeze a magnificent homeward-bound pennant 400 feet long, which rapidly unrolled itself and floated out far over the stern of the ship. The same afternoon at 4 o'clock we bade a final adieu to pretty Ville-franche harbor, the grand old Alpes Maritimes that frown above, to Nice, the superb, the lovely, the nearest approach to paradise in Europe. We took a farewell view of this familiar scene of unsurpassed beauty, and felt a sorrow in doing so that even our homeward-bound pennant flying overhead was powerless for the moment to prevent. Many happy recollections cluster around Nice, and it is by far the most endeared of any place we have visited during the cruise. However, everything comes to an end, so we took our last glimpse with the setting sun on the evening of the 14th, and then turned our thoughts toward Gibraltar, America, and home. The run of five days down to the Rock was pleasant and uneventful, rather blue for us to miss a number of our messmates, but the homeward-bound feeling began to grow more real than it had been before. We expected to stop at Gibraltar only long enough to fill up with coal, and then set out at once across the ocean. We had heard before leaving Nice of the capture of Tweed at Vigo, where he came on a sailing vessel from Cuba, so upon our arrival, when the Captain received a telegram from the United States Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid, addressed to our Consul at Gibraltar, we immediately conjectured that the old thief was at the bottom of it. The telegram requested the Consul to detain any United States Government vessel passing out the straits until orders could come from Washington. A few hours later a dispatch from the Secretary of the Navy ordered us to remain at Gibraltar for further orders. The next day came telegraphic orders from Washington to proceed to Vigo, communicate with the United States Minister, and receive Tweed on board, place him under strict guard, allow him no communication with the crew, and upon arrival at New-York to allow no communication with the shore until instructions shall be received from the Navy Department as to his final disposal. We got in the bay of Gibraltar in one day, pretty quick work, and at 9 o'clock yesterday morning left there en route to Vigo, where we expect to arrive on Monday. We have a head wind and a long, heavy, head sea which reduces our speed materially. If we get the Boss on board all right he will be given quarters in the Admiral's cabin, which is vacant now, and will have an officer on guard over him day and night in port. The cabin windows have been fitted with iron bars, which gives it a look of business and security to prevent him from falling overboard.

VIGO, Spain, Sept. 27.

We arrived on the bay on Monday evening, but too late to get a pilot, and the fog was too thick to run in without, so we had to stay outside until Tuesday (yesterday) morning. This is one of the handsomest bays in the world, and the view of the valley on both sides from the old castle on the hill overlooking the town is superb. The town itself does not amount to much. I was on shore yesterday afternoon for several hours, but devoted little time to the town. We climbed the hill to the castle, but admittance was denied us because the Governor had given orders to allow no communication with the prisoners. These prisoners guarded so closely were Boss Tweed and Hunt, a cousin of his. The people generally are opposed to giving up the old sinner, but the Government had no hesitation in gobbling him. Upon the arrival of the Boss in his shirt sleeves, barefooted, in the midst of scrubbing deck. The Spaniards spoke no English and Tweed spoke nothing else, so no conversation was limited. Last night at 10 o'clock a boat came off, and Secretary of the Governor delivered Tweed and Hunt on board. The former was at once placed in the quarters prepared for him and a sentry placed over him. Hunt was at once released, as we had no orders to keep him. The old Boss looks quite jolly and has brass enough to last him several years. He will be confined to the cabin during the whole passage, and while in port an officer is always present with him. Last night a man died who has been ill a long time with consumption, and we put off sailing till tomorrow in order to bury him on shore. To-morrow we sail for home, and we ought to arrive at New-York by the 18th or 20th of October. We shall go by the southern passage by Madeira and West Indies in order to get the trade winds and save coal. I don't know whether we shall go out of commission at New-York or not. You will probably see me soon after you get this. I don't know whether you'll get this or not, as Spanish postal honesty is of a low order. G. E. H. H.

PRODUCTION OF IRON IN GERMANY.

THE NUMBER OF BLAST FURNACES IN THE EMPIRE—QUANTITY OF IRON ORE USED—VALUE OF THE PRODUCTIONS—REACTION OF PRICES IN 1874.

The German Government has published some interesting statistics as to the production of iron in Germany for 1874. From these statistics it appears that during that year there were 324 blast furnaces, which worked for a total of 2,801 months, or, upon an average, for about eight months and twenty days each out of a possible total of twelve months. The quantity of iron ore used amounted to 4,342,184 tons, of which 4,130,090 tons were produced in Germany itself. The total quantity of pig iron and cast iron of the first quality produced was 1,660,208 tons. The mean working population employed in the trade was 32,765, of which number 553 were women. The positions held by the respective States of the Empire were as follows: Prussia stood first with 244 blast furnaces and a total production of 1,330,968 tons, valued at $28,106,313. Next come the Rhine Provinces, with a total production of 541,483 tons and a value of $11,753,078; in Westphalia, with 311,559 tons and $7,112,845; Silesia, with 276,258 tons and $5,986,109; Hanover, with 109,152 tons and $2,059,913; Hesse-Nassau, with 37,029 tons and $1,216,675, and Hohenzollern, with 238 tons and $18,012. None of the other States of the German Empire produced as much as the three Provinces of Prussia first mentioned; but Alsace-Lorraine follows close in the wake of Silesia, with 201,419 tons and a value of $3,716,374; and then come Bavaria, with 49,273 tons and $1,341,980; Saxony, with 52,050 tons and $837,892; Hesse, with 16,735 tons and $393,059; Brunswick, with 15,720 tons and $426,854; Wurtemburg, with 11,316 tons and $381,954; Saxe-Meiningen, with 12,913 tons and $257,887; Anhalt, with 634 tons and $32,095; Reuss, with 493 tons and $12,211 and Waldeck, with 124 tons and $5,429. A table is appended to these returns, giving the quantities and value of the pig and cast iron produced during the last ten years. From 960,979 tons and a value of $20,252,730 in 1865, the totals increased without intermission until 1871, in which year they were 1,420,830 tons and $29,138,286. In the following year, when the produce of Alsace-Lorraine was included for the first time, there was a further increase to 1,807,345 tons, and a value of $51,886,740, the rise in value, as will be seen, being considerably greater than the rise in quantity. There was an increase again in 1873 to 1,983,163 tons and $55,291,296; but a fall in 1874 to 1,660,208 tons, as stated above. The reaction of prices was also very considerable, as the 1,660,208 tons realized but $35,449 786, or about $19 per ton, as compared to nearly $29 per ton in 1873.

A METEOR.

The Hartford Courant of Thursday morning says: "Members of the Police force on night duty report a meteor of astonishing size and brilliancy at 1:53 this morning. All agree in describing the general direction of the meteor as from the south-eastern to the north-western heavens. One of the officers speaks of the meteor as appearing as large as a half bushel, and of the light as having a bluish appearance, and of wonderful brilliancy. All observers speak of the remarkable size of the meteor, its brilliancy, and of its apparent bursting, filling a large space in the heavens with bright fragments, which, with a brilliant, irregular trail, having the appearance of sparks, could be seen for eight minutes by the watch before the light finally faded away. The illuminated path of the meteor had an irregular shape, like the milky way, or like clouds lighted up by a bright moon behind them, although the sky, before the passage of the meteor, was perfectly clear. It was evidently one of the most wonderful displays of flash and sharp lightning. A long train, like that of a sky rocket, was left, and remained floating in the air more than fifteen minutes after the meteor had disappeared. The few who were fortunate enough to witness the spectacle report it as being extraordinary."

The Philadelphia paper says that about 2 o'clock Thursday morning a fleet passed over Camden, N. J. It appeared to the eye about three feet in diameter and passed from the south-east to the north-west. It was visible for about ten seconds, followed by a long trail similar to that of a comet. While passing it cast a light so great that persons on the street were led to suppose that there was a fire.

AUDIBLE SPEECH BY TELEGRAPH.

PROF. A. GRAHAM BELL'S DISCOVERY—SUCCESSFUL AND INTERESTING EXPERIMENTS BETWEEN BOSTON AND CAMBRIDGEPORT.

From the Boston Advertiser, Oct. 19.

The following account of an experiment made on the evening of Oct. 9 by Alexander Graham Bell and Thomas A. Watson is interesting, as being the record of the first conversation ever carried on by word of mouth over a telegraph wire. Telephones were placed at either end of a telegraph line owned by the Walworth Manufacturing Company, extending from their office in Boston to their factory in Cambridgeport, a distance of about two miles. The company's battery, consisting of nine Daniels cells, was removed from the circuit and another of ten carbon elements substituted. Articulate conversation then took place through the wire. The sounds, at first faint and indistinct, became suddenly quite loud and intelligible. Mr. Bell in Boston and Mr. Watson in Cambridgeport then took turns in reading what was said and heard, and the comparison of the two records is most interesting, as showing the accuracy of the electrical transmission:

BOSTON RECORD.

Mr. Bell—What do you think was the matter with the instruments?

Mr. Watson—There was nothing the matter with them.

B.—I think we were both speaking at the same time.

W.—Can you understand anything I say?

B.—Yes; I understand everything you say.

W.—The reason why you did not hear at first, was because there was a relay in the circuit.

B.—You may be right, but I found the magnet of my telephone touching the membrane.

W.—I cut this relay out, and then the sounds came out perfectly.

B.—I hear every syllable. Try something in an ordinary conversation voice.

W.—Shall I connect their battery in the circuit?

B.—No; there is no necessity to connect their battery in the circuit, as the sounds come out quite loudly.

W.—I am now talking in quite a low tone of voice.

B.—The sounds are quite as loud as before, and twice as distinct.

W.—Cut out the battery and then talk.

B.—All right. I will cut out the battery now if you will keep listening.

[Here an interruption occurred, and after a short time Mr. Bell said:]

B.—I thought you were going to say something.

W.—Is the battery cut out?

B.—No, but I will do it now.

[Battery having been cut out, Mr. Bell continued.]

B.—Did you hear anything now?

[Battery replaced.]

B.—Did you hear anything?

W.—No, not a sound.

B.—Say something to me when I cut out the battery again.

[Battery cut out.]

W.—I could not hear a sound when the battery was cut out.

[Battery replaced.]

B.—I fancy I heard a trace of your voice.

W.—Shall I put on their battery to see if it increases the effect?

B.—I will tell you what we'll do. We'll take off our battery altogether and put on theirs, as before.

[The company's battery having been placed in circuit faint and indistinct sounds were heard at the Boston end, and then came the intelligible sentence.]

W.—Is our battery off?

B.—Yes, our battery is off. What have you been doing? The sounds were quite soft at first, but now they are quite loud.

B.—Shall I put on our battery again?

W.—[indistinctly heard.] That was very indistinct. Put on our battery.

[Original battery replaced.]

B.—We may congratulate ourselves upon a great success.

W.—Both batteries are on now. [Another sentence heard indistinctly.]

B.—Repeat the last sentence.

W.—Both batteries are on now.

B.—I understood that before, but I thought you said something else.

W.—Remove their battery, please.

B.—All right; our battery is the only one on now.

B.—How many cells have you there?

W.—S—i—x—six.

B.—Please whisper something to me.

W.—[Sound of the whisper clearly audible, but the utterance unintelligible.]

B.—I could hear you whispering, but could not understand what you said.

W.—Perhaps we have got the batteries opposed to one another. Had you not better reverse your battery and see what the effect is rather what the effect is?

B.—I will try the effect of reversing my battery.

[Battery reversed.]

B.—Is this any better?

W.—That sentence was accompanied by that curious crackling sound.

B.—No, I hear it too.

B.—What time is it by your watch?

[Battery again reversed.]

W.—What are you doing? I have not heard anything except...for quite a while.

B.—I asked you what time it was by your watch. Perhaps you hear me better now, because I have reversed the battery again.

W.—My battery is now cut out.

B.—Don't you think we better go home now?

W.—Yes, but why does your talking come out so much fainter now?

B.—Because I had moved the magnet further away from the membrane.

W.—That was very much more distinct.

B.—Will you try to understand a long sentence if I speak right on?

W.—I will.

B.—A few minutes ago I heard a fire-engine pass by the door. I don't know where the fire is, but the number of the box is 196.

W.—The time by my watch is five minutes past ten. Had I not better go into Boston.

B.—Yes; I think it is time to stop now.

W.—Shall I go to Exeter place?

B.—Yes; but look in here on your way in case I have not gone.

W.—Let us talk conversationally without noting.

Conversation was then carried on for about half an hour with the utmost freedom, and the experiment closed.

A MATRIMONIAL BROKEE'S SUIT.

The Indianapolis Journal says: "A case was tried in a Justice's court at South Bend a few days ago which has some rather novel aspects, and involves some new principles of law. The plaintiff and defendant were both Germans, but we will call them A and B. A few months since B, the defendant, being a widower, expressed a desire to get married, as widowers have been known to do before. A, the plaintiff, so far sympathized with this laudable purpose as to propose to aid him in the matter, and proposed a junction with a certain young woman. This suited B exactly, and he accepted the proffered service. The young woman, however, proved to be intractable, as young women sometimes are, and the contract and negotiations were transferred to a widow whom the defendants expressed a perfect willingness to accept in lieu of anything better. The two were introduced, and after some brief and unimportant preliminaries, were married. The match, however, did not prove to have been made in heaven. After a month of wedded bliss they separated, and B drove his wife back to her old home in his wagon, like a good husband. But right then and there, and while his late spouse was in the very act of disembarking, his horses and wagon were levied upon by the officers of the law at the suit of A., who demanded $50 for his services in making the match. The case was tried before a jury. It does not appear that A warranted the marriage to be happy. He admitted the services, but denied that he had promised to pay anything for them. The jury heard the evidence, and after being out about an hour gave the plaintiff a verdict for $5."

LARGE FEES TO ATTORNEYS.

The appeals in the suits of Brown against the Mayor, &c., were argued before the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday. The case comes up on appeal from the order of the court below, made upon the report of a Referee, awarding fees to the attorneys prosecuting the suits against the City of John L. Brown, the deceased street-cleaning contractor. Oliver P. West was awarded $22,000, Stephen W. Fullerton $6,500, and John H. Strahan $3,500. The testimony showed that Brown in his lifetime had made a contingent agreement with West to pay the latter for his services $5,000, one-half of the interest, and the costs. The claim was for $86,000 and interest. The one-half of the interest amounted to $13,000, and the costs were somewhat over $4,000. These items, with the $5,000, made up the claim for $22,000. Brown had also employed Messrs. Fullerton and Strahan. Brown died before judgment had been obtained. The judgment finally had in the case amounted to $111,000. After it had been obtained John Ambrose, who acted as attorney for those interested in Brown's estate, without consulting the former counsel, compromised the claim on this judgment for $50,000, and compromised for $80,000 the other claims of Brown against the City. For this service he received $19,500; Sullivan, Kobbé & Fowler, the attorneys for Brown's widow, received $7,500; Field & Deyo obtained $5,500, and Mary Ann Brown, who had conducted the case, received $2,500. These made up the sum of $35,000 for attorney's fees. The main ground of the present appeal, which is brought by the widow, is that where a counsel's bill is disputed the court has no power to make a compulsory reference to determine it, but the attorney or counsel must bring a suit. Decision was reserved. After the deduction of the total amount of the attorney's fees and costs, the widow of Mr. Brown will receive $53,000 out of the $130,000 recovered.

TRIAL OF A YOUTHFUL MURDERER.

The seventh homicide case taken up during the present term of the Court of General Sessions was commenced before Judge Sutherland yesterday in Part I. A youth of eighteen, named Michael McGinn, living at No. 223 Hudson street, was placed on trial for murder in the first degree, in having struck and killed Patrick Hayde, a brakeman on the Hudson River Railroad, who resided at No. 532 West Thirty-ninth street. The story of the murder, as testified to by the witnesses produced by Assistant District Attorney Lyon, is as follows: On Sunday morning, Sept. 3, Hayde, with two or three other employes of the railroad, was standing around the freight depot at Laight and Hudson streets, when McGinn and a number of other young roughs who frequent the locality came out of a lager-beer saloon, where they had been drinking. McGinn and the pockets of Hayde, who was sitting asleep on a stoop, but, on being told by Hayde's companions to desist, went off. They shortly returned, however, and became involved in a fight, in which McGinn was seen to throw Hayde on the ground and beat him. After they had been separated McGinn drew a knife and pursued Hayde, but did not succeed in stabbing him. Hayde then moved off some distance and was pursued by McGinn, who picked up a heavy coupling-pin, with which he struck Hayde on the head, fracturing his skull. Hayde was taken up and conveyed to the Chambers Street Hospital, where he lingered until Sept. 27, when death ensued.

THE LAW OF INDORSEMENT.

The case of the Merchants' Exchange National Bank against Abraham Waltzfelder was brought to trial before Judge Donohue and a jury in Part II. of the Supreme Court yesterday. The action is brought against the defendant as indorser of a promissory note made by one Max L. Rau. A judgment was obtained by the bank against Rau, but Waltzfelder was not served with the papers in the suit at the time. The judgment obtained against Rau was assigned by the bank to a third party, and the bank now sues Waltzf

CARL SCHURZ IN BROOKLYN.

ENTHUSIASTIC RECEPTION BY THE GERMANS.

TELLING ADDRESS ON THE ISSUES OF THE CAMPAIGN—THE SOUTHERN QUESTION REVIEWED — THE DEMOCRATIC CAMPAIGN OF INTIMIDATION IN SOUTH CAROLINA CONDEMNED—ANNIHILATION OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY NECESSARY FOR THE PEACE AND PROSPERITY OF THE COUNTRY.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting of German gentlemen and ladies, completely filling the Brooklyn Academy of Music, assembled last evening to give hearty greeting to Hon. Carl Schurz, and to testify to their faith in the principles he is advocating. There was very little attempt made at a decoration of the auditorium, but flags were tastefully displayed from the proscenium boxes and portraits, of Messrs. Hayes and Wheeler and ex-Gov. Morgan were displayed in front of the stage. The curtains and scenery, with the exception of the side scenes, had been removed, and the entire depth of the stage was filled with rows of seats containing numbers of the most influential Germans of Kings County. Among those present were Mayor Schroeder, S. B. Chittenden, Hon. Jacob Worth, ex-Police Superintendent Folk, Isidor Bon, Dr. G. Wieber, S. H. Mildenberg, Herman Buck, George Zipp, Col. Roebr, Alderman Siegrist, Rev. Charles Miller, Col. Charles Schurig, and many others. A fine band of music was in attendance, and discouraged some excellent orchestral music, besides some popular and patriotic airs. Mr. Schurz did not make his appearance until shortly after 8 P. M., and then he received a most enthusiastic greeting. The proceedings of the evening were began by Dr. G. Wieber, who called the meeting to order, and nominated Hon. Sigismund Kaufmann as presiding officer. Mr. Kaufmann made a few remarks, thanking the assemblage for the honor done him. He said the Democratic bird of prey in Fulton street, like the Democratic birds of prey elsewhere, had declared that the Germans would be found on the side of Tilden and Hendricks. A glance at the assemblage before him, however, told a story different from that told by the Eagle. The Democratic Party to-day is what it has always been—the party of Bourbons—which never learns anything and forgets nothing. The speaker placed little dependence on platforms, but when an honest man like Hayes [cheers] says what ought to be done and what he intends doing we are justified in putting our trust in him. A list of Vice Presidents and Secretaries was then read by Mr. Paul Schmize and adopted.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

The following resolutions were then read and adopted with great enthusiasm:

The German Republicans of Brooklyn and Kings County, assembled in mass-meeting at the Academy of Music on Oct. 20, 1876, do hereby declare:

Whereas, The Republican Party has approved, and fully represents, the great principles of progress and humanity;

Whereas, It requires the aid and support of every patriot to settle the most important questions of the day, especially the financial and Civil Service questions, as well as that of the civil rights bill; be it

Resolved, That we, the Germans in Kings County pledge ourselves to steadily support the principles of the Republican Party, the maintenance of the Union, the resumption of specie payment, and the reform of the Civil service.

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the candidates of the Republican Party, Rutherford B. Hayes for President, Willi m A. Wheeler for Vice President of the United states; Edwin D. Morgan for Governor, and Sherman S. Rogers for Lieutenant Governor of the State of New-York, as a firm guarantee that all these aims will be pres rved which the Republican Party has thus far accomplished and guarded, and that still further steps will be taken in the direction of a good and honest government of the nation.

SPEECH OF MR. SCHURZ.

Mr. Schurz was then introduced by the Chairman, and was received with immense enthusiasm. He began his address by speaking of the disadvantages under which he was laboring, in having passed a sleepless night and a restless day in travel. He then made an address similar to and in most part identical with the one delivered by him in the Cooper Union on Saturday last. He began with a discussion of the financial issue, which he treated in his usual able and convincing manner. His p ints were well appreciated, and his numerous witticisms directed against the preposterous pretensions of the Democratic Party and its leaders met with ready recognition. Mr. Schurz then made some remarks in regard to the condition of affairs at the South and of the attitude of both political parties toward the Southern question. As a preliminary to this, Mr. Schurz spoke of his own conduct toward the South. At the close of the war, as the rebels lay defeated and defenseless at our feet, said the speaker, to give the right hand and we try to help them up from their prostrate condition was an act not only honorable and courteous, but also a matter of good policy. The speaker, continuing, said he was among the first to urge measures of amnesty and to advocate a policy of conciliation and good-will toward the vanquished. In 1870 the speaker was one of the leaders of the measure in his own State to give to the rebels the right to suffrage, though he knew and said at the time that these men would vote against him. These things, he thought, would show his own views about the matter and the standoint he had taken. He had always been backward in flaunting the "bloody shirt." He had no desire to influence still more the passions existing between the races at the South. He had risen up and spoken against the corruptions and the evil-doings of carpet-baggers at the South, and against the carrying out of unconstitutional measures to uphold carpet-bag rule. But he had never seen anything in these matters to cause him to go over to the Democratic side. He would tell them why these things never impelled him to support the Democracy. There are in the South many patriotic and well-meaning citizens, but also there is a class which includes the enemies of law and order, and is not only dangerous to the blacks, but also to the whites. These persons still cling to the hope by a Democratic success the amendments to the Constitution resulting from the civil war will be, if not abolished, at least greatly modified as far as the relations of the races at the South are concerned. Such hopes are fruitless, and strivings for such an end will be without avail. The great results of the war will not be abolished, because the great mass of the loyal patriotic people will prevent such action. The speaker had been in the Senate and out of it warned the Southern people not to resort to forcible measures, because such would be turned against them and would only serve to delay the work of reconciliation. He had appealed to former rebels, showing them the necessity on their part, as far as their own interests were concerned, to enforce law and order. Had they only resorted to lawful means, they would have succeeded in bettering their condition vastly, in opening up a new era of prosperity at the South, and in getting rid of all corrupt and evil carpet-baggers and other public plunderers. Take the very instance of South Carolina. There the people were misgoverned by Moses, the former Governor, who was called the robber Governor. Later here, however, Gov. Chamberlain was chosen and acted like a true reformer. No man ever took public thieves and plunderers more boldly by the throat than he had taken them. Even the Democratic papers of the State had, up to within the last four or five months, spoken of him in the highest terms, and had advised that no one be nominated to run against him. But the Presidential election drew nigh, and the Democrats of South Carolina saw that what they wanted was not true reform, nor improvement and prosperity in all their business affairs, but that in order to subserve their ends the State should be made to go for Tilden at any cost, and that Gov. Chamberlain should be deposed from authority. So they nominated Wade Hampton. Let us see how the campaign is there carried on now. They began with the massacre at Hamburg to intimidate the negroes of South Carolina. But they did not stop at this. They found a method of carrying on the canvass which in some respects is laughable. A Republican meeting, for example, is held at some place. The first speaker has hardly spoken a few words before the rattle of drums and the blare of trumpets is heard, and a mass of infantry and cavalry armed to the teeth is seen approaching. The newcomers press forward and take the front seats. They invade the platform and compel the unarmed Republicans, who are quaking with fear and at the appearance of the armed force, to allow them to speak at the meeting. Then a Democrat ge s up and makes a wild harangue. Following him comes a Republican speaker and begins to speak. After saying a few words one of the armed me. gets up and tells him that what he has said is a lie, and he must re ract it. And so it goes on. The man is similarly interrupted, and seeks an early opportunity to sit down. Then follows another Democratic harangue, and after it come wild cheers for Tilden and Hampton and the armed men rush off with a shout. Such a proceeding is a violation of one of the constitutional rights of the people. The Constitution guarantees the right of free speech, and no one in the United States has the right to take it away. But the bloody outrages at the South did not stop with the massacre at Hamburg. Not only did the whites take up arms, but, unluckily, the blacks did so as well, and the speaker said he would be greatly mistaken if bloody occurrences did not be follow. Federal troops have now been sent into South Carolina. The speaker believed that no armed men should ever be in the vicinity of an election. In the present case, however, should the Federal troops be withdrawn the Democratic rifle clubs, with their muskets and their terror, would come in. No matter if the Government armed force be withdrawn there will still be an armed force around the ballot-boxes, and the election will be one marked with violence and bloodshed. All agreed that there should be no intimidation by arms at an election, and the speaker believed that Gens. Sherman and Ruger would exercise their authority in such a manner that no man would be able to say that he was prevented from casting his vote by a United States bayonet. In order to put an end to the unhappy condition of affairs at the South and to bring in renewed prosperity a national administration which is noswervingly clear and strong, and one whose existence would show the folly of opposition to the results of the war, and which would guarantee equal rights to all is needed. In the hope that the would follow Mr. Greeley's election, the speaker had joined the Liberal Republican ranks. He had always insisted, however, that a Democratic victory in the name of the Democratic Party would be the greatest possible misfortune to the South. The Democratic Party is identified with the cause of rebellion in the war, and it is impossible to remove the Southern problem out of the politics of the country and to give due regard to the great issues—the financial question and the reform of the Civil Service—while the Democratic Party lives and holds out fruitless hopes to the unreconciled rebels at the South in the event of a victory. The Democratic Party stands in the way of reconciliation and peace. It is the party of reaction. It is the par y which seeks to intimidate the South and to mislead the North, and its annihilation is necessary to the peace and prosperity of the country. For this reason, the speaker said, he was working against Tilden and in favor of the Liberal Republican policy of Rutherford B. Hayes. Mr. Schurz then discussed the question of civil service reform, and showed the hollowness and falsity of the Democratic pretensions in regard to it. He was frequently interrupted by applause, and at the conclusion of his address received hearty rounds of cheers.

MR. GREEN AND THE MAYORALTY.

Controller Green was visited yesterday by a deputation from the Richard H. Carroll Association of the Ninth Ward, which has a membership of more than two hundred, who informed him of the indorsement by that body of his nomination for Mayor, and tendered him its hearty support. The Controller expressed his thanks for the kind offer, and said he thought that, as against the ticket presented by Tammany Hall, any respectable organization ought to be successful. He knew the people of the Ninth Ward pretty well, and that they generally accomplished what they set out to do. He concluded by thanking the deputation for their call, and requested them to convey his warm thanks to the members of the association for their indorsement of his nomination, and to assure them that, if elected, he would endeavor to perform the duties of the office to the best of his ability.

A delegate from the Col. James E. Kerrigan Association of the Fifth Congressional District, representing over one hundred members, also waited upon the Controller and tendered him their support. Mr. Green returned thanks for the assistance generously volun eered and for the interest manifested in the cause, after which the delegation withdrew.

A meeting of the independent citizens of the Seventh Assembly District was held at No. 8 Clinton place last evening for the purpose of furthering the election of Andrew B. Green to the Mayoralty. C. Bainbridge K. Thurber was elected permanent President of the organization. The election of the other officers was deferred until this evening.

A large number of citizens of both parties and some members of the Tammany Hall General Committee met last evening at No. 8 Clinton place, and organized the Seventh Assembly District in the interest of the citizens' movement, and indorsed Andrew M. Green for Mayor, and to-day will select permanent head-quarters for an active campaign.

The Citizens' Independent Committee are now preparing an address to the public. It will show the tax-payers how they have been robbed by the Tammany Hall Democracy. The address will show thousands of dollars saved by Controller Green through his careful management of the finances of the City. Controller Green will give the public a letter within a few days saying that he intends to remain a candidate for Mayor until the close of the polls on election night.

THE ELIZABETH CHURCH SCANDAL.

The Presbytery of Elizabeth held a prolonged secret session in the chapel of the First Presbyterian Church in Elizabeth yesterday morning the purpose of which was to take final action in the case of Rev. J. B. Patterson, whose pastoral relations to the Second Presbyterian Church of Elizabeth were recently dissolved by the Presbytery, the charge of intoxication against him having been sustained. With one or two exceptions every member was present, as was the accused Pastor, who seemed utterly broken down by the trials he has undergone. The doors were closed against all outsiders, and particularly against the members of the press, the members of the Presbytery seeming to be very anxious that their proceedings be kept secret. After prayer the Moderator asked if the special committee appointed by the Presbytery at its last meeting to investigate the charges and rumors concerning the conduct of the accused were ready to report. This committee, through their Chairman, answered in the affirmative.

The report showed that the committee, after diligent inquiry, discovered that Rev. Mr. Patterson had been found guilty of having been intoxicated in the cars on the night of Aug. 9 of this year. The report was accepted, and Rev. Mr. Patterson was asked if he had anything to say. He replied that he pleaded guilty to the charge of intoxication. It then devolved upon Rev. Dr. Blanvelt, of Roselle, to pronounce the words of censure. During the trying ordeal the erring Pastor stood with bowed head and was deeply affected, as were all the members of the Presbytery. At the conclusion, an earnest prayer was offered in his behalf.

THE CHARGES AGAINST BANK SUPERINTENDENT ELLIS.

The story published in an evening paper yesterday to the effect that charges of malfeasance in office against Bank Superintendent Ellis would shortly be presented to Gov. Tilden, and that it was probable Mr. Ellis would be immediately suspended is believed to have been made public solely for political effect in the interest of the Democratic Party. The Presidents of leading savings banks state that they know nothing whatever of the matter, and believe Mr. Ellis to be an honest and efficient officer. Mr. John McKeon states that he was applied to a short time ago for an opinion regarding the power of the Governor to suspend or remove the Bank Superintendent. The opinion he gave was that the Governor had no power either to remove or suspend, no matter what the charges might be, and this opinion, he had been informed, was sent to Attorney General Fairchild. Mr. McKeon said he had also been informed that the Attorney General's opinion would arrive in this City to-day, but what its nature was he did not know. He knew nothing of the charges against Mr. Ellis.

A QUESTION OF AUTHORITY.

Justice Smith Henderson, of Jersey City, issued a warrant on Wednesday for the arrest of a woman named Catherine Loahey, for disorderly conduct, on complaint of John Bresnahan. The woman was arrested yesterday morning by Constable Dooley, and taken to the Justice's court-room. John Maloney and John O'Mara followed them into the office and asked Dooley what right he had to arrest the woman, as he was not a citizen. They told the woman she could go and that the arrest was an outrage. Justice Henderson told them to desist, and ordered the woman to remain where she was. She walked out, and when Dooley started to bring her back he was stopped by O'Mara. He then caught hold of O'Mara and threw him over the railing of the stairs to the steps below. O'Mara got up and left, followed by Maloney. A warrant has been issued by Police Justice Keese for the apprehension of John O'Mara and John Maloney, who is a Democratic Alderman.

POLICE PROMOTIONS.

The Police Board yesterday promoted the following-named patrolmen to the rank of roundsmen, and assigned them as follows: Joseph Hall, of the Fifth Precinct, to the Thirty-first; John Dunn, of the Ninth, to the Twenty-second; Thomas W. Mulvey, to remain at the Tenth; William Ryan, of the Nineteenth, to the Twenty-third; Charles O'Dooley, of the Thirty-second, to the Thirty-fourth; John Foley, of the Twenty-ninth, to the Ninth; J. J. Braun, of the Sixteenth, to the Twenty-ninth; Patrick Cassioy, of the Twenty-first, to the Thirteenth; Augustus W. Luersser, of the Thirty-second, to the Twentieth; E. H. Larkin, to remain at the Eighth.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATIONS.

The Democratic Assembly Conventions in the Fourth and Sixth Districts of Hudson County, N. J., have nominated Major A. W. Harris and Hon. James Stevens respectively. The Democratic Congressional Convention met at Franklyn Hall, Jersey City, yesterday afternoon, and renominated Hon. A. A. Hardenbergh for Congress.

REAPING WILD OATS.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat of Wednesday gives the following account of a case before the courts of this city: "Two or three years ago a wild young man of that city married a 'beautiful blonde' in New-York, and, after living with her a couple of weeks, separated from her and returned to St. Louis. The ceremony was performed under peculiar circumstances, and the young man did not believe the marriage was legal. He became steady and settled down to business, and, in time, married a young lady of the highest re-pectability. Afterward he thought the first marriage might have been legal, and so he applied for and obtained a decree of divorce from the New-York woman. The blonde, finding that he had wealthy connections, employed a lawyer to get the decree of divorce set aside, and this was accomplished several months ago. The case was taken up to the Court of Appeals, and the judgment of the Circuit Court was affirmed yesterday; but the court, on a motion for a rehearing, suspended the judgment of affirmation, and the matter remains in suspense. The young man finds himself in an awkward position, and realizes the fact that 'the way of the transgressor is hard.'"

TWELVE SHIPS LOST AT SEA.

DISASTER TO THE ARCTIC WHALING FLEET.

TERRIBLE CALAMITY IN THE ARCTIC OCEAN —TWELVE SHIPS REPORTED WRECKED IN THE ICE—SEVERAL OF THE CREWS LOST—GRAPHIC STORY OF THE FEARFUL DISASTER—HOW THE SAILORS ATTEMPTED TO ESCAPE TO LAND.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 21.—The whaling bark Florence arrived this afternoon from the Arctic Ocean, with 190 men on board, being a part of the crews of the Arctic whaling fleets, twelve of which she reported lost in the ice, with a portion of the crews. The remaining survivors have gone to Honolulu on the bark Three Brothers. The following is a synopsis of the written reports of the masters of the fleet: On our arrival in the Behrings Sea we found plenty of ice and extreme weather, and but few whales were taken in the first part of the season. We commenced taking walrus on June 1, and the vessels engaged soon got all they had casks for. Between the 20th of July and the 1st of August the ships worked over to the east shore and so north toward Point Barrow as fast as the ice opened. The bark Arctic was crushed by the ice on July 7 off the Sea Horse Islands, eighteen miles from the Bend. The crew escaped to the shore and finally were taken on board by the bark Onward, and subsequently distributed among the fleet. Capt. Whitney going on board the bark Rainbow. About the 1st of August the fleet, fourteen in number, reached Point Barrow. The northern Light and Norman remained south walrusing, and escaped the disaster that followed. We had to stand from Point Barrow several times, owing to the ice standing on shore. Aug. 14 a breeze from the north and north-west broke up the ice. Whales made their appearance, and soon all the ships were actively engaged north-east of Point Barrow. The wind held from the west to north-east until the night of Aug. 16, when it began blowing fresh from east-north-east. All the ships stood in shore and anchored, to avoid drifting ice. On the evening of the 19th the wind increased and hauled to the north, bringing the ice on shore, and we all ran under the south side of Point Barrow, where we found a lee for four hours, but on the next morning were obliged to run south as far as Cape Smith. The Rainbow and Three Brothers remained at Point Barrow for the next three days. The whales were numerous at Cape Smith, and the vessels were busy taking them.

In the meantime a wind set in from the west, which caused an uneasy feeling. The space occupied by the vessels extended seven or eight miles off the shore running parallel with the land south. This kept steadily closing. On the 23d the wind freshened from west-north-west, and all the vessels except the Rainbow and Three Brothers, who were still anchored at Point Barrow, were surrounded by a drift of ice and beat to the south-west. In the afternoon the wind began hauling south of west, but we still hoped before the ice closed on us to reach the open sea, or at least the Seahorse Islands, where we could find shelter. At sunset the ice stopped our progress. On the morning of the 24th a thick fog set in. At this time the heavy ice packed and reached along the whole coast. About two miles to leeward the ships were all lying in an open strip of water. Between that and the shore the Clara Bell lost her rudder, when she ran near the shore and anchored. The ice closed around her, and a large berg grounded south of her and formed a breakwater, behind which she lay. The bark Florence drifted up to Cape Smith and got under the lee of the grounded iceberg, which proved her salvation. The ship Josephine St. George, Cornelius Howland, and barks Camilla, James Allen, and Onward were inclosed by pack ice during the afternoon, and drifted rapidly to north-east, between the Woodyard Refuge inlets. The ship Marengo, under all sail, got within three or four ship-lengths of open water when the ice closed on her. As we neared Point Barrow the current slackened, and for two days we drifted slowly. The Rainbow and Three Brothers, under Point Barrow, lay in comparative safety, witnesses of our distress, but were unable to render any assistance. The Marengo, St. George, and bark Acors Barns each sent a boat ashore, intending to follow with others containing provisions and supplies in case of disaster, but owing to the ice starting afresh were unable to do so. On the 26th the first officer of the Three Brothers, with a boat's crew, took the wife of Capt. Hackmott off the bark Acors Barns to his own ship for safety. The next day the St. George's men attempted to haul a boat ashore over the ice, but were caught in a fog. Thirteen of them got on board the Rainbow and Three Brothers, and the others regained the ship, except one, who perished. Next day the thirteen men tried to get back to the St. George, but never reached here; eleven were rescued by Capt. Owen, of the Three Brothers; the other two were frozen to death on the ice. The prospect was now very gloomy, the ships being held helplessly in the ice, and drifting rapidly to the north-east. Aug. 28, reached the end of the bank, and the current turned to east. The ships at Point Barrow were no longer visible, and the situation was worse than ever, the only hope being an easterly gale. Aug. 29, found ourselves off Point Targent; the crew of the Marengo attempted to get ashore, but returned unsuccessful. The next day the masters held a council on the Java and concluded there was no further hope of saving the ships, some of which were already badly nipped by the ice. This was only a touch of what might be expected. The ships altogether had about three months' provisions left enough to last through the Winter. After a full discussion, and seeing no way out of the difficulty, it was decided that the only way to save the lives of all was to reach the land before escape became impossible Sept. 5 was the day chosen for starting. The ships were twenty or thirty miles from land and abreast of the west head of Smith Bay. Sept. 5 all being ready on board the C. Holland, St. George, Marengo, Desmond, Jas. Allen, Acors Barns, and Onward, the signal for departure was given. The boats had been put in the best possible condition. The baggage consited of about twenty-five day's rations of bread and meat, a change of clothing, and a blanket for each man. Everything else but guns and ammunition was left on board. The main hope was to find open water enough inside of the ground ice to navigate the boats southward, and so reach the two ships which we supposed to be outside of the pack. We left at 3 P. M. We would first carry the baggage a half mile or so ahead, then return and drag the boats along. The ice was very rough in places, and many holes, which would not bear the weight of a man, were encountered. Many of the men fell through and suffered much from cold. The first night we camped on the ice about four miles from the ships. The next morning we resumed the march in a blinding snow-storm from the north-east. The prospect was most discouraging. Several of the men deserted and returned toward the ships, where numbers of the crews remained who refused to face the hardship and journey toward the land of their fate we know nothing. On Sept. 6 we reached a strip of open water, when we launched our boats and pulled toward the land. All that day and the next we kept working through and over the ice, and at 8 P. M. made land two miles west of Point Targent. We continued working along the shore, and at noon on the 9th sighted the Three Brothers and Rainbow at Point Barrow, and reached them before night. We found the ice all solid beyond, and the only chance of escape was to drag boats overland to the open sea, a distance, as afterward proved, of 130 miles. We made sleds and attempted the journey, but on reaching Cape Smith we found the bark Florence there.

After consultation, it was decided that any effort to proceed would be madness, and preparations were commenced for wintering as best we could at Point Barrow. The boats were prepared for whaling, as that was the only resource for our food, and work was commenced on the house. On the night of Sept. 13 the ice began to break up before a strong east wind, and on the next day the Florence was able to get under way. All hands, with the baggage, were put on board; ran down the coast and found the Clara Bell frozen fast in the ice. Her Captain said he would stay by her till the 17th, when, if there was no prospect of getting out, he would leave in the boats for clear water, where the Florence was to wait for him. Made Sea Horse Island that night; the next night made Wainwright's Inlet. Waited there for the crew of the Clara Bell and to get water On the afternoon of the 18th the Three Brothers and Rainbow, which had escaped from Point Barrow, joined the former, bringing the crew of the Clara Bell, which remained fast in the ice, with no hopes of getting out. A part of the people in the Florence were then put on board the Three Brothers, and a rendezvous appointed at St. Lawrence Bay, where they would stop for water. Both arrived there on the 23d, and left next day for San Francisco, the Three Brothers for Honolulu. Following is a list of the abandoned vessels: Barks Onward and Clara Bell, San Francisco; ships St. George and Marengo and barks Cornelius Holland, James Allen, and Java, of New-Bedford; ship Camilla and barkentine Josephine, of Boston; bark Acors Barnes, New-London and the Haiwaiian barks Desmond and Arctic. The vessels had on board altogether 1,000 pounds of oil, besides a large amount of whalebone and ivory. It is the undivided opinion of every master that no hope can be obtained of the rescue of the ships or those who remained on board of them. All are undoubtedly lost and carried away to the north-east in the immense ice-pack which closed them in for miles around.

W. H. Kelly, Master Marengo; B. F. Homan, of the Howland: F. S. Hickworth, of the Acors Barnes; J. Keenan, of the James Allen; James H. Knowles, of the St. George; E. A. Ludlow, of the Camelia; T. W. Williams, of the Clara Bell; George T. Lary, of the Josephine, and Ezra B. Laphan, of the Onward.

HURRICANE ON THE ATLANTIC.

HEAVY GALE OFF KEY WEST—THE STEAMSHIP CITY OF HOUSTON—THE STORM AT HAVANA.

KEY WEST, Oct. 20.—The gale which set in yesterday broke at 11 o'clock last night. The wind attained a velocity of ninety miles an hour. Nothing can be seen this morning of the steam-tug Godfrey Kleber, from Philadelphia, for Galveston, before reported ashore on a reef. The weather is hazy. The steamer City of Houston is ashore half out of water at Boca Chica. She left New-York Oct. 14, for Galveston. She will probably come off after lightering. All on board were saved. Mr. Albury, a passenger died last night.

HAVANA, Oct. 20.—A fearful hurricane prevailed here all last night. Telegraphic communication throughout the whole island is interrupted. The lines connecting with the cable are down, but will be repaired immediately if the weather allows. The barometer is still very low, and there are signs of another hurricane. The wind varies from north-east by east to north-east. None of the American vessels in the harbor have suffered thus far. In this city several buildings have been severely damaged, and many trees in the public parks are down. One of the walls and the roof of the new theatre of Payret, now constructing, were destroyed.

LAUNCH OF A STEAM-SHIP.

THE RIO GRANDE SAFELY LAUNCHED AT CHESTER, PENN.—CARRYING CAPACITY OF THE STEAMER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHESTER, Oct. 21.—This afternoon the steamship Rio Grande was launched from the Delaware River Iron Shipbuilding and Engine Works in this place. The launch was a success in every respect, and was witnessed by a vast crowd of spectators. Six hundred invited guests were on board the ship at the time. The weather was delightful, and not the slightest accident occurred. The Rio Grande is owned by C. H. Mallory & Co., and has a carrying capacity of 5,000 bales of cotton. She is 310 feet long, 39 feet wide, and 25 feet deep. It is claimed she is constructed in a style so superior to the underwriters' rules, but none but the working parts of her machinery will show any appreciable wear and tear after twenty years of use. The engine is of the compound pattern, the high and low-pressure cylinders being respectively 32 and 60 inches in diameter, with 54 inches of piston-stroke. It is believed that the Rio Grande will be able to make 13 knots an hour in fair weather. She will be put on the line early in December.

TWENTY-FIRST DISTRICT REPUBLICANS.

A grand rally will be held by the Republicans of the Twenty-first Assembly District to-morrow evening. Parspa Hall, corner of Third avenue and Eighty-sixth street, has been engaged for the occasion, and ample preparations have been made. The meeting, at which Mr. R. B. Cowing will preside, with Mr. Henry Welsh as Secretary, will be called to order at 8 o'clock. Speeches will be made by Major Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, and Hon. John B. Warwick, and it is promised that other distinguished citizens will address the assemblage. The Republicans of this district have manifested much enthusiasm during the present campaign, and have been untiringly engaged in working for the good of the cause.

SEIZURE OF A STEAM-SHIP.

MONTREAL, Oct. 21.—The steam-ship Enmore, from Antwerp, has been seized by the Marshal of the Vice Admiralty Court at the instance of the parties who had the ship which was in collision with the Enmore last Winter. The latter left the port suddenly to avoid the consequences.

REBELS TO THE FRONT.

THE CANDIDATES OF THE SOUTH CAROLINA DEMOCRACY.

EVERY MAN ON THE STATE TICKET A REBEL OFFICER — ALL THE CONGRESSIONAL NOMINEES EX-CONFEDERATES — THE HOPE OF THE SOLID SOUTH—WHAT THE SHOT-GUN LEADERS WISH TO ACCOMPLISH.

From Our Special Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Wednesday, Oct. 18, 1876.

The shot-gun campaign, which has already resulted in the killing of at least one hundred citizens of South Carolina, was inaugurated for the purpose of securing the success of the Democratic ticket in this State. There is now no doubt upon this point, and it can with truth be said that the records of the rifle club candidates justify their lawless followers in believing that the leaders will sanction any act, no matter how desperate, which promises to bring them success. For years past the forgiving masses of the North have cried "amnesty," "amnesty;" they have counseled the cultivation of friendly feeling among the sections; they have extended a free and full pardon, and the right hand of fellowship to all the men who bore arms against them. What have the ex-rebels done in return? They submit to the national authority, it is true, for they dare not do otherwise, but they submit with an exceedingly bad grace. For years they have thrown every possible obstacle in the way of the acts of reconstruction and the amendments to the National Constitution, and to-day by killing, beating, and otherwise outraging the very men who were freed by the Union armies, who by the results of the war were guaranteed the rights of citizenship, they hope to regain their lost power. These are plain words, but the situation in this State demands plain and earnest words, for it is far more serious, far more threatening, far more dangerous than the people of the North have any idea of. If any fair-minded, conscientious man doubts this, let him remember that "a solid South"—which is not a political myth, but a stern political reality—means a combination, a consolidation, a reunion of all the rebel forces, which it was believed were forever broken by the war. Let it be remembered at the same time that the one hope, the only aim of these reunited rebel forces, is to gain control of the Government which they once fought to destroy. They could not secure their end by open war, but they now hope to succeed by secret violence, outrage, and intimidation. The very men who lead this movement in South Carolina show beyond all question its character and purpose. From Wade Hampton down they were rebels, every one of them. They were traitors to their country. They fought for years to overthrow the National Government. In Russia, Germany, France, or England they would have been beheaded, imprisoned, or banished for their crimes. In the United States, however, the country they sought to destroy, they were restored to the full rights of citizenship; and to-day, by depriving the freedmen of their rights, by again defying the Government, they hope to rule the nation. The Democratic politicians of this State are exceedingly ingenious; they are always ready to explain away outrages upon negroes or to justify their violent practices; I do not think, however, that they will deny the statement that every one of their candidates on the State, Congressional, and county tickets were in the rebel Army and took part in the war to break up the Union. In case they should attempt to do so, however, I have been at some pains to get at the facts, and here present the records of the men who have been put in nomination by the Democrats of South Carolina:

THE REBEL RECORD OF HAMPTON AND HIS ASSOCIATES.

Gen. Wade Hampton, the Democratic nominee for Governor, the chosen standard-bearer of the rifle clubs, the ideal of the "last ditchers" and the men who boast that they have never been reconstructed, leads "the solid South" movement in this State, and has pledged himself to carry it for "Tilden and reform." He is well fitted for such a contest. Born in Charleston, of parents who had always owned slaves, he was taught from his boyhood to regard the negroes as little better than beasts of burden, who were made to toil and sweat that their masters might live in idle luxury. When the war broke out he was one of the first to devote his life and his fortune to "the cause." He joined the rebel Army and fought for years to destroy his country. He was at first Colonel of the notorious Hampton Legion, and afterward rose to the rank of Lieutenant General in the rebel Army. In 1868 he took an active part in the convention that nominated Seymour and Blair. He now comes from the seclusion of private life to lead "the shot-gun campaign." In all his speeches, which are master pieces of oratory, he calls upon his friends and followers to preserve the peace. At the same time, however, he approves of the existence of the rifle clubs, and is deaf to the complaints of the black men who are maltreated by them.

Col. W. D. Simpson, who has been nominated for Lieutenant Governor on the same ticket with Gen. Hampton, served with distinction in the war against the Union. He was a Colonel in Orr's rebel legion.

The Democratic candidate for State Treasurer is S. L. Leaphart, a gentleman who commanded a company in the Second South Carolina Regiment, Kershaw's brigade.

Col. R. M. Sims is the Democratic candidate for Secretary of State. He entered the rebel army early in the war, and was at one time Adjutant General of Gary's brigade. Gen. Gary, it will be remembered, is the same gentleman who now leads the rifle clubs in Edgefield, and advises his followers to "shoot the Radicals rather than let them get control of the State."

The nominee for Attorney General is Gen. Jas. Conner. He was United States District Attorney for South Carolina from 1857 until the time of secession. Then he entered the rebel army, and for meritorious service against the Union forces he was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General.

Johnson Haygood, the candidate for Controller General, was an extensive slave-holder. At the breaking out of the war he joined the rebel forces, and rose to the rank of Brigadier General.

The Democratic candidate for Superintendent of Public Education is Capt. H. S. Thompson. He was a teacher in the South Carolina Military Academy, and commanded a company in the rebel service.

E. W. Maise, who has been nominated by the Democrats for Adjutant General, entered the rebel army early in the war. He afterward became Major of the Hampton Legion. This ends the Democratic State ticket. Every man upon it was in the rebel army. They all "served with distinction" in the war against the Union.

Turning to the Democratic nominees for Congressional honors, I find that they also are chiefly conspicuous for having been prominently engaged in the effort to overthrow the National Government. John S. Richardson, the candidate in the First District, was a Captain in Kershaw's brigade. He was a delegate to the St. Louis Convention, and strongly advocates the election of Mr. Tilden.

In the Second District the Democratic nominee is Major Thomas G. Baker. He was a delegate to the State Convention that nominated delegates to the Charleston Convention of 1860, and during the campaign which followed was Chairman of the Central Democratic Committee of South Carolina. Immediately upon the secession of the State he asked for a position in the rebel army, and by the personal request of Gen. Hampton accepted the Adjutancy of the Hampton Legion. Subsequently he became Adjutant General.

The Democratic candidate in the Third District is Col. D. Wyatt Aiken. He was "a rebel to the core," and commanded the Seventh South Carolina Regiment all through the war.

Col. John H. Evins is the candidate in the Fourth District. He entered the rebel service promptly, and served with distinction in that famous regiment, the Palmetto Sharp-shooters.

The shot-gun candidate in the Fifth District is G. D. Tillman. During the war he was a Major in the Home Guards, or South Carolina reserve. He is one of the regular old-school fire-eating kind of gentlemen who "fear no man, Sir." In addition to his other accomplishments he is a good shot. In July, 1856, he killed a man named Henry Christian, was convicted of manslaughter, and served two years in jail.

This is the record of the men whom the Democrats have nominated for Congress, and without going into details I may state that nearly every man nominated by them for the minor county offices were actively engaged in the rebellion. Indeed, it seems almost as if their effort to overthrow the Government was their chief claim to preference, and the more famous they were as "Yankee killers" the greater the honor they have received. They are all reformers now, however, and warm advocates of "Tilden and a solid South." H. C.

A DEMOCRATIC WAR GOVERNOR.

HOW VANCE, OF NORTH CAROLINA, TOOK ADVANTAGE OF HIS OFFICE — HIS TRANSACTIONS AS A BLOCKADE-RUNNER —THE DESPERATION OF SOUTHERN DEMOCRATS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Oct. 21.—For some time the Republicans have been asking Mr. Vance questions concerning his official transactions during the war, with the Advance, a blokade runner. The Sentinel, of this city, a Democratic organ, comes out this morning, and says that Vance was engaged in the blockade business, and that he shipped fifteen bales of cotton on his own private account, and after the war received from Alexander Collie, of England, $3,000 in gold. It is probable that more official peculation and fraud will come out of the blockade business before the campaign ends. The Democrats claim that this was a private transaction, and was all right and honest. The Republicans answer that Vance had no right to use his official position for any such purpose when private citizens were not allowed the same privilege, and that the Advance was a State vessel, and the Governor had no right to use her for his own personal gain.

The Sentinel has an editorial in reference to the sending of troops to South Carolina, in which that paper says that a "solid South" will elect Tilden, and unless every vote is counted the people will take up arms again, and this time, under the Stars and Stripes. The Democrats are desperate. They have sent out word for every member of the Tilden and Vance Clubs each to control one negro. News from all parts of the State is very encouraging. Unless the various county leaders are badly mistaken the Republicans will poll a much heavier vote than in 1872. The joint canvass between Settle and Vance closed at Beaufort on yesterday. Judge Settle will now stump the First Congressional District until the day of election.

SENATOR BLAINE IN DETROIT.

A GREAT POLITICAL MASS-MEETING—FIFTEEN THOUSAND PERSONS PRESENT—THE REPUBLICANS OF MICHIGAN AROUSED—AN EVENING SERENADE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

DETROIT, Oct. 21.—The largest and most enthusiastic political mass-meeting held in this vicinity in years has taken place here to-day, Senator Blaine being the speaker. Mr Blaine reached this city from the east last night, accompanied by his wife, and this morning held a public meeting at the Russell House, being called upon by hundreds of our prominent citizens. He spoke at 2 o'clock this afternoon in the large depot of the Detroit and Milwaukee Railway, which was cleared for that purpose, and in which a spacious stand was erected for invited citizens and ladies. All the morning trains brought hundreds of people into the city, most of the roads running excursion cars, and all being crowded to excess. Prominent among these arrivals was a delegation of over two hundred students from the State University at Ann Arbor. The crowd began to assemble in the depot long before the appointed hour, and by 2 o'clock several thousand people were packed around the stand and hundreds were on their way to the depot. Jacob S. Farrand presided, the list of Vice Presidents including ex-Gov. Baldwin, ex-Mayor Moffatt, Gov. Bagley, James F. Joy, and over one hundred of the most prominent business men of Detroit and vicinity. Mr. Blaine was received with a storm of cheers, which lasted some minutes; and his two hours' address was interrupted by constant demonstrations of enthusiasm and approval. He pursued the general line of his more recent speeches in what he said here, which was exceedingly effective at all points. Over fifteen thousand people visited the depot during the meeting, hundreds of them failing to get within hearing distance, and at least five thousand being constantly massed about the stand. A large number of ladies were also in attendance, and a stream of people was steadily flowing to and returning from the depot during the afternoon.

This evening the Hayes and Wheeler Guard of Honor serenaded Mr. Blaine at the Russell House, where he is stopping, and his response was listened to by a crowd of several thousand people called together by the announcement that he would speak a second time. The demonstration of the day has been by far the most marked and important of the campaign. Mr. Blaine speaks with Vice President Ferry at Grand Rapids, in this State, on Monday next.

THOUSANDS OF REPUBLICAN TORCHES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Oct. 21.—A great torchlight procession and rally for the cause of Hayes and Wheeler took place on the public square in this city to-night. Several thousand torches and transparencies illumined the scene like day, and the throng of people which accompanied the procession was very great. Houses were decorated with the national colors along the line of march, and speeches were made by several distinguished gentlemen.

THE CONTEST IN NEW-YORK.

ALLEGANY AND CATTARAUGUS COUNTIES.

WHAT IS NEEDED IN A PORTION OF THE SOUTHERN TIER—A WARNING TO THE MANAGERS—THE WORK OF THE TILDENITES—HARD WORK NECESSARY BEFORE ELECTION—THE EFFECTS OF PREVIOUS BAD NOMINATIONS.

From Our Special Correspondent.

OLEAN, Thursday, Oct. 19, 1876.

Allegany, Cattaraugus, and Chautauqua, the three western counties of the "Southern tier," have been regarded as among the strongest of Republican strongholds, especially in a Presidential election, ever since the Republican Party had an existence. During the war either one of them could be depended on for a majority ranging from 2,500 to 4,000, and even since the war down to and including 1872, when the "Liberal" defection drew off so many from the Republican ticket in this section of the State, the lowest majority given by any one of the counties was 2,009, and that was cast by Cattaraugus. Since 1872 the majorities in all of them have been gradually falling off. Allegany has held her own the best of any, and Cattaraugus has done the worst. Last year the last-named county gave only 796 majority for Seward, and in 1874 it only gave 738 majority for Dix. It is perhaps needless at this time to inquire into the reasons for this great falling off in the Republican vote, but it may be summed up in one word—"bad nominations." The party in Cattaraugus and Chautauqua Counties, between the years 1868 and 1872, had become demoralized through the influence of half a dozen corrupt men, who controlled conventions and forced nominations which the people would not stand, and the Democratic Party got the benefit of it. For the last two or three years the nominations have been very respectable, but the party continues to suffer from the acts of these trading politicians after they have been driven from the field. Those things are recalled at this time because they furnish the explanation, which is given by every honest Republican I have met, of the gradual falling off of the party vote here, and because they will account for the reduced majorities that may be expected in November as compared with previous Presidential elections. Allegany County has not suffered so much from these causes, and this is the reason why she has held her own better than Cattaraugus and Chautauqua. An additional reason may be found in the fact that Allegany is especially noted for the high standard of intelligence that prevails among the mass of her voters, and the exceptionally moral and industrious character of her population. This county, I am assured, will fall very little below her usual Presidential majorities in November next. The lowest estimate made by the best informed Republicans is 2,800 majority for Hayes and Wheeler, and many put it at 3,000, and even 3,500. In 1872 she gave a majority for Grant of 3,169. There is not so active a canvass going on in Allegany as there ought to be, and the same may be said of all the Southern tier of counties that I have visited west of Chemung. The Republicans complain that they are not provided with first-class speakers by the State Committee, or (with two or three exceptions) with any speakers at all, and that they are unable to procure their attendance outside of the State Committee. Your correspondent has been asked a dozen times, all along the line from Binghamton to this place, to urge upon the State Committee the importance of sending more good speakers out this way. They feel confident that there is no section of the State where more votes would be gained by it, and no section outside of the large cities where better audiences would be drawn together. All agree that Republican meetings were never more fully attended than in this campaign, and there never was more anxiety manifested to listen to discussions of the issues of the canvass. The truth is that the "hard times" on which Tilden placed his sole reliance for success in this campaign, although it has utterly failed to produce the "tidal wave" that he anticipated in favor of the Democracy, has nevertheless caused an uneasy feeling among thousands of unemployed voters, who have hitherto been with the Republican Party; and nothing but fear of the fatal consequences of turning over the control of the Government to the late rebels and armed rifle clubs of the South prevents their falling in with the spurious clap-trap of the Democrats that a change of parties is going to bring about better times. All the Tilden tracts and documents (and they are sent here by the cart-load and placed in every man's hand) appeal to the pockets and the self-interest of the voters. The farmers are told that their taxes have been reduced, and are going to be still further reduced by Tilden, and the working men are assured that a vote for Tilden will furnish them all with immediate employment at the highest rate of wages. Nothing, or next to nothing, is being done to counteract these falsehoods in this section, either by speeches or tracts, and if nothing shall be done between now and election day Republicans need not be surprised if they find that the Democrats have made serious inroads upon their majorities.

But to recur to Allegany County. The lowest estimated majority for Hayes and Wheeler in this county, as before remarked, is 2,800. With less opportunities of judging, perhaps, than those who make this estimate, I would still prefer not to bet on more than 2,500. This would be a gain of 400 over last year. The county offices will, of course, all be filled by Republicans, who have made excellent nominations for each office. William H. Withey is their candidate for Sheriff and George Blackman for County Clerk. The Assemblyman will also be Republican, Hon. Summer Baldwin, the excellent member of last year, having been renominated by acclamation. The county will give Mr. Hungerford, the member of Congress, as large a majority as it gives the electoral ticket, and perhaps larger.

CATTARAUGUS COUNTY.

It has already been intimated that this county is in a bad way—comparatively speaking. It has not only reduced its Republican majority from 2,009 in 1872 (and nearly twice that majority in previous Presidential elections) to 796 last year, but, unlike Allegany and Chautauqua, the figures show that in all these years of reduced majorities it has polled very nearly its full vote. In fact, the vote last year was 200 larger than it was in 1872. The expectation, therefore, which may reasonably be indulged, in most cases, that a Presidential election, by bringing out a full vote will bring back the old majority, cannot be realized in this county. The shrewdest and best informed Republican in the county told me to-day that if Cattaraugus County preserved its majority of last year, (796,) it would be all he could expect. He said it would be easy to find Republicans who would prophesy a majority of 2,000, and he hoped they were right; but, looking at the facts as they are and not as he wished them to be, he could not predict any increase over 1875. This is the only county in the southern tier where the lookout is so unfavorable; for all the other counties show that in the "off years" the Republican vote has never been brought out. But even if Cattaraugus does no better than she did last year, the gains in the other counties of the southern tier, provided the estimates are right, (and I have always given the lowest estimates of the most inveterate croakers I could find,) will be sufficient to overbalance the highest majority given for any candidate on the Democratic ticket last Fall. There is nothing, therefore, in the condition of this county calculated to jeopardize a Republican victory in the State, though the majority may not be so large as is anticipated by some. There are two Assemblymen from this county, both of whom were Republican last year, and probably will be this, although the Democrats think they will elect their candidate from the First District. The Republicans have nominated a new man in this district, Dr. J. S. King, a very worthy candidate, but the district is close and was only carried last year by about 100 majority. In the Second District the Republicans have renominated Mr. Edward Shannon, of whose election there is no doubt. The candidate for Congress in this district, comprising Cattaraugus and Chautauqua Counties, will be elected by an overwhelming majority. Walter Sessions failed to carry the convention, fortunately for the party, and Hon. George W. Patterson, Lieutenant Governor under Hamilton Fish, was nominated. He will receive the vote of almost everybody in the district. The Democrats have gone through the formality of making a nomination against him in the person of a "wooden man" named James Freeland. They could not get anybody else to take it, and, if it were not absolutely certain that he has no chance of being elected, he would not get a half dozen votes from his own party. They hoped that Sessions would get the Republican nomination, in which case they were going to nominate Porter Sheldon, and would probably have elected him, but that game was blocked.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC REPUBLICAN MEETING IN SARATOGA—THE PROMULGATION OF INTELLIGENCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SARATOGA, Oct. 21.—One of the largest, most enthusiastic, and effective political meetings ever held in this place took place in the Town Hall last night. The large room was crowded, a good many ladies being present. Hon. A. H. Tenney spoke for about one hour and a half, presenting the commanding issues of the campaign in eloquent language and exciting the greatest enthusiasm. A good many of the more intelligent portion of the Democrats of the place were present. Mr. Tenney's fair presentation of the arguments of the canvass is doing much good. The great hope of the Republican Party is in the promulgation of intelligence among the people.

THE HAYES AND WHEELER CAMPAIGN IN DUTCHESS COUNTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PINE PLAINS, Oct. 21.—A large and enthusiastic out-door meeting was held in this town this afternoon, under the auspices of the Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club. The Stanford Gun Squad was present with a piece of artillery; also, a large number of Democrats. Eloquent and practical addresses were delivered by Col. T. B. Thorpe, of New-York City, and Harrison Hermance, Esq., of Rhinebeck. We hope to give a telling majority for Ketcham and the State and national tickets.

AN ASSEMBLY NOMINATION.

CARMEL, Oct. 21.—The Putnam County Republican Assembly Convention to-day nominated Hon. Hamilton Fish, Jr., for the Assembly.

COL. INGERSOLL IN CHICAGO.

MASS-MEETING OF REPUBLICANS—20,000 PERSONS ASSEMBLED TO HEAR THE ILLINOIS ORATOR—A PROCESSION OF 10,000 TORCHES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 21.—One of the most enthusiastic mass-meetings of the Republicans of this city was held this evening. It was, all will agree, one of the most stupendous gatherings in the history of Chicago. The occasion was the appearance of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, who opened here his oratorical campaign in this State, and whose reception was at once a testimonial to the esteem in which he is held and a positive evidence of the strength of popular political sentiment. The meeting was held in the Exposition Building, in which were gathered, according to most careful estimates, fully twenty thousand people, among whom were many ladies. Col. Ingersoll, in his remarks, covered much the same ground set forth in his Cooper Institute and other addresses. After the meeting all the Republican organizations here, with many from adjacent towns, joined in a torchlight procession through the principal thoroughfares. It is estimated there were fully ten thousand torches in line. Senator Blaine speaks here on the 28th inst.

THE SCOURGE OF CIVILIZATION.

From the London Telegraph.

The good people of the United States are celebrating, with all proper patriotic rejoicings and gratulations, the centenary of their national independence; and in a duly effusive, and, in some instances perhaps, a slightly too exuberant, manner the Old World has wished the New World joy of the remarkable kind of political and social liberty which for a hundred years she has enjoyed. Looking at the intensely harmonious nature of the festival which is being held at Philadelphia, he, indeed, would be a pickthank and a spoil-sport who would unwarrantably make any mention of Belshazzar, or venture to hint that any scrap of handwriting either in Syro-Chaldaic or any other Oriental language was visible on the walls of Fairmount Park. Still, while these young heroes are at their revels, while sports and gambols are the order of the day, and while the Alexander of manufacturing industry sits high enthroned in the Exhibition building, with the lovely Thais of fine art by his side, it might be permissible, and with no ungenerous intent, to whisper in the ear of the triumphant Columbia, "my cousin, you will one day become old." With the fiercest wrath would the imputation doubtless be met. America aging! There is not an original Gothic arch or a Tudor house from the Bay of Fundy to the Gulf of Mexico. The State growing old! Why, New-York has just blown up Hell Gate and now completely she has divorced herself from Old World superstitions. The highest born citizen in the States cannot trace his Transatlantic lineage further back than Pocahontas and the poor little Princess of Virginia was only contemporary with our Queen Bess. With all this the great Republic presents to the philosophic mind a number of unmistakable symptoms that age is creeping upon her, and that, notwithstanding the inexhaustible fertility of her resources and the indomitable vigor of her people, she is slowly but surely being called upon to pay that penalty which Fate exacts from long-established and highly-civilized communities. Among these signs and tokens there is not one, perhaps, more significant than the appearance in the States of a personage hitherto almost entirely unknown in Transatlantic economy, a creature undreamt of by Humboldt, uncontemplated by De Tocqueville, whose presence on Federal soil was certainly never reckoned upon by the Fathers of the Republic, Washington, Jefferson, and Adams. The objectionable but portentious being to whom we allude is that old and inveterate scourge of European civilization, the 'Tramp.'

THE WAR IN DAHOMEY.

LONDON, Oct. 21.—Advices from Cape Coast Castle to Oct. 5 announce that the Dahomians are threatening Grandpopo. They have taken two adjacent villages, killing all the men, and carrying off eighty women and children.

RECEPTION TO MR. SCHURZ.

BY THE UNION LEAGUE CLUB.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC OVATION TO THE WESTERN ORATOR—INTRODUCTORY SPEECH BY HON. NOAH DAVIS—THE GUEST OF THE EVENING MAKES AN ADDRESS ON THE ISSUES OF THE CAMPAIGN—MORE ESPECIALLY ON THE SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

The Union League Club, of this City, gave an informal reception to Hon. Carl Schurz last evening. A large number of prominent gentlemen were present, completely filling up the Club theatre, among whom were the following: Ex-Postmaster General Jewell, Rev. Dr. Bellows, Elliot C. Cowdin, Joseph Seligman, Salem H. Wales, George Jones, N. P. Bailey, W. H. Lee, Thurlow Weed, Chas. W. Watrous, William Borden, John C. Hamilton, H. G. Stebbins, Isaac Sherman, Ellwood E. Thorne, J. H. Van Alen, A. Bierdstadt, Jesse Seligman, J. M. Bundy, F. D. Tappan, Daniel F. Appleton, D. W. C. Wheeler, G. M. Van Nort, Police Commissioner Erhardt, Chauncey M. Depew, Charles W. Tiffany, Thomas C. Acton, Charles W. Hill, George W. Blunt, Sinclair Tousey, Benjamin K. Phelps, John D. Lawson, Assistant District Attorney Lyons, Rev. Dr. Tyng, Jr., and Ethan Allen. At 8:30 o'clock Mr. Schurz entered the theatre and was escorted to the stage by Judge Noah Davis, the presiding officer for the evening, Salem H. Wales, and Joseph H. Seligman. Judge Davis immediately called the meeting to order and spoke as follows:

ADDRESS OF JUDGE NOAH DAVIS.

GENTLEMEN OF THE CLUB: In the absence of the President I have been invited to preside to-night. This is an extraordinary meeting, called for a special purpose. None of the ordinary business of the club will be brought to your notice. We are called together to listen to an address from the distinguished gentlemen on my right, a gentleman who has been laboriously employed throughout the canvass, and who comes to you wearied with his toil. He tells me that he does not feel able to occupy much time this evening, and I have been asked to make a few introductory remarks. What I shall say is wholly unprepared. We are on the eve of the most important election of this half-century. South Carolina is casting the horoscope of the future of this country, if, perchance, the Democracy succeeds; for nothing is more certain than that with a solid South we shall see the Democratic minority of the North more obedient to Southern behests than that Democratic minority which disgraced us in the days of Buchanan and Pierce. There is but one means of safety for the country; it is the success of the Republican Party. If you fail to recognize this fact you will set adrift, without the possibility of anchoring on the only sound ground, the finances of this country for a period of time which no man can measure. To my mind reform depends more upon the restoration of specie payment than upon any other thing. Give us gold as the basis of our money and we shall have economy, not only in the administration of the Federal and State Governments, but in the affairs of individual life. Give us gold and we shall set up a barrier against the payment of those immense Southern claims which are pressing upon the consideration of Congress. The success of our endeavors to place this barrier depends altogether upon the success of the Republican Party. Tilden has already yielded to the influences which have been brought to bear upon him. What faith can we have in that man who placed his signature to that bill of our Legislature fixing a date for the resumption of specie payment and who has since placed himself on record in direct opposition to his former action. Tilden in his letter of acceptance virtually declares the result of the repeal of the Resumption act would be to establish greenbacks as the legal tender of the country and to drive gold back from being a legal tender into a commodity. To repeal that clause of the Resumption act fixing the date for the resumption would be virtually to emasculate the statute. But I have talked too much already. I have not made a political speech before for years, but I feel that we are among ourselves; that I am, so to speak, in the bosom of my family. I will not detain you long, however, but to rouse our suspicions. They nominated for the Presidency a hard-money man, Gov. Tilden, and they nominated for the Vice-Presidency, the chief of the soft-money men, Gov. Hendricks. That was a thing which never was done in the whole history of the United States by any political party, nominating one candidate as the representative of one principle, and nominating the other candidate as the representative of the opposite principle. It is virtually selling the people of the United States—Do you want hard money? There we give you a draught of Tilden. Do you want soft money? There you have as much Hendricks as you can possibly stand. Those gentlemen are the candidates of the Democratic Party at the present moment. The letter of acceptance of Gov. Tilden has caused naturally a great deal of sensation. Much was expected of him, and I think in point of quantity he gave us so much that all expectation was exceeded. [Laughter.] There was a mountain of words before us which it required the best mining talent in the country to get the sense of; but unfortunately, when you come to sift it, you find in a hard-money letter of acceptance almost every phrase that occurred in the soft-money platform of Ohio last year. What was the result? I speak from my own experience of facts; and all the soft-money leaders of the last election. Your Pendletons, Ewings, and others swore at once that the financial principles of Tilden and their own did not differ in the least; that he had gone over to them body and soul, and that in fact fighting for Tilden, they were only renewing the fight in which they were beaten last year. The fact is that Gov. Tilden carried on a very violent flirtation with the soft-money interest in the West, and the old bachelor, I am afraid, is getting himself into a decided case of bigamy. On the one hand there are the soft-money men West, and on the other hand the hard-money men of the East, and I tell you there will be a mighty deal of trouble in the household if the Democratic Party should win. The worst feature of the whole thing is this, however—that, being beaten last year, the soft-money movement in the West has received so much encouragement from recent events this year that at the present moment it is stronger than ever before. You see it reorganized on the whole line, and everywhere you hear the signal of strife, and wherever the Democracy sees a chance of electing a soft-money man to Congress you may be sure that it is giving such a one the nomination. What will be the inevitable consequence? You know that the spirit of the campaign in one State reacts upon the spirit of the campaign in the others. If you in New-York show any favor to the Democracy, that favor will be an encouragement to all Democratic movements in the Western States. Give to the Democratic Party a sweeping victory here and you will have a stronger soft money majority in the House of Representatives than ever before. Give it only a moderate victory and you will give at least to the soft-money men a large majority in the Democratic caucus of the House of Representatives, and that caucus will govern the policy of the organization. Now I appeal to your common sense—is it possible that you should expect from such a party a sound financial policy, that policy which you must have in order to revive confidence, in order to render possible safe business calculations, and thereby restore your trade, your commerce, and your prosperity? I think it is absolutely unnecessary for me to speak any longer upon this subject. A Democratic victory has for you but one meaning; it means several years more of that uncertainty which is now crippling business, which is depressing our industries, which has been closing our factories, which has put a great many of our working men adrift. Four years more of that want of confidence which stands now in the way of all honest business, four years more of that depression of your industries, in fact four years more of dull and hard times. And surely there is no business community in the world whose interests will be more seriously affected by such a condition of things than your own. Now I would ask you is it not worth your while to strain every nerve to prevent such a deplorable development? I have heard it said that there is backwardness among the substantial business men of New-York with regard to this campaign. I can scarcely believe it, for never have their material interests been more plainly at stake than at the present moment; and not only with regard to the financial question, but also with regard to the questions of economy and retrenchment.

THE SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

It has frequently been said by Democrats that in the question of Southern claims there is nothing but a mere partisan cry. Gentlemen, it is my sober conviction that there is much in it, and I will tell you why. I believe so. The South has been impoverished by the war, and in conversation with Southern men myself I have found this to be their idea: You of the North have controlled the Government alone since the war; you have taken out of the public treasury of millions of dollars to subsidize steam-boat lines. You have granted away millions of acres for railroads to establish your lines of communication. You have spent untold sums of money on internal improvements, and while you did this we in the South were exposed to all the ravages of the war, and out of which we have come in an impoverished condition. Now, they say there is nothing fairer in the world than that we should have the same advantages, so as to get even. Gentlemen, you converse with almost every Southern man on this subject, and if he does not tell you this before the election, he will be candid enough to say so after, if the Democratic candidate is elected. What does that mean? We have discovered in the course of time that the policy of granting railroad grants and subsidizing this and that private enterprise was exceedingly costly, without conferring a corresponding public benefit. Therefore, that policy has to a great extent been abandoned; but I predict in case of a Democratic victory that that policy will be renewed and carried on to a more extravagant extent by that party when it becomes the controlling power. That is one point. The second point is this: While I was in the Senate and ever since a large number of bills were introduced there aiming at the refunding of the cotton tax. You are all aware that during the war we paid hundreds upon hundreds of millions of taxes for the purpose of keeping our Government alive and our armies going. We did that having been forced into a war by the rebel States, a war that cost 500,000 precious lives and thousands of millions of dollars. During that whole time the South contributed almost nothing to the public treasury. There is only one considerable item of tax that was levied upon the Southern people, and that was the cotton tax, some sixty-eight million dollars or over. Now they demand a restitution of that tax, as it is proposed by some not to the individuals by whom the tax was paid but to the Southern States as such. I am a man of very generous disposition with regard to the South. I thought that when the war was closed the Southern people who had been in revolt would again become peaceable and law-abiding citizens, and that generosity was not only a duty, but an act of wisdom and justice. And so I have been one of the first to advocate a policy of general amnesty and of the complete removal of all those political disabilities which in consequence of the rebellion had been imposed upon a large number of Southern people. In general I advocated a policy of generosity and reconciliation; I am willing to be as generous to them as anybody, but when, after having forced us into so terrible a war—a war that came near destroying the very life of this great republic—a war that has covered the land with mourning, and put such terrible burdens upon our people—when, after such a war, having contributed this little mite to the sustenance of this great fabric of our institution, they demand that we should refund every cent of it, I think it is a little too much. And yet you gropingly asked—you, the possessors of the wealth of this country—to put your hands into your pockets so that $63,000,000 be given back. I tell you, gentlemen, it is my honest conviction, should the Democratic Party come into power again, they will inevitably return to the South every cent of that money which was contributed to the National Treasury in the cotton interest, with interest too. I tell you candidly I fear that the Democratic Party will be exceedingly generous to their Southern friends in the way of putting money into their pockets.

THE SOUTH WILL CONTROL THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

It has frequently been said that no Northern Democrat after voting for such a bill will be able to come before his constituency. Is that true? Don't we see things which under ordinary circumstances would be deemed incredible? The South is now a compact unit again in the Democratic Party. At least the Democratic Party wants to fight us, and in case of a Democratic victory the South will not only be solidly Democratic, but it will also remain so for an interminable time. Let me say to you, I would look upon that as a great national misfortune, for when, in a Republic, political parties are divided by geographical and sectional lines, it will create an unsound and unpatriotic public sentiment; and if it were for that reason alone, I think there would be some impulse of patriotism moving almost every one to fight against the Democratic Party this Fall. [Applause.] But that is not the point I want to discuss. I say the Democratic Party wants to unite the South once more as a solid unit upon its side. In that case the Southern people will hold the majority of the Democratic Party and direct its purposes. That majority of votes will necessarily, as before the war, give them the control of the party; they will fall at once again into their old seat of power, and holding the preponderance of influence in the Democratic Party the South will necessarily insist upon dictating the nominations for the Presidency and Vice Presidency in that organization. In other words, just as it was before our great civil conflict, no Northern Democrat will have the least chance for the Presidency or Vice Presidency unless he enjoys the decided favor of the Southern Democracy. What will be the consequence of this? Why it is evident. Every Northern Congressman who thinks that there is some Presidential stuff in him, that a Presidential lightning may strike him sometime, will be very much inclined to do that which will be surest to gain him the favor of his Southern brethren. So it is evident that not only a few but a large number of Northern Democrats, impelled by their ambition and, I am sorry to say, also impelled by those unpatriotic ideas that seem to be indigenous to the Democratic mind by the influence of subservicncy to Southern dictation, will vote for just such bills as have been laid before you by Republican speakers. So I believe that a Democratic Administration will, by the very necessities of the case, be one of the most extravagant administrations this country ever had. There is still another reason why this will be so. The Southern people, being the preponderating power in the councils of the Democratic Party, will also dictate its financial policy. The Southern people stand now compared with us in the position of poor relations. In other words, they being comparatively poor, and the North comparatively rich, the North will pay the great mass of taxes and the South will pay comparatively little. The necessary consequence is that those who pay very little don't feel the burden of an extravagant Government, and will therefore always be in favor of spending as much money as possible. You have an illustration of this in the City of New-York. A very large number of your voters are nontax-payers, a minority of your voters are wealthy tax-payers; the non-tax-payers do not care a snap of their fingers how much money is spent by the City Government, and, therefore, you have always a lavish administration. Is not that so? Then the same relation will be borne by the South to the North as to our national councils, and, therefore, I repeat it is by the very necessity of the case that a Democratic Administration, governed as it must be by Southern influence, will be a most extravagant one. [Applause.]

THE QUESTION OF NATIONAL PEACE.

There is still one other thing I would call your attention to, and that is the question of national peace. I do not mean to repeat what I said of my action with regard to the Southern people, and the impulse of generosity which I have always followed. Of course I did: that with the expectation that satisfactory response would be elicited from the other side. We gave them back their rights with a lavish hand; we gave them back their rights shortly after the rebellion that I can only repeat what I have said before, that the generosity of the American people has never been equaled by any other nation in the world in that respect. We did it with the just expectation, or at least the reasonable expectation, that the Southern people, receiving their rights at our hand, might be content upon to respect also the rights of others. I am sorry to say that that expectation has been in a great measure disappointed. When you look at the State of South Carolina you will not deny that the situation of things is exceedingly serious. I am the very last man in the country who would approve of the presence of troops in the neighborhood of the ballot-box, and I would stand by to the last in the endeavor to secure to every man the right to vote uninfluenced by force of any kind. But as things now stand, if the United States troops are withdrawn we are pretty sure to have another armed force in its place, and that is the rifle clubs of the South Carolina Reform Democracy. I believe to reform, gentlemen, but I do not believe in the reform of the rifle and the revolver in the hands of a terrorist. Now, then, they may succeed possibly in subjugating Republican majorities, but, one thing I look upon as perfectly sure—we have come to the settlement of the questions growing out of the war by debating certain constitutional provisions. These constitutional provisions may for the time being be overridden in this or that State, but if the attempt is made,—which I look for almost as inevitable in the event of a Democratic victory—if the attempt is made to nullify them in the whole extent of the Southern country, I am sure that the loyal people of the United States of America will not submit to it. [Applause.] If the attempt be made upon such an issue between the North and the South, the solid South on one side will find a solid North on the other side; and liberal and generous as I may be when the question is between a solid North and a solid South, I am on the side of the North all the time. [Applause.] I am on the side of the North not because I happen to live here, but because I believe that the North contains the intellectual as well as the moral vitality of the American Republic as it is now constituted. New, gentlemen, looking at the attempts that are being made in the South, can anybody doubt that they would be greatly encouraged by a victory of the Democratic Party? I am sorry I am obliged to say it, but still that party stands in the politics of the country as a continual threat of reaction against the results of the war; and it is my conviction at the present moment that the candidates of the Republican Party are not only the best, but they are the only instruments by which the true interests of the American people can be promoted. [Applause.]

THE ISSUE IN NEW-YORK STATE.

Now, gentlemen, it seems to me that the decision in this great contest will be given by the State of New-York; in fact I hope it will be given by the State of New-York, for I should consider it a national misfortune if the issue of the pending Presidential contest should depend upon such a commonwealth as South Carolina in its present condition. We should strain every nerve to make the State of New-York give us that decision in the right direction. Where New-York goes this time, there the Union goes. Then, my fellow-citizens of New-York, I speak to you as a citizen of the West, and it is not a mere figure of speech to say that the eyes of the country are turned upon you at the present moment. Let me impress it upon you, as a New-York that can give us specie payments and a sound financial policy. It is New-York that can elect the President, and give us that thing so devoutly to be wished for—a thorough reform in the civil service. It is New-York that can give us a Government the very existence of which will convince every man in the length and breadth of this land of the utter futility of any other attempt to overthrow the constitutional results of the war, but which, at the same time, will convince every citizen of the Southern States that all the legitimate influences of the General Government will be employed to secure to them a wise, honest, frugal administration of their local affairs. It is New-York thus that can give us a Government which will restore peace throughout the United States. Then, gentlemen, you who wield such great power in this mighty State, let me not appeal to you in vain that every one from now until the day of election will do his whole duty, for if you do, certainly then the banner will be carried on directly to the National Capitol upon which is inscribed honest money, true reform, good government, Edwin D. Morgan, and Rutherford B. Hayes. [Cheers.]

A VOTE OF THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT.

After the applause which followed Mr. Schurz's address, Mr. John C. Hamilton rose and said that he felt that it was his duty as a loyal man to offer some resolutions, which he would read, and he thought it was equally the duty of the association, as made up of loyal men, to adopt them. He read as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of this association be presented to the illustrious President of the United States for his earnest efforts in obedience to the Constitution of the United States, and to the laws enacted in pursuance thereof, to protect the state of South Carolina from domestic violence, and to secure to the citizens thereof the free exercise of the rights of suffrage.

Resolved, That the thanks of this association be presented to the loyal press of this country for its able and manly vindication of law and liberty, from the abuses of sectional influences and partisan corruption.

The resolutions were warmly received and unanimously passed. The meeting was then adjourned, and the gentlemen were invited to spend an hour or two socially with Mr. Schurz, in the parlors.

AFFAIRS AT UNION COLLEGE.

A HISTORICAL SKETCH PREPARED—MANY IMPROVEMENTS MADE—RELIGIOUS PROCLIVITIES OF THE STUDENTS.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

UNION COLLEGE, SCHENECTADY, N. Y., Saturday, Oct. 14, 1876.

Among the interesting and valuable educational productions in connection with the Centennial year and Exposition, is a historical sketch of Union College, prepared at the request of the National Commissioner of our Bureau of Education, with a view of serving as a model for like sketches from all our higher institutions of learning, so that this noted year may not pass by without the means of summing up the results of our work in this line since we became a nation. It is very rich in details of this old institution, and has been taken home, as we know, by several of the foreign Commissioners, and distributed by the bureau to our principal colleges.

The college itself will soon celebrate its own centennial, as it was the first one founded in the State under the new era of liberty after the close of the varied turmoils of the Revolution. It has just started off on another year with fair prospects and a goodly number of students, there having been between sixty and seventy new entrances. During the vacation many little improvements have been made in recitation-rooms and dormitories, and the institution is now fully equipped to do good work.

The library has received a large accession of valuable books, amounting to about three thousand, mainly in the field of mathematics, physics, theology, and metaphysics. There has also been established in connection with it a reading-room, open at all reasonable hours, for the use of the students, either to consult books of reference or read the home and foreign magazines and journals.

The patronizing territory of the college is largely on the increase, as is proved by the distant homes of many of the students, who are registered from far and near, and especially from the South—there are now in attendance some thirty or more from the extreme Southern States.

The religious proclivities of the students is rather a curiosity for an American college. The founders of Union gave it that name as indicative of their desire to make it a retreat for all religious denominations, without being specially patronized or supported by any. And the register now enumerates Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Methodists, Baptists, Reformed, Lutheran, Congregational, Catholics, and Israelites, and they all seem to get along quite harmoniously together.

The work for the year is now fairly under way, and Faculty and students are all on hand. The institution provides for classical and scientific instruction, beside the practical departments of civil engineering and the chemical laboratory. The collections for the department of natural history are being continually enlarged—there were some additions during the last summer—and the cabinets now contain some very rare and valuable specimens.

In the department of experimental philosophy the new apparatus recently arrived from Europe is in some respects without an equal in this country, being the best and most valuable of the foreign makers.

For the last few years the entrance examinations have been gradually raised so that the requirements now all that our preparatory schools can stand, and are in general harmony with the first collegiate institutions of the country.

The new military department established a few years ago by the Government still holds its own and gives general satisfaction. It is clearly worth all it costs either to the Government or the college in teaching military science and enforcing physical culture in the matter of drill.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE SIXTH WARD MURDER.

PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATION INTO THE CASE BY CORONER WOLTMAN—THE PRISONER DENIES HAVING STABBED HIS VICTIM.

The body of John A. Kelly, the latest victim of the Chinaman Quimbo Appo, was viewed yesterday morning at the Sixth Precinct Station-house by a jury summoned by Coroner Woltman. An autopsy of the body, previously made by Dr. Cushman, resulted in the finding of four incised wounds, one of which entered the heart, and must have produced almost instant death. A second was on the left arm, three inches long and two and a half inches in depth. Another severed an artery in the same arm, and was also several inches deep.

After the formality of receiving the body had been complied with, Appo was committed to the Tombs by the Coroner to await the result of the inquest, which will be held during the present week. When questioned by the Coroner the prisoner denied having used a knife while defending himself from the assault of Kelly. He stated that after playing at draughts with several of the inmates of the Home lodging house he retired about midnight to his cot on the third floor. Shortly after retiring he was followed by Kelly, who called him vile names, and having violently pulled him out of the cot, struck him several times without cause. He ran down stairs, and being followed by Kelly, turned and struck him with his fists.

When arraigned at the Tombs Police Court in the morning the prisoner refused to make any statement concerning the affray. One of the witnesses, Charles Hamilton, the night clerk of the lodging house, made the following statement: Last night between 12 and 1 o'clock, I heard a scuffling and fighting on the second floor above the one where I was at the time; I went to the stairs and found John A. Kelly and Quimbo Appo; they had hold of each other; I took hold of Kelly and tried to pull him away; he pushed me away and struck Quimbo, who fell down stairs; I seized Kelly again; he broke from me and ran down stairs; when I reached the floor below Quimbo was sitting upon a settee; Kelly went to him again and struck him with his fist; Quimbo then got up and went toward the rear of the room; Kelly followed him, striking him four or five blows; Quimbo then turned upon Kelly, who retreated, and while retreating Quimbo made several passes with his hand at Kelly as though he had something in his hand; at the second or third pass of Quimbo's hand Kelly threw up his hands above his head and cried out, "My God! I am stabbed," or "cut;" I am not positive as to which of the latter terms he used; subsequently I saw a wound on the breast, another on the arm, and another in the left shoulder of Kelly; the wounds were inflicted I believe with intent by Quimbo Appo to take the life of Kelly or to do him bodily harm. The other witnesses detained by Capt. Lowery, John Morse, No. 3 Madison street, and Mortimer Wood, Ferd. Saylor, and Isaac Dodge, inmates of the lodging house, knew very little of the circumstances, but were nevertheless sent to the House of Detention.

Quimbo Appo, whose deeds of violence during a residence of thirty years in this City have been numerous and bloody, is fifty-five years of age, below medium stature, and slightly built. He is rather intelligent and speaks English well. He was born at Chusan, China, from which place he emigrated to San Francisco at the age of seventeen. Soon after his arrival he obtained employment as Captain's cook and steward on the United States sloop-of-war Vandalia, and subsequently was engaged as a sort of walking advertisement for a Boston tea store. He came to New-York in 1848, and three years later married an Irish widow, with whom he lived at No. 49 Oliver street. While in that house he brutally murdered a woman named Mary Fletcher, under the following circumstances: Being jealous of his wife, he frequently quarreled with her, and on March 8, 1859, maltreated her to such an extent that she sought refuge with Mary Fletcher, who occupied rooms in the same house with Mary Gafney and Margaret Butler. He then went out, and purchasing a large-bladed knife reentered the house, and, encountering his wife on one of the landings, immediately assaulted her. Mary Fletcher and her two room-mates interfered to protect her, but the Chinaman turned upon them and stabbed the woman Fletcher in the left breast, killing her instantly. He then stabbed Mary Gafney in the left arm and Margaret Butler on the head, inflicting dangerous wounds in both cases. He then escaped and secreted himself in a Chinese den near by, where he was soon after arrested. He was tried a few weeks later and sentenced to be hanged. The following year judgment was reversed and a new trial granted. This resulted in his being sentenced to imprisonment for life. Through the interposition of some kindhearted ladies whose sympathy he managed to excite in his behalf, his sentence was commuted to ten years, seven years and nine months of which he served under the Commutation law, which allowed a diminution of time for good behavior. When he returned to the City he hired the attic of a house in Donovan's lane, a loathsome alley opposite No. 15 Baxter streets where he became acquainted with a disreputable woman named Kate Burk. A companion of this woman one night robbed him of a small sum of money in a liquor store, and was in consequence violently assaulted with a pitcher by the Chinaman, who was arrested and imprisoned for a brief period. On Sept. 23, 1871, he nearly brained an Italian boy named Joseph Lincarto with a paving stone, and for that offense he was sentenced to five years in Sing Sing, but only served three years and nine months under the Commutation act. On Sept. 20, 1875, he was sent to the Penitentiary for six months for maltreating Eliza Nahering, in Mott street. He was subsequently arrested for attempting to sell unstamped cigars, and is now under bail for that offense.

John A. Kelly, the man who was killed on Friday night, was thirty years of age, and although a dissolute character, was a member of a respectable family living at No. 199 Mulberry street. He was a machinist by trade.

THE CROTON WATER SUPPLY.

CHIEF ENGINEER CAMPBELL HAS NO APPREHENSIONS OF A FAMINE—CONDITION OF THE LAKES IN PUTNAM COUNTY.

In view of the order issued by Superintendent Walling on Friday last, at the request of the Commissioner of Public Works, requiring the Police Captains to use every precaution to prevent any waste of Croton water in their several precincts, a TIMES reporter called on Mr. John C. Campbell, Chief Engineer of the Department of Public Works, to inquire into the present condition of the sources from which the water is obtained. Mr. Campbell said that a drought like the one which had now lasted so long has not occurred within the last fifty years. The order in question had been issued with a view to prevent, so far as was possible, any unnecessary waste of water, as it was well known that in many places taps were left running day and night when there was no occasion for it. Although he entertained no apprehensions of a water famine the department was now being put to considerable expense and trouble in obtaining a sufficient supply, and, under the circumstances, it was considered proper to be as economical as possible in the use of the water. With three or four days of heavy rain the lakes and reservoirs would fill up and a full supply could be again furnished to the City. As it was the department made it a point to keep on hand sufficient water to last the City from ten to fourteen days. To do this the water of a number of ponds had been purchased and they were in treaty for that of several more. Should it become necessary lakes from which water had already been drawn to the level of the present flumes would be tapped again. There was no fear that the City would suffer for water, and all the department wanted was that the citizens should understand the necessity for strict economy in its use until a further supply was obtained.

A tour through Putnam County, the region in which the lakes from which the Croton water is obtained, was made by a reporter of THE TIMES yesterday. Lake Gilead, a beautiful sheet of water of about 120 acres in extent, lying on the top of a mountain, and distant three miles from Brewster's Station on the Harlem road, was first visited. From this lake, the reporter was told, fourteen feet of water had already been drawn, and that an attempt would be made to draw still more by deepening the outlet. Persons owning property adjoining the lake were much opposed to the measure, and intended to take steps at the next session of the Legislature to prevent any further withdrawal of the water. Lake Glenelda, situated about four miles from Brewster's, and just below the village of Carmel, was next visited. It is about one hundred and fifty acres in extent, and it is said that about three feet of water have been drawn from it during the present drought, and that a still further draw will be made upon it. The residents of the village are very much opposed to having any more water drawn from this source, and threaten to obtain an injunction if it be attempted. Lake Mahopac, fifty acres in extent, and about four miles from Brewster's, was visited. It is said that only a few inches of water can be drawn from this lake, as it is the source of the Croton River. Lake Mahopac, the reporter was told, has been depleted to the extent of four feet eight inches more than the law allows, and workmen are now engaged in deepening the outlet, in order that two feet more of the water may be drawn. At one point on the lake shore, where the waters have receded, the vegetable matter left exposed emits an offensive odor, which may prove detrimental to health. A new dam and reservoir are in course of construction at a point on the New-York and Harlem Railroads, about six miles from Lake Mahopac. This will have a capacity of about one-fourth more than the reservoir at Boyd's Corners, but it can afford no relief in the present emergency as it will not be completed until the Fall of 1877.

SEIZURE OF AN ILLICIT STILL.

A LARGE CONCERN ON THE WEST SIDE DESTROYED—A VEGETABLE GARDEN THE COVER FOR THE WHOLESALE MANUFACTURE OF SPIRITS.

Late on Friday evening, Deputy Collectors Lawrence Beattie, S. A. Yonmans and Robert Latta, assisted by a posse of Deputy United States Marshals, made a descent on an illicit still in the open block, bounded by Eleventh and Twelfth avenues and Seventieth and Seventy second streets. Though but little removed from the heart of the City, the streets at this point are not cut through, and the block above described, about six acres in extent, is cultivated as a vegetable garden. To the passerby, there could only be observed a modest dwelling-house and barn, and the general appearance of a prosperous farm. But in the barn, upon the descent of the officers, a still of unward of 500 gallons daily capacity was found in full operation. The ground floor was used for the still and worms and mash tubs were placed in the basement. The latter contained about twenty-five hundred gallons of mash, which was destroyed, as well as all the distilling apparatus on the floor above. Two barrels of rum were seized and removed. It was evident from the extent of the premises that several persons were employed about them, but with a single exception all escaped, and this with ease as was afterward explained. There is no cover to the approaches to the place and warning was easily had of the coming of the officers. Still no one was seen to leave, and upon their arrival the only person found was one Frederick Joseph, who was in the act of locking the entrance to the still. Passing into the basement, however, the escape of the others was easily explained, as the officers there found a tunnel upward of one hundred and fifty feet in length, leading into Seventy-second street, the lower gate of which had been forced open. As usual in such cases, upon the destruction of the still, seizure was made of the entire premises, including horses, cows, and other live stock, and two wagons, amounting in personal property to about five thousand dollars. As yet the owner of the property is unknown, but is said to be occupied by one Garrett Dreyer. Joseph was taken before United States Commissioner Shields yesterday, and held in $1,000 bail for examination. Before the Commissioner he denied any connection whatever with the still, stating that he was employed on the premises as a laborer. That part of the barn where the still was found, he said, had been rented about ten days ago, to whom he did not know. As far as he was concerned, he did not know how whisky was made. He admitted, however, that he had seen wagons going to and from the place during the nighttime. Should it be found that the owners of the property in question are connected with the still, the seizure will prove a most valuable one.

THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

ALDERMAN PURROY'S ATTACK ON CONTROLLER GREEN—THE WATER SUPPLY.

In the Board of Aldermen yesterday, communications were received from the Clerks of the Common Pleas and Marine Courts in response to a resolution offered by Mr. Purroy and passed at a previous meeting, requesting these officials to furnish a list of all judgments obtained against the City since Mr. Green became Controller. It will be remembered that Aldermen Morris and Hess desired to have the suits won by the City incorporated in the list, but the proposition was rejected by a strict Tammany vote in the board. The communications contained a list of all the cases which have been published from time to time in the quarterly reports of the Finance Department and in the City Record.

Alderman Purroy, however, moved that 500 copies of them be published in pamphlet form.

Alderman Bryan Reilly hoped not. He said that the communications would be printed in the City Record, and would receive sufficient publicity there.

Alderman Morris remarked that if they were published in the City Record the people would have an opportunity of seeing how carefully Mr. Green guarded the City Treasury.

Alderman Howland thought that it was very unfair to omit from the list the cases won by the City, cases in which very large amounts have been saved.

Alderman Purroy replied that if Mr. Green saved in one case he had no right to lose in another, and he would therefore oppose getting further information on the subject.

The motion to print the communications in document form was then adopted, all the Tammany members voting for it, and the Republicans, with Bryan Reilly, Anti-Tammany, voting against it.

The resolution of Alderman Morris, offered at a previous meeting, requesting the Commissioner of Public Works to decide whether a sufficient quantity of water can be supplied to the City by means of new iron pipes, which would save the expense of a new aqueduct, was adopted. A resolution was also adopted requesting the Corporation Counsel to report what action he has taken in regard to preparing a memorial to the Legislature praying for the passage of an act authorizing the construction of an additional aqueduct or other appliances, in order to afford the City a sufficient supply of water, as directed by the Common Council.

The Board then agreed to visit the Centennial Exposition on the 26th inst., the day selected for the same purpose by the New York Produce Exchange.

A resolution was adopted requesting the Commissioner of Public Works to state by what authority the Municipal Gas Company is displacing the pavements on Sixth avenue, Broadway, and other streets.

TILDEN'S PERJURY.

FURTHER EXTRACTS SHOWING HOW WIDELY HE IS CONDEMNED BY THE PRESS.

From the Titusville (Penn.) Herald.

A charge which, if proven in court, would, but for the statute of limitations, send Mr. Tilden to State Prison, is not one to be properly left out of sight when Mr. Tilden is asking to be sent to the White House.

From the Portland Oregonian.

A case that requires so much special pleading is certainly not a very promising one. A case whose defenders thus shuffle and prevaricate and contradict each other, is a case that depends not upon truth for its defense.

From the Dubuque (Iowa) Times.

What a spectacle does the Democratic candidate for President present to the world! Already under suit on charge of embezzlement of hundreds of thousands, and now charged with swindling the revenues, and the commission of the crime of perjury to hide it, and soon to be prosecuted for a recovery of his lawful dues! Self-respecting Democrats must feel that the situation is painfully awkward.

From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

It was intimated that the attempted explanation made of Tilden's income-tax peculations by Judge Sinnott would be followed by still more elucidation of ways that seemed queer. But nothing has been presented further in defense of the damaged candidate. Meanwhile THE NEW-YORK TIMES pursues the matter as zealously as ever, and lastens charges upon Tilden from which there is no escape. It gives items of income which the unpatriotic man purposely concealed, and shows that all those years Tilden's conduct was such as must be condemned as swindling by those who call things by their right names.

From the Davenport (Iowa) Gazette.

It is to be remembered that these statements are given and these charges made on the responsibility of a leading and entirely reliable newspaper, and in the city of Mr. Tilden's own head-quarters and home. The Times boldly presents this charge that Mr. Tilden received $30,000 in 1863 as income for which he made no return, and challenges Mr. Tilden or his friends to meet this as "a test case." Such a charge, thus presented and thus challenging investigation, is not one to be lightly disposed of. It is worth while always to keep in mind in this connection that Mr. Tilden has himself invited just these kind of questions as to his own integrity by his wholesale charges of corruption and fraud upon Republicans in public life. A man who so recklessly assails the integrity of others should have a personal record beyond reproach in the light of the noonday sun.

From the Washington Chronicle.

Now, it is well known that the people like to have good examples followed. And there need be no mystery about the matter. Who can tell how many of the Democratic friends of Mr. Tilden may take warning, and pay rather than be brought into court? Who can tell whether the entire Democratic Party, including the "solid South," may not secretly combine to enable Mr. Tilden to act justly, and induce him to draw his check for the tax he owes, and take the case of the Democratic candidate for the Presidency out of the hands of the District Attorney, who would otherwise, as sure as Mr. Tilden's fate is to be defeated, bring suit against him as a delinquent that the court may deal with him and direct the money to be paid. Under any circumstances, it would not look well for a Democratic Presidential aspirant and reformer to stand up in court and confess that at that supreme moment of his life he had defrauded the revenue. Mr. Tilden had better pay the money.

CENTENNIAL CASH.

THE HALVES AND QUARTERS OF THE SHOW.

WORKING THE TURNSTILES—THE GATE-KEEPERS—THE MONEY BOXES—THE METHOD OF CHECKS—HOW PEOPLE COME IN—FOOTING UP THE RECEIPTS—THE CENTENNIAL BANK—ITS MANAGEMENT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, Oct. 20, 1876.

Total admissions of every kind to the biggest show the world has ever seen, men, women, and children in arms included, up to the closing of the gates on Oct. 19, was 7,620,213. Of course, babies do not count, but it is quite likely that these little people would have made over half a million more. Total amount received from admissions for the same period, $2,914,136 24. The twenty-four cents is strange, I must confess, in looking at these big figures, the 4 cents, which ought to have been an 0 or a 5 cents, puzzled me. As Mr. Clements, in a late speech, told how Gen. Hawley took in at the Centennial gates, all by himself on a certain day, some cart-loads of money, and didn't filch anything, of course the General should be held responsible for the odd change, and I may probably call on him some time or other in regard to this missing penny.

It may be curious to know how the innumerable half dollars and quarters have been collected, and the methods devised for checking and controlling these enormous receipts. Such devices as may have been employed must have been quite thorough and of an ingenious character, with mechanical and human restraints. I think that the general public ought to know that a great deal of the excellent management of this most important portion of the Exhibition is due to Col. David G. Yates, who as general manager has devoted himself to this particular branch of service. Between Mr. Barnum's Hippodrome and the many halves and quarters he takes in, and the sparse ten cents handed in by the gobe-mouches, who invest in a stare at the peripatetic fat woman, there is a wide difference as to the ways and means of money-receiving. Perhaps those bone checks or tallies Signor Castellani exhibits in his collection, those tickets admitting one to the gladiatorial fights of the Romans, may recall a vast assemblage which went to see the lions eat the men, but I think we must take all these ideas of huge crowds thronging the public places of old with a certain amount of hesitation. With Centennial figures there can be no doubt, for here are the dollars which represent the entrances. Your turn-stile tells no stories and is a disputing, prosaic kind of thing which allows of no tampering. Just turn it a quarter of a revolution, and it is a half-dollar, or give it its swing for the entire circle and it records two dollars. It is pleasant to think how much money those inanimate mechanisms have ground out, and it is despairing to think that, like one of those freebooters of the Rhine, one can't make even a small portion of the inhabitants of Philadelphia pass through the stile, depositing their half dollars for your own and particular account. I think if I had my way I would take all the hack-drivers in the city, and pass them through those stiles continuously for several days and nights, exacting a half dollar at every revolution.

On each turnstile there is a Sellers register, which shows up a figure at each quarter revolution, which, of course, must tally with the number of half dollars dropped through the slit in the counter. Of course turnstiles are ugly things, and abhorrent to a free and enlightened public, but by this time our people must have become quite familiar with them. There is something aggressive about a turnstile, of the chevaux de frise order, but it has taken no end of patient trouble and thought to devise exactly the proper kind of one. What was the average width or breadth of humanity was the question. A turnstile which was too roomy or comfortable, would have allowed two people to pass through, and once thus crucially held, both persons would forcedly passed through, unless one was lifted bodily out. I don't think, being a corpulent personage, that they are adapted to fat people. I suppose, however, physical statistics must have been consulted, so that sticking in the stile is not common, though on several occasions American Daniel Lamberts have marched through the gates which were specially opened for them, as if they were Roman conquerors.

Now, as to the indicators, the mechanism is a common one, but woe betide the gate-keeper who tampers with them. Let him but turn it back himself, and away fly all the figures backward to zero, and he is lost. Now, as to the peculiar arrangement of collecting money in the pot. The Centennial visitor who deposits his half dollar sees it disappear after examination into a slit in the wooden counter. Here a removable metal box, with a slit corresponding with the opening in the wood, sets in flush with the counter. This box has two peculiarities. The slit is open when the box is put in, but the instant it is removed the opening through which the money falls, is closed automatically with a snap, and there is no possible way of fishing out any of its contents. Of course, the box is always put in empty. To open the box when it is taken away two keys are necessary. As to the dexterity of the gate-keepers in passing through the crowd, that depends entirely on the accidental characteristics of the sight-seers. About twenty people a minute, one every three seconds, is a high average. Although one would imagine that the fact had been pretty well advertised that only half dollars were taken, there are still stupid people who present $1 and $5 bills, and seem amazed when they are told "to go and change it, or they can't come in." I watch a stile. There is a fat woman who sticks just for a moment. Fortunately for her, she has no corners to catch, but gradually she moulds herself into the acute angles of the stile, the arms enfold her and she bursts forth into the Centennial grounds like a shell from a mortar; but she took a quarter of a minute before she was fired off. A man with a baby, as he lifts the little one over the stile, does it cleverly in about ten seconds. He had a nursing-bottle and a bundle in the other hand, and the gate-keeper helps him by taking the good parent's half dollar from between his teeth. It has been said that at Lansdown avenue gate 609 people came in in ten minutes, but then they had tickets; and that the smartest of all the gate hands let in on one occasion 1,500 people in an hour under similar circumstances. The largest number of people who have passed so far through any single gate was on Pennsylvania day, when the gate-keeper at gate No. 89 passed through 9,934 visitors on that day. Each gate-keeper has a book of registry, which Col. Yates calls his book of original entry, and on which the whole fabric of collection rests. I give an exact copy of a page of the book:

Davis.

Turnstile No. 89, Box No. 89.		International Exhibition, Philadelphia, Oct. 19, 1876.
Register.....	250
	000z	Turnstile No. 89, Box No. 89.
	248	Register No. 248.

When Davis, the gate-keeper, is relieved he looks at his register, and fills in the figures on his slip. Then Brown, the Inspector, who is present, verifies the figures of the register, signs it, and the paper is torn at the line, which is given to Davis, with Brown, the Inspector's, signature, which paper Davis carries with his box of money to the bank. The remaining stub goes to the Centennial Bureau. Mistakes as to the register are very few, and never can arise from any mechanical defect. Do what the gate-keepers may, sometimes two girls devotedly attached to one another will not be separated by the stile, and rush in, both together, and then only one figure is advanced; or occasionally another of the weaker sex, with inclinations to shilly-shally, takes hold of the stile, gives it a vigorous twirl; the gate keeper thinks she is going through, but at the last moment she changes her mind, and don't, but stands stock still with a self-satisfied smile on her face. Then the gate-keeper, internally anathamatizes his feeble-minded sister, for his register has recorded one figure more than it should, for now the woman really wants to go though he has her money, and she still will have to be turned twice on her honor. In such a case the gate-keep has to make a written record of it. They do say that once there were two admissions for one—a big man havin concealed his little wife under his duster—and that on another occasion an Englishman, for a lark, made a flying jump, cleared gate-keeper turnstile and all, in an instant was lost in the cr

CURRENT LITERATURE.

IPHITION.

Now, facing an unconquerable foe,
Silent and firm in the last battle's roar,
Iphition fell, three thousand years ago,
We learn—let him have praise for evermore.

What though his slayer, drunk with Eastern blood,
Be borne aloft on wider wings of fame,
Two words, by Homer dropped in careless mood,
Give light enough to read a hero's name.

The shout that shattered armies into flight,
The godlike form in heaven's own armor clad,
The golden plumes divine that lived with light
At every step, for him no terrors had.

Right on he rushed, though to a certain doom,
Hephæstian mail and matchless strength defied;
And, carrying with him proudly to the tomb
The whiteness of his honor, so he died.

There Homer leaves him, like a tall ship wrecked—
Leaves him to wolves and vultures where he lay;
But that which makes the man, no bird's neglect
To beast, or bird, or Time can yield a prey.

Thus ever, through eternity, we dream
That he by looking back is comforted,
That the long sunless hours of Hades gleam,
With radiance from the past around him shed;

That inward still he murmurs, as the wind
Murmurs through roofless halls: "At least I know
None find a spot on my young life behind,
Nor dread I here what all must undergo.

Death cometh—ay! but after death to say
What I with truth can say is given to few.
Achilles, thine the fame—yet well I may Believe myself the better of the two.

Armed by no god, but as my fellow-men,
I faltered not in fight, though others fled,
Till my safe conqueror struck me down, and then
Against his lance the blood leapt warm and red.

And even here, on this unhoping coast,
With spirit unexhausted I can bow
To what Fate sends; Achilles, as a ghost,
Whines, weak without his god-given armor now.

Though all life lent my soul no longer aid;
The memory that I never quailed, for me
Keeps vital warmth within. I scorn the shade
That, to touch earth again, a slave would be."

HESTER.

BY BEATRICE MAY BUTT, AUTHOR OF "MISS MOLLY."

From the New Quarterly Magazine.

CHAPTER I.

I am looking out of one of the windows of our long salon, at the picture I think the loveliest in the world; but my eyes are so full of tears that I am trying hard to keep from falling, that I can scarcely see the calm sweep of the Loire, bordered by its tall poplars, and the Château de Luynes in the distance, which, with the quaint old village, its tall church spire towering above the surrounding cottages, makes, altogether, on a bright day like the present, a view that many people would go far out of their way to see.

What had brought the tears into my eyes was a remark my old grandmère, who was sitting knitting, had made to me a few minutes ago. I had been moving restlessly about from one window to another, and at last my grandmother looked up and said: Tiens, ma chère, it must be very tiring fidgeting about like that; I fear that if we do have a ball, you will be too worn out to dance at it!"

"Oh, Grandmère!" I cried, throwing myself down again in the arm-chair from which I had just risen, preparatory to taking another look out of the farthest window, "are we really going to have a ball, and why?"

"Well, your father was telling me last night that Raoul de Montcour's people have arranged a marriage for him, and so as we shall not have the pleasure of seeing him among us much longer in the character of a bachelor, your father talks of giving a ball in honor of the great event."

"Whom is he going to be married to?" I exclaimed breathlessly.

"Oh, a very good match," replied my grandmother abstractedly, her whole soul once more given to turning the heel of her stocking. "A Comtesse Hélène something, very rich and very beautiful—two good qualities that do not often go together, and though it appears so desirable in a worldly point of view, it does not seem altogether a mariage de convenance, as they are said to be quite 'in love.'"

And this is why I am standing in the window with my eyes so full of tears that I cannot see the waters of the Loire sparkling in the Summer sunshine.

After a pause, I said, "I think Grandmère, I will take my pot of lilies down to the church; they are in full bloom now, and they will look pretty before the altar."

I did not seem to care to watch any longer for a chance visitor riding up the avenue.

I flew, rather than walked, up the shallow oak staircase that led to my own room; that retreat once gained, I threw myself down on the bed, and wept torrents of tears. "Cruel cruel," I sobbed, "what right had he to come, here day after day and try to win my love, as I knew, none better, he had tried, when he could never give his own in return. It was heartless, it was wicked, to let me betray my love, as I remembered with reddening cheeks I had done again and again, when all the time he was counting the hours to be back in Paris, and most likely was writing amusing accounts to his belle Hélène of the country girl who had fallen so desperately in love with him. Well, and after all—this Comtesse Hélène—in what was I so much her inferior? Certainly, I was not beautiful, but I was certainly not ugly, at least Raoul had never let me think so;" but at that moment my grandmother's words flashed across my mind, "she was rich and she was beautiful, two good qualities that do not often go together."

"Ah, that was it, of course," and I rose off the bed, and began pacing hastily up and down the room with my hands clasped tightly together, "it's all the money," I exclaimed angrily; "oh, how I wish we were rich enough to afford to be happy, or rather that it was not the law of the land that happiness is to be always sacrificed to riches!" But miserable or happy, it was quite time I started if I meant to be back for dinner; so after dipping my face in cold water, and trusting to the air to cool my hot cheeks, for I did not wish M. le Curé to ask any questions, I started.

To reach the conservatory where my flowers were I had to pass through the picture gallery, a long room which ran down all one side of the house, and which was used as a ball-room, on the rare occasions on which my father indulged in such a festivity, a thing he had not done since my brother Henri, who was now in Paris, with his regiment, came of age three years ago.

Slowly I paced down the hall until I stood opposite a picture which always had a strange fascination for me. It represented a tall, slight girl of about sixteen, playing at battledore and shuttlecock, in the very room where I was myself standing. Her dark, wavy hair was gathered up over a cushion on the top of her head in the fashion our grandmothers loved, and then fell in little loose curls on her forehead; her eyes, of the darkest, deepest sapphire blue, were gazing eagerly upwards, following the flight of the shuttlecock; she was dressed in a plain muslin dress, the white folds of which were reflected in the shining parquet at her feet; ornaments she had none, save only a plain gold wedding-ring on the hand that held the battledore, for the curious part of the picture was that she was playing left-handed, the right being in a sling, and yet such was the skill of the artist, and the grace of the girlish figure, that there was nothing awkward about it. Underneath was engraved, "Hester de Ligny, aged 16,"—it was a portrait of my father's mother, taken the year of her wedding.

As I stood gazing at the picture of my Irish grandmother, whose name I had inherited, and whom I was said to strangely resemble, her story came back to my remembrance, as I had so often heard it. The story of how my grandfather had met her first in Paris, and had fallen in love first with her lovely, laughing face, and then with her sweet self. Quickly he had wooed and won his young bride, and brought her to his home by the Loire. But they were wild, lawless times in which they lived, and one night my father, who had gone into Tours on business, did not return as early as he was expected; becoming uneasy, the young Countess opened the hall door, and stood on the steps listening, until she heard the first sounds of his horse's hoofs, when she hurried down the avenue to meet him. He, on seeing her, dismounted, and drawing the reins over his arm, walked slowly back with her under the Summer night. Suddenly her eyes, wandering from right to left, caught the gleam of a pistol in the moonlight, and before she could speak a word of warning, there was a flash and a loud report.

But love is ever quicker than hate; with the instinct of defending him she stretched out her hand, and the ball that was meant to have dealt death to the man at her side only broke the arm of the woman who loved him. In the confusion that ensued the would-be murderer escaped.

The Count de Ligny carried his bride home, and with care and loving attention she was soon all right again; but one day, on opening the door of the gallery, he saw his child-wife busily engaged in trying to play battledore and shuttlecock with her left hand, her right being still in a sling.

"Poor girl," he said, pityingly, "see what you have to thank me for."

"I am sorry," she replied gravely, "because I know how you hate anything awkward!"

And then my grandfather caught her in his arms, and declared that of all the graceful pictures he had ever seen, was a woman playing battledore and shuttlecock with her left hand; "And to prove I mean what I say," he added, "I shall have an artist down from Paris, and you shall be painted just as you are, that your descendants may have a memorial always of your love and courage, and your childish heart, which I pray God you may keep for ever!"

And so she did, as far as this world is concerned, for a year after that she died, leaving a littleson (my father) to mourn a lifetime the mother, and the mother's love he had never known.

But before that sad ending to romance, the great artist had come down from Paris, and painted the memorial of love and courage, which is the only relic we possess to-day of my seventeen-year-old grandmother.

But when I had thought the story over, as I was fond of doing, I said aloud, gazing up at the happy face above me, "No, I am not a bit sorry for you, for you had your happiness after all, so I cannot pity you. Willingly, most willingly, would I change places with you, to be loved as you were, though it was only for a year! Well, there is no use thinking of it," I added philosophically, so taking my pot of lilies, I started through the little wood that led to the church. Once there, I placed my flowers among the other floral offerings dedicated to the Mother of Sorrows, and after a few words of prayer I hastened to return. After crossing the hot, white road that divided the church-yard from our own grounds, it felt as cool as in some Gothic cathedral to stand under the shade of the Charmille; the thick boughs of the linden trees, under which so many generations of De Ligny had laughed, and played, and made love, and grown old, were cut into arches and then met over the head, and so thick were they that they formed a shelter few rays of even that hot July sun could pierce.

I took off my hat, pushed my wavy hair off my forehead, and stood still to enjoy the coolness and the faint delicious scent of the lime flowers. Looking down presently, I saw at my feet a large Marguerite; I gathered it, determining to try my fate by it—anything to avoid returning to the house!

It was a large daisy, and took a long time pulling to pieces, but at length I came to the last round, "Il m'aime," I said aloud in my eagerness, "un peu—beaucoup—par fantaisie"—and I flung it petulantly on the ground. I might have known what the answer would be!

"Par fantaisie," repeated a voice so close to me that I fairly started, and turning round I found myself face to face with a tall, slight, fair-haired man who was regarding me with a half-amused expression of countenance; in other words, Raoul de Montcour, the object of my thoughts. For a moment I was struck dumb with surprise, and then I said—

"What are you doing here?"

"Well, at present," he made answer, "I am on my way home, but I have been calling up at the Château, and hearing from your grandmother that you had gone to the church, I took the liberty of coming this way on the chance of meeting you, but I felt so interested in hearing what answer the daisy was going to give that I could not speak before and break the charm! Really now," he went on, "you must gratify my curiosity, and tell me who it was you had in your thoughts when you pulled that daisy to pieces."

I shook my head.

"I'll tell you what," he said, "I will give three guesses, and if I do not hit it off in them we will drop the subject; all you will have to do will be to say 'Yes or no.' Was it," he began—"no, you must lift up your head and look at me so that I may see whether you are answering truly."

I looked up, but unwillingly, for I was afraid he would see my eyes were red, but I half hoped that by this time the cool air had restored them to their natural color.

"Was it," he began again, in a slow voice, "Eustache de l'Orme, that friend of your brother's, of whom I used to hear so much?"

I made no answer.

"Was it M. le Curé?" he went on; "he is certainly not handsome, but then, as he may not marry, he possesses the charm of being forbidden fruit. I am sorry at having to waste a guess on him, but then, unfortunately I know so few men that you do—and I conclude it was not a woman all that anxiety was wasted on!"

"No, it was not," I answered boldly, for I was irritated by his teasing tones, and I looked straight up in his face as I said it.

"You have been crying," he said, with a swift glance at my flushed cheeks, and then, without waiting for me to make any remark, he went on to his third guess. "Was it—I?"

I made no reply, for I felt denial would be of no use, but my eyes sank under his, and my cheeks burned till the tears came.

"Look up," at last he said, and mechanically I obeyed; "try as you may, you cannot keep the truth out of your eyes—from me," he added in a lower tone. "Come and sit down in the shade for a few minutes," he said, turning toward an old carved bench that stood under one of the trees near. As we walked slowly toward it he said, "It ought not to have been 'par fantaisie,' I think, at least not so far as I am concerned."

"That is not the way for an engaged man to talk," I cried, petulantly.

With a look of blank surprise he turned round and looked at me. "Who told you I was engaged?"

"My grandmère," I replied, and then with a sudden feeling I could not suppress I exclaimed, "Oh, why did you not tell me yourself—before! I would so much rather you had told me yourself," I repeated, vaguely, with a dreadful sensation that I was saying something I should be sorry just now I had said, and yet without a feeling that I could not help it, and that the tears were coming back into my eyes, and that if I spoke again I should disgrace myself by crying. Therefore I stayed quite still, my face buried in my hands, he at one end of the bench, and I at the other, until he said—

"Were you sorry to hear it?"

Then there was a long silence between us, till he came round and stood in front of me; I knew he was there though I never looked up. Presently he took one of my hands in his and stroked it softly, and then he said—

"It is all wrong, somehow, Reine," he never could say my English name, so he had given me this "petit nom" in the happy days when we first knew one another. "I don't know how it is, but it is all wrong somehow, the fates seem all against us, even the daisies!"

At that my tears began to flow again, and before I had time to dry them, I was in his arms and he was kissing me passionately.

"I am going to be married, darling, and I am most utterly selfish to try and make you as miserable as I am myself, but for the life of me I cannot help it. I did mean to go away without saying a word; I hoped you would not have heard of my engagement until I had left; but never mind, it can't be helped now—it's all out, so there's no use saying any more about it. I supposed other people live through these sort of things; but it is hard! Nay, child, darling Reine, do not cry like that. There, I must go. Ainsi est la vie, little Reine! Stand up and give me one kiss, and say good-bye."

I stood up obediently as he commanded. "Oh, Raoul," I sobbed, looking up into the grey eyes above me, in which the tears stood, "I think you are more wicked than any one I ever heard of! What do you tell me all this for, when it can do no good, merely to break my heart?"

He caught me in his arms, and pressed me closer to him. "I shall never speak so again, darling," he pleaded, "however great and many may be my opportunities, so say nothing for this once."

"You will never have the opportunity, God knows; I will never willingly see your face again as long as I live!"

"Then," he said, looking down into my tearful eyes, "this being my last chance, I shall take as many kisses as I can get, to remember when I am gone!"

"And I—" I said pathetically; "do you think all this makes it easier for me?"

He flung me almost roughly from him. "Go now, quickly, before I play Comtesse Hélène false and say,—stay," he said angrily.

Without a word I turned and went. I had not gone many steps before I heard his voice calling, "Come back." I turned immediately, why, I scarcely know.

He laid both his hands on my shoulders, and said, "Say, 'I forgive you, Raoul.'" I repeated the words after him, for, after all, I had no more to forgive than he had.

"And now, child, give me one kiss of your own free will; the first, and the last."

He stooped his tall head, and I lifted my trembling lips to his, and gave him, as he himself said, my first and last kiss of love. Then, before he could stretch out his hand to detain me, I was gone.

CHAPTER II.

After that many days passed away in a sort of dream; I came and went outwardly as usual, but under that calm exterior burnt a continual fire that those around me little dreamed of, until at last one morning at breakfast, my father on opening the Journal, exclaimed, "Listen, Hester, to the grand account of Raoul's marriage. Ah, ma foi, what fêtes! But never mind, cheer up, little one, your turn will come; and in the meantime, to keep you merry, directly the bride and bridegroom return to Montcour, I will give a ball in their honor."

Fearing if I attempted to speak, the tears would sound in my voice, I merely smiled back at my father, who, after saying, "Ah, Hester, you are always so ready for any gayety!" became once more absorbed in his paper.

It had come then at last! He was married! Oh, how had he found it possible? It seemed to me then, that to be married to another man, to have to vow to love and honor another—why death itself would be preferable; but then, men and women are so different! Directly I could make my escape I fled to the picture gallery, my usual place of refuge when in want of solitude. Oh, the miles I must have walked in it those first terrible days after Raoul was married! Once in there, with the doors shut at either end, I knew I was safe from interruption for hours. Up and down, up and down, I paced, with a wild, hopeless feeling at my heart; what had I ever done to him that he should have treated me like this. If he had only left me without saying a word, I should have forgotten him in time, so I thought; at least I should have no remembrances of him that were dreadful to look back upon; but now, what could I think of him? Hide it as I might, strive as I might to forget it, still I could not but know that he had behaved most dishonorably; he had yielded, perhaps only through weakness, to a temptation that I had not helped him to overcome, and the punishment was that one, perhaps both of us, would bear the wounds of it to the day of our death.

At that time, however, I could not think of it so calmly; all I could do was to cry out in my pain, and my cry was, "I think I could bear it all, if I could only look back to one time when our love had not been sinful! If I could but do that I should not complain, though either he or I had died directly afterward; but to have nothing of any pleasure to look back upon that is not wrong, ah, I cannot bear it!" Then at last I prayed, wildly, passionately, not as our prayers should be offered to our Father, but madly, from the depths of my broken heart, that God would in mercy grant, before my life ended, that I might love him without sin—only that, I prayed, only that.

Alas, indeed, we know not what to ask for, and perhaps after all, as I have somewhere read, we should thank God oftener for the prayers He does not answer than for those He does. Answered prayers are so often sent as punishments, alas! Next I wondered if he were happy. "I hope not," I exclaimed angrily, "oh, I hope not!" Then feeling that even the hot July sun, with its chances of sunstroke, was preferable to being indoors, I put on my hat and crept down to the oak bench where Raoul had told me of his love.

Once there my tears flowed more calmly, and after watching the lime leaves for a few minutes, and listening to all the Summer sounds around, the trees gradually faded from my view, and I fell asleep.

I dreamed that I was struggling up a steep hill, so steep that I often paused to get my breath, but I knew within myself that if I could only get to the top I should meet Raoul, therefore the more wearied I became, the greater the efforts I made. At last I stood at the top, and close beside me was a man that I knew to be him, though I could not see his face, for between him and me was the figure of a woman.

He stretched out his hand, and I heard him say, "Reine," but before I could answer the woman had thrown herself upon his breast, and clasped her arms so tightly round his neck that I could not touch his outstretched hand; I could not even see his face, for her head was between us, and that, I thought, I am sorry for, for I should like to see it he is happy! And then I returned the way I had come.

But once at the bottom, I heard a mocking voice crying, "Try again, try again!" so sadly and wearily I began once more to climb the mountain. But it was much harder work this time; the ground was covered with thorns, so that my feet were wounded often, and the bougas of the overhanging trees kept getting in my way, so that I could not see the top. The tears, too, would come into my eyes, as first one sharp bramble pierced my limbs, and then another, but nevertheless I stumbled on, until at last, once more, I stood on the plateau on the top.

The sun was just setting, and in the red glow it cast on all around I saw him standing, but alone now. With a cry of joy I staggered to his feet. "Raoul, Raoul!" I cried, "help me!" But he made no answer. Then I looked up, and the face which had appeared so distinct when afar off was once more invisible, and when I looked again I saw that this time an angel stood between us with outstretched shining wings, which cast a white shadow between him and me, and with that I awoke—awoke with a strange, frightened feeling at my heart. What did the dream mean? Was it a warning, and if so, of what? but perhaps it was only natural, after the thoughts I had had and the way I had behaved that morning, that I should dream of him, and under the circumstances it was not likely I should dream anything cheerful, so with that reflection I returned to the house, certainly calmer than when I had left it.

That evening, as my grandmother and I sat out on the steps that led into the garden, alone, my father having gone to the smoking-room, after a long silence, spent by me in wondering how long it would be before Raoul returned to Montcour, I said, "Grandmère, what sort of a woman was my mother?"

"She was very like Henri, tall and dark, with brown eyes and hair; she used to be very pretty, you know, my dear, before her accident."

"Tell me about it, Grandmère; for I felt in the humor to hear anything sad about any one.

"She was out riding with your father; I don't know exactly how it happened, but the horse ran away with her, and she was thrown. Her spine was injured by her fall in some way, and she never walked again, though she lived on for some time; you were only four years old when she died."

My old grandmother had tears in her eyes as she spoke. I stroked the dear hand that lay between mine. "Don't grieve, Grandmère; I have never missed a mother's love since you came here."

She kissed me and said, "I hope not, darling; sometimes I think I have been a better mother to you than I was to her, but I will never, God helping me, fall into the same mistake again; but, indeed, I did it for the best," she added, somewhat eagerly.

"What was the mistake you made?"

She hesitated a moment, and then said: "Your father was not the man she wanted to marry."

The same dreadful story over again. I started up and exclaimed, angrily, "Then I suppose the man she was in love with was poor, and the Comte De Ligny was rich—comparatively, at least. Was that it?"

"Hush! my dear; please don't speak like that, indeed I did it for the best."

I sunk back again to my place at her feet. "I am sorry, Grandmère, very sorry; I did not mean to vex you, only it does seem so dreadful that money should always be put above everything else. Was she happy?" I added.

"Oh, I think so, I hope so," replied the old woman; "but then she did not seem sorry to die, which sorely grieved me, for she was my only daughter, and I loved her dearly; and your father worshiped the very ground she trod on; it almost broke his heart watching her lying out here in this garden, as she did, day after day, with her patient eyes fixed on the blue sky above her, as though her soul were eagerly waiting the summons that was to set it free. And it came at last, after months of constant pain, and neither her husband nor I could wish to keep her, for we both knew that it was not here that she could ever have found rest for body or mind, for she had told him her whole story when she married him. Her last words to me were, that would I always live with you, and take care of you, and would I promise never to let the fear of poverty stand between you and any man you might wish to marry. I swore it to her, and so far, darling, I have kept my vow, have I not? Never, as long as I am here to look after you, shall my word to your dead mother be broken."

"Yes, dear Grandmère, you have always been perfectly kind to me, kinder than any words can say, and so you can tell my mother when you see her." Then there was a long pause, unbroken till my grandmother rose to go in, for the sun had set, and night was coming on with the rapidity it always does in a climate where twilight is almost unknown. "Grandmère," I said, stretching out a detaining hand, "who was the man my mother wanted to marry?"

"The Vicomte de Montcour, Raoul's father," she replied; "now you know why it is I am so glad to hear that he is marrying happily; for her sake I love him, and for her sake it rejoices me to hear such good news of him."

Left alone, I stood on the steps and thought of my mother—my poor mother. Never had I seemed to love her as I did at that moment. Had Raoul's father resembled him at his age? Had they wept their passionate farewells as we had done?

Well, she had gathered up the tangled threads of her life, and had married and had children; but then she had not grieved when she heard that she must die. Somehow there was something sad and touching in that. Then my thoughts wandered on to Countess Hester, and I seemed to see her standing on these same steps, watching for her husband, on the very spot where my dying mother had been laid, and I cried aloud, "Ah, Countess Hester, yours was the happiest lot after all, though you never saw your twentieth birthday."

CHAPTER III.

After that the days went by exactly like one another, until, on returning one day with my grandmother from our afternoon drive, I found upon the table two cards, "The Vicomte and Vicomtesse De Montcour," and then I knew that they had returned, and that the fight was about to begin.

At dinner-time my father spoke to us of the visit.

"I am so sorry you were not at home, Hester, for she is charming. It has always been very dull for you here, and it will be pleasant having a friend who is not so very far off. But, after all, it does not signify; you shall go and call there with grandmère next week."

I did not dare make any sort of refusal, but I trusted before next week some sudden illness would have seized me; and yet, all the time I had such a longing to see the happy woman who was Raoul's wife.

"And," went on my father, "everything falls in well, for to-day I received a letter from Henri, saying he will be here the end of the week on a month's leave; so now, sweet Hester, you can have your ball."

Miserable as I was, I felt half pleased at the prospect, for should I not see them together?

Presently I said, totally irrelevantly to the subject under discussion, of which I had not heard one word—

"Did they drive?"

"Who, my dear?" said my father.

"M. De Montcour and his wife." There, I had said it at last!

"Oh, Raoul! No, they were riding, and very well she rides too! How your mind runs on the happy pair, my dear. I believe you are envious. Well, perhaps you will meet another Raoul de Montcour at the ball!" and with a laugh he left the table.

"Another Raoul de Montcour!" I got up too, and went and stood by the window, and looked down the avenue where I had so often watched for a solitary horseman. To think of him and his wife riding under those trees together seemed like desecration of the spot I loved best on earth, and I turned away with an aching heart.

Two more days have passed away, and the dreaded visit is over.

Late in the afternoon of a hot Summer's day, my grandmère and I drove over to Montcour.

We were ushered into a long shaded salon, from which every particle of sunlight had been excluded, and deliciously cool it felt after the long hot drive.

Out of the depths of an arm-chair a lady rose on hearing our names announced. She stood still for a second in the centre of the room, and passed her hands once or twice across her eyes, and then, with the sweetest laugh, she came toward my grandmother, saying, "I really don't know how to ask pardon, for I sadly fear I was asleep. But now I am wide awake, and I am sure you must be Mme. De Ligny. I hope," she added, turning to me, "that you have not been here a long time, waiting for me to return from the land of dreams!"

I assured her we had only just come in; and then we all sat down, and while she talked to my grandmother I had plenty of time to take a long, quiet look at Mme. De Montcour.

She was not tall, rather under than over the middle height, with quantities of very fair hair, cut quite short, and curling all over her head; her eyes were dark brown, and they sparkled and laughed when she spoke, as I have seen some shady streams do when flashed upon by a ray of sunlight. But the most remarkable thing about her was her happy look—it was that, more than anything else, that would have made one single her out anywhere, for she possessed that wonderful charm of perfect happiness that nearly always passes with childhood. I could not feel I hated her then, try as I did!

Gradually, under her pleasant, genial manners, I thawed a little out of the icy reserve in which I had frozen myself up; and though I could not quite bring myself to talk to her as I would to any one else, still I was getting on better, when the door opened, and Raoul was in the room.

He evidently had not expected visitors, for I, who knew his face so well, noticed a look of annoyance pass over it when he saw who was there; but retreat was too late then. He advanced to my grandmère, and received her good wishes for his future, delivered in courtly, old-fashioned language, with a pleasant smile, for they had always been good friends, and then he turned to me, and held out his hand.

Before I could take it, my grandmother said, "I hope, Hester, you have been thinking all this time of how you are going to offer your congratulations. I was so taken by surprise at Raoul's sudden entrance that I could with difficulty think of anything to say; but you cannot make the same excuse!"

"What a dreadful thing to be told to do!" here broke in the voice of Madame De Montcour. "Never mind, Mademoiselle, I will take the will for the deed—I am sure you have known my husband too long not to wish him well!"

I could have blessed her for that speech; it gave me time to recover myself a little.

"Well," said my grandmère, "after that I will let you off, with merely saying, 'A happy future!'"

My hand shook so that I was ashamed to hold it out, and besides, I felt myself getting as white as the dress I wore; but I looked up at him, and mechanically repeated the words, "A happy future!"

I saw a flush pass over his face as he touched my hand, and a warning look was in his eyes, which said to me as plainly as if he had spoken, "Take care!"

For the second it took me to repeat the words he stood in front of me, so that Mme. De Montcour could not see my face, and then he turned to my grandmother, and talked to her without ceasing until we rose to leave, Mme. De Montcour in the meantime devoting herself to me.

He followed us out to the steps, and put us into the carriage. As I took my seat by my grandmother, he said, so low that no one but myself caught the words, "Believe me, it was unintentional; I had no idea you were there!" until then we drove off.

My last view of old Montcour, having in the foreground the white-robed figure of the young wife with her hands tightly locked around her husband's arm.

CHAPTER IV.

It was the night of my long-expected, long-promised ball. Henri, with some friends of his, had come down from Paris, and the old château had become quite gay; what with riding, driving, and walking parties, and other amusements, there had been very little time for thought, and now, with infinite trouble, we had converted the long gallery into a ball-room, and very successfully, I thought, we had done it, as I stood alone in the empty room waiting to receive the guests.

Generation after generation of De Ligny looked down on me out of wreaths of flowers and evergreens; the doors into the conservatory, which was all lit up with Chinese lanterns, were open, showing a long vista of flowers, ending in a glimpse of the starry heavens—the door into the garden being also open. I moved down to the end so as to get a better view, and there met all our own party.

"Very good," said my father, stopping short; "really the place is scarcely recognizable—your trouble is not thrown away. And now let me look at you," he went on, turning me round so as to be able to have a good view. "Equally good, I think I may say."

I was all in white, with bunches of large daisies in my hair and in my hand I held a bouquet, composed of nothing but Marguerites and fern leaves.

"Pretty and innocent-looking!" said my father, and kissed me. "Enjoy yourself," he added, "and you will make me quite happy."

"Pretty enough!" chimed in Henri; "but rather young-looking for a woman of your age, I should say."

"One might tell with one's eyes shut that that speech was made by a brother," exclaimed his friend, Eustache de l'Orme, making me a low bow as he spoke. "I, it I were your brother, mademoiselle, should say something very different!"

"No, Eustache, you would not—not being related to her, you are far more likely to make her pretty speeches than I am who have known her so long and well. But now, pray, go on; you have raised our curiosity, what would you say to Hester, if you were her brother? It may serve as a lesson to me on future occasions!"

"Oh, no; you are far beyond profiting from any lesson of mine; so I think I will postpone what I would have said until the first waltz, which I hope Mademoiselle will give me."

I bowed acquiescence, and then, turning to my brother, said, laughingly, "Don't distress yourself about my daisies. I am not quite twenty yet; but I shall most likely attain that mature age before my next ball; that rubicon past, I shall leave off trying to make myself look young—I shall certainly never wear daisies again!" I added, in a lower tone.

"Never mind, Hester," he said, as the others moved away, handing me back, as he spoke, my bouquet, which he had been holding while I had been striving to fasten my four-buttoned gloves; "whatever I may say, I am always proud of you, wherever you may be, or whoever may be near you!"

He was always a kind and loving brother to me, was Henri.

"Tiens, Henri!" I said, laying my hand on his sleeve, as he was moving away. "what do you think of Madame Raoul?"

"What do you think of her?" he repeated. "I really don't know—very pretty and very fascinating; don't you think so?"

"What made him marry her?" I went on.

"Money, I should think," he replied; "what could a poor and de camp have done without a rich wife? But in this case he seems to have got a good deal besides money, so they ought to be very happy. I always rather hoped," he finished off in a whisper, "that Raoul would have been my brother-in-law; but I suppose money—and we will hope other things—have won the day. You, perhaps, did not imagine this; but I did at one time, and I should have liked it. Poor old Raoul! Well, let us hope he will be happy, for there is no one I am more fond of!" and with this wish my brother left me.

Half an hour afterward I was standing by the door trying to cool myself after a long waltz with M. De l'Orme, when the Vicomte and Vicomtesse De Montcour were announced.

I went forward to meet them, as in duty bound—it was easy enough to do company talk in a crowded ballroom. I shook hands with them, and then Raoul said, "I hope, Mademoiselle, you have kept one dance for me, for old acquaintance sake."

I glanced down my card—anything to avoid having to look into his face, and said: "I cannot give you anything before the sixteenth."

"That will be very late," he replied, "let me look at your card and see if I cannot find another; we may be gone by that time."

I knew he suspected my little deceit, but still I hesitated; this was my way of trying to be good! so I held the card closer in my hand, for I did not wish him to see all the blanks there were before number sixteen, and besides, his wife might think it rude. Before, however, I had time to answer again, she turned to me, and said merrily—

"Quite right, Mademoiselle; put his name very low down, for he cannot possibly go without dancing with his hostess, and the later that occurs, the later we shall stay, and the happier I shall be, for I do so dearly love a ball!"

"Do you, indeed?" said my father, who had joined us; "it seems cruel to ask you then, but will you give me this quadrille?"

She took his arm and moved off. Certainly there is a wonderful charm about her; it seems to be her mission in life to make every one happy and at ease around her. How I wish that she were only somebody else's wife!

As I stood watching her, suddenly a dreadful feeling came over me that I was standing alone with Raoul, and that in a minute he must say something to me. Looking round desperately for some one to help me out of the difficulty, my eyes fell on Eustache De l'Orme, and I made a sudden movement forward, just as Raoul had reached my side. "Monsieur," I said, "would you be so kind as to take me to some cool place, and get me an ice?

He offered me his arm, and soon I was once more in safety by an old dowager.

"Shall I fetch you a chair?"

"Oh no, thank you; I will stand here by Madame de Louvain as I am not dancing this quadrille, and it is a pretty sight to look on at."

Just in front of me were Madame de Montcour and my father. She was looking perfectly lovely; dressed in her white satin wedding-dress, with diamond stars in her fair hair, her brown eyes sparkling with pleasure, and a little flush of excitement on her usually pale cheeks, she made a perfect picture.

For some minutes I was so absorbed in watching her pretty, graceful movements that I was quite surprised when the dance came to an end. As the music concluded, and the conversation around me became once more audible, I heard a voice I knew only too well say, "What a wonderful likeness!"

I looked up; Raoul and M. de Louvain were talking together, and as M. de Louvain had his eyes fixed on me I concluded I was the person to whom he had been alluding.

"Yes, a great likeness," replied M. de Louvain, glancing as he spoke from me to the picture above my head, which I then remembered was that of Countess Hester." "A great likeness," he repeated, evidently thinking I was out of hearing, "at first sight, but if you study the expression of the two faces, M. de Montcour, a great deal of it goes—at least, so it seems to me. The picture is that of a happy child, but the living face is that of a woman. Mademoiselle Hester used to be much more like it than she is."

As he said the last words I looked up, and met Raoul's eyes fixed on me with an earnest questioning gaze which frightened me.

I was quite glad to see M. de l'Orme coming up to claim me for the waltz that was just commencing. I seemed to dance a great deal with him, at least I heard afterward that others had noticed it; but as for me, I was thinking of nothing but the dreaded waltz that was drawing nearer every minute. Oh, if I had only had the courage to refuse it at once, instead of merely putting it off! At last I saw that fatal number put up over the orchestra—16. With a desperate feeling of escaping till it was over, I stepped inside the conservatory, but as the first notes of the band struck up, Raoul stood beside me and offered his arm.

"What made you come here?" he said, "you did not think that I would not look for you, after waiting all these hours for this one dance. Why would you not give me another, and why would you not speak to me all the evening? Come here, and we will sit down, and you shall tell me why."

He put two chairs as he spoke by the door that led into the garden. It gave me a feeling of rest only to look at the blue heavens, and to listen to the cool splash of the fountain into its marble basin; a feeling of rest and happiness to sit here with him once more by my side, after all the trouble and turmoil of the last dreadful weeks.

"Well," he said, after a moment's silence, "you have not answered my question."

"Well," I echoed, "why have you stood the whole evening without dancing, merely looking at me, and following me about, until the pleasure of my evening has been completely spoilt!"

"It was what I came for," he said in a low tone, "but I am sorry if it has spoiled the pleasure of your evening."

I made no answer.

Presently he got up and stood in front of me, and put his hands on my shoulders.

"You must forget, Reine, you must," he said harshly.

"How can I," I cried despairingly, "you have made me miserable, most miserable, and then you tell me to forget!"

At those words he turned and stepped into the garden, and stood looking up at the starry skies.

I was touched then, and following him, I laid my hand on his arm: "Don't let me vex you, Raoul; you remember I have forgiven you, and I don't think it was any more your fault than mine, only it seems to come harder on me than you, for you have your wife, and in time you will be happy. You are sorry for me now, and in time you will be happy. You are sorry for me now, but when you are away from me, or course, you are happy, but I—I have nothing, it seems to me!"

"Don't talk like that," he said, turning round hastily, "you will break my heart; and how dare you tell me that I am happy, you know I am not!"

"Then you ought to be," I said quietly, for I was frightened at his vehemence, "and if you will only leave me alone and try never to see me again, I am sure you will be. No one," I said, after a pause, occupied in swallowing the sobs down that would rise in my throat, "no one could, I am sure, live with Comtesse Hélène and not be happy, and you have no right, nor I any wish, that she should be made as wretched as I am."

It required a great deal to say that, but I could think of nothing else comforting to say, and he did seem so sadly in need of comfort.

"You are a brave child, Reine, so listen; I swear it, for your sake, I will go away, and winter abroad. It has taken me all this time to make up my mind to that, but for your sake I will go away! I don't think I ever did so much for any woman before." And then he leaned down and gave me one kiss, standing there in the moonlight.

"Oh, don't! don't!" I cried out; "have some mercy on me. Leave me alone, it all makes it so much harder for me!"

"Well, I won't touch you again, or kiss you either, but just stand quite still there, and let me take one good look at you, my queen of daisies! Daisies are quite my favorite flowers," he went on, taking two out of my bouquet as he spoke. "You take this one, and we will each trust our fate to the daisies for the last time!"

I began mechanically pulling mine to pieces, but my tears often obstructed my view of the white petals. He had finished his first.

"Beaucoup," he said, throwing the stalk on the ground, and looking with his dark gray eyes into mine, "of course it is horridly selfish—but I am glad of it."

I pulled out the last petal as he spoke. "Par fantaisie." I said, in a grieved tone. "you see the daisy is true to its first estimate of your character!"

He snatched the stalk out of my hand and threw it angrily away. "Don't believe it," he said; "it is not like the Reine des Marguerites, all truth!"

We stood still for a moment listening to the splash, splash, of the fountain, and then, before I had time to speak or turn away, I was in his arms and he was covering my face with kisses. I was very weak, was I not? But when I stood once more looking at him, standing before me, with his arms folded, waiting for me to reproach him, I could only look up at him and say pathetically, "Ah, Raoul, have pity on me, —do not try to make me more wicked than I am; as wicked as you are," I added.

"I am wicked, am I not?" he said. "But don't shiver now, and look so frightened, I am only going to give you my arm, and take you back to the ball-room for the rest of our dance, which will soon be over."

I felt ashamed of myself as I took his arm. I make no excuse, I knew it was wrong; but * * * * I did it, and soon we were dancing to that saddest of all waltzes "Künster leben." He never spoke till the very last bars were being played, when for a minute he held me closer to him, and whispered, "Good-bye, little Reine, something tells me we shall not meet again for a long time, but remember it is at your bidding; never fear but I shall keep my oath, good-bye, God bless you!"

I could only say, "Good-bye, I think it is best," in a faltering, trembling tone, when the dance came to an end, and he led me to my seat.

As I sat down, Comtesse Hélène came up to her husband. "Really, Raoul, I am afraid we must be going. I am so obliged to you, Mademoiselle De Ligny, for keeping us so late. You have certainly performed your duties as a hostess—as far as we are concerned—perfectly!"

Before I could answer she turned to say something to Raoul; the look of love in her face seemed quite to glorify it. "How fond she is of him," I thought, with a pang, as they turned away; "how fond she is of him!" When they had gone, the other guests began to think of leaving too, and soon I, with my faded daisies, was left standing alone in the deserted ball-room.

CHAPTER V.

Two years have passed away since that eventful ball—two years, which, despite the changes they have brought, went slower and lasted longer than any others I have ever known. And yet changes generally make the are calculated to be five thousand to one against the occurrence of this particular event. A whist-player would sometimes give much to know how many honors are held by his partner; a fact which, of course, in honorable contest, he can only guess approximately by the course of the play. Nevertheless, calculators, especially the mathematician Demoivre, have estimated numerous probabilities in connection with the four honors of each suit. Such questions as these have been answered: "What are the odds against the dealer and his partner having all the honors between them?" "And what against their holding three honors, but not the fourth?" "What are the odds against the other two players holding four, and against holding three?" Without going into particulars, we may say that the odds in these supposed instances range from thirteen against seven up to twenty-three against one.—All the Year Round.

CUPID'S ALLEY.

A MORALITY.

BY AUSTIN DOBSON.

It runs (as saith my chronicler)
Across a smoky city—
A Babel filled with whirr and stir,
Huge, gloomy, black, and gritty;
Dark-louring looks the hillside near,
Dark-yawning looks the valley—
But here 'tis always green and clear,
And this—is "Cupid's Alley."

And, from an arbor green herein,
Set somewhere toward the middle,
An ancient fiddler, gray and thin,
Scrapes on an ancient fiddle;
Alert he seems, but aged snow
To paint the Stygian gallery;
With wisp of forelock on his brow
He plays—in "Cupid's Alley."

All day he plays—a single tune!—
But by the oddest chances,
Gavotte, or Brawl, or Rigadoon,
It suits all kinds of dances;
My Lord may walk a pas de Cour
To Jenney's pas de Ondiet;—
You need not e'en have danced before
To dance—in "Cupid's Alley!"

And here, for ages yet untold,
Long, long before my ditty,
Came rich and poor, and young and old,
From out the crowded city;
And still to-day they come, they go,
And just as fancies tally,
They foot it quick, they foot it slow,
All day—in "Cupid's Alley."
Strange dance! The tree to Rank and Rags;
Here no distinction matters,
Here Riches shakes its money-bags
And Poverty its tatters;
Church, Army, Navy, Physic, Law;—
Maid, Mistress, Master, Valet;
Long locks, gray hairs, bald heads, and a',—
They bob—in "Cupid's Alley."

Strange pairs! To laughing, fresh Fifteen
Here capers Prudence thrifty;
Here Prodigal leads down the green
A blushing Maid of fifty;
To some it seems a serious thing,
To some mere shilly-shally;
And some o'en dance without the ring
(Ah me!)—in "Cupid's Alley."

And sometimes one to one will dance,
And think of one behind her;
And one by one will stand, perchance,
Yet look all ways to find her;
Some seek a partner with a sigh,
Some win him with a sally;
And some they know not how nor why,
Strange fate!—of "Cupid's Alley."

And some will dance an age or so
Who came for half a minute;
And some, who like the game, will go
Before they well begin it;
And some will vow they're "danced to death,"
Who (somehow) always rally;
Strange cures are wrought (mine author saith,)
Strange cures!—in "Cupid's Alley."

It may be one will dance to-day,
And dance no more to-morrow;
It may be one will steal away
And nurse a life-long sorrow;
What then? The rest advance, evade,
Unite, disperse, and rally,
React, coquet, and gallopade,
Not less—in "Cupid's Alley."

For till that city's factories vast
And sundering beams shall crumble;—
And till that Fiddler lean at last
From off his seat shall tumble;—
Till then (the Civic records say)
This quaint, fantastic ballet
Of Go and Stay, of Yea and Nay,
Must last—in "Cupid's Alley."

THE ORIGIN OF "THE TATLER" AND "THE SPECTATOR."—Two years after his marriage, on April 12, 1709, and without the knowledge of Addison, Steele published the first number of The Tatler. The significance of this event could have been foreseen by no one. Steele did not know, and none of his readers knew, that from this small seed would spring many a goodly tree, bright with flowers and wealthy in fruit, and that foliage, blossoms and fruit would be unlike aught that had been grown hitherto in the garden of our literature. The name of Isaac Bickerstaff had achieved notoriety from the famous joke played by Swift upon the astrologer and almanac maker, Partridge, who, although done to death and decently buried by the great wit, would not believe in his own decease. Steele took advantage of the popularity created by Swift's invention, and announced his journal as The Lucubrations of Isaac Bickerstaff, Esq. The paper was published three times a week, the days on which the post left London, and contained, besides amusing sketches of character, "accounts of gallantry, pleasure, and entertainment," and poetical criticisms, a portion devoted to foreign and domestic news. This variety of plan suited the habits of Steele, and afforded scope for his genius. His versatility and his mercurial nature made prolonged labor distasteful; but he had wit, and readiness, and lively fancy, a quickness of perception and a facility in composition, which eminently fitted him for the task he had selected. Addison detected Steele's hand in the sixth number, and afforded him some slight assistance from that time; but it was not until about eighty numbers had appeared that he became a frequent contributor. For some months almost all the writing, as well as the editing, of the work devolved upon Steele. It would seem that he was not a little careless about the revision of the proofs; but readers in those days were easily satisfied, and the niceties of composition were as much disregarded as a uniform system of spelling. Pope in verse, and Addison in prose, were the literary reformers of the age; and the latter, after a century and a half, retains his fame not only as a moralist and humorist, but as a consummate master of language. Steele wrote with strong feeling and healthy enthusiasm, with much pathos and a varied knowledge of life; but he often wrote incorrectly, and his sentences are sometimes so oddly put together as to obscure the meaning. The depreciation he has received from some critics is due, we believe, in great measure, to the looseness of his style; but it may be observed, while acknowledging Steele's weakness in this respect, that frequently and almost always when moved by the pathos of his subject, the writer's language is simple, forcible, and appropriate. The best of Steele's papers in The Tatler are excelled by Addison alone, and there is a sprightliness and simplicity of tone about them which make them delightful reading. Steele came to his work well furnished, he carried it on with infinite vivacity, and in spite of the help rendered him by his illustrious friend, the color of the work, if the term may be allowed, comes from the hand of Steele. As the teller of slight and pathetic tales he is superior to Addison, and in criticism he takes a place by Addison's side. "What a good critic he was!" exclaimed Landor. "I doubt if he has ever been surpassed." Steele was indeed born for literature far more than for politics, for which his chief qualifications were a directness and manliness of purpose, and a love of country as pure and chivalrous as the love he felt for women. For business and commercial speculations he had little genius, but his rashness forced him into many a lootish scheme at the cost of time and money that might have been spent more profitably. The only post held by Steele when he started on his career of essayist was that of Official Gazetteer. After a while he was made Commissioner of Stamps; but when the Tories came into office, Steele, whose Whiggery had become obnoxious, lost his previous appointment. On Jan. 2, 1711, Swift writes to Stella: "Steele's last Tatler came out to-day. You will see it before this comes to you, and how he takes leave of the world. He never told so much as Mr. Addison of it, who was as much surprised as I. * * * To my knowledge he had several good hints to go upon, but was so lazy and weary of the work he would not improve them." Steele was impulsive and given to change, but he was not lazy, and two months after the exit of The Tatler appeared the first number of The Spectator. Addison was consulted this time. The two friends formed the plan of the papers in concert, and, according to Bishop Hurd, the characters that comprise the celebrated club were the common work of both. This may be true; but it is certain that the second number, in which the different characters of the club are sketched, was written by Steele, and that we are indebted to his pen for our first introduction to the immortal Sir Roger de Coverley. Miss Aikin, with the curious habit of depreciating Steele in vogue among writers, regards it as "a singular circumstance" that the first hints of this character should have been thrown out by him; as if the versatile fancy and happy art of character-drawing that had so long sustained The Tatler were incapable of picturing the humorous knight! The potrait is a mere sketch, but the few lines that form it show the hand of a master. The Spectator was wonderfully popular. All the town became familiar with it; it was found on every breakfast table; fine ladies who knew nothing of literature followed the prevailing fashion, and learned to talk about Will Honeycomb and Will Wimble, and to laugh at the eccentricities of Sir Roger. The circulation was enormous for an age in which books and papers were usually the food of a circle of wits, instead of being, as in our day, a common necessary of life. Both in numbers and in volumes the famous essays sold by thousands, and the surprise of Steele must have been as great as his pleasure. Nevertheless, after a while he grew restless and impatient, and at the close of 1712 brought his journal to an end. This was done, as in the former case, without consultation with Addison; and when, two or three months later, Steele commenced The Guardian, he did so without communicating with his friend.—Cornhill Magazine.

FOUR-IN-HAND DRIVING IN ENGLAND.—In 1856 the Four Horse Coach Club—with its uniform of a brown double-breasted coat and a button with a monogram of "F. H. C."—was started with only thirteen coach-owning members in a very humble way; for although one of them, an officer of the Life Guards, had a piebald team, with a leader which was valued at a thousand pounds, two noblemen horsed themselves at half that sum, going in for simple utility. The President, the late Mr. William Mavorill, of Rokeby, a real coachman, cared neither for quality nor for extravagant action, and was satisfied with a useful team of roans, good country barouche horses. According to that eminent authority on the road in 1865, several of the select club drivers who made a creditable appearance in the Park or on a straight road, were not willing to trust themselves, even with two active grooms behind, and four high-stepping perfectly-fitted horses, without a nurse alongside in the shape of a professional coachman, or some amateur of the old school condemned by adverse fates to keep no whip of his own. The Club now numbers fifteen coaches, exclusive of the three drags of the three cavalry regiments which hold coub rank. Within the last five or six years an energetic revival has set in. The Coaching Club, or C. C., has been formed with a very long list of driving members, and adopted the blue and buff uniform of its President, the Duke of Beaufort's Hunt. It has, within that period, become the correct thing for young men of wealth to make up a four-in-hand in which, not unfrequently, the hunters which figured in Leicestershire in Winter are put in "leather" for the Summer parade. It was estimated this season that there were at least a hundred teams in the park at one time or other, including many that do not belong to either of the clubs. Plutocracy equals and excels aristocracy in this latest amusement, the teams of the Rothschilds, Murriettas, and Brasseys, excite as much attention and admiration as those of the Dukes, Earls and Barons whose coronets adorn the panels of their coaches at a four-in-hand parade arranged previous to some garden party or suburban dinner. The revival of private teams has led to the revival of stagecoach associations and partnerships. These enable the proprietors or proprietor to reduce the cost of the the amusement by the fares to be obtained from passengers who, in fine weather, prefer the road to the rail. Where the horses have been well bought at the beginning and well sold at the close of the season, the owning drivers have had their amusement at a comparatively insignificant expense. Hunters that have been driven all the Summer are, if they remain sound, in rare condition for Novemoer. This season there is a perfectly-appointed coach to Brighton, doing the distance in about six hours, with a halt for luncheon on the road. Another to Dorking, a third to Guildford, a fourth to St. Albans, a fifth to Tunbridge Wells, and a sixth to Watford; all traveling through pleasant roads, lunching at comfortable inns, and driven over certain stages by the gentlemen partners. A club has also been started in Piccadilly, The Badminton, with the Duke of Beaufort as President, and a strong committee, where, beside the usual club advantages, the members can learn to drive or break their horses as leaders and wheelers in the club coach, under the auspices of a professional coachman.—New Quarterly Magazine.

A LADY SURGEON IN THE ARMY.—There was at this time at the Cape a person whose eccentricities attracted universal attention—Dr. James Barry, Staff Surgeon to the garrison and the Governor's medical adviser. Lord Charles described him to me as the most skillful of physicians and the most wayward of men. He had lately been in professional attendance upon the Governor, who was somewhat fanciful about his health, but, taking umbrage at something said or done, he had left his patient to prescribe for himself. I had heard so much of this capricious, yet privileged gentleman, that I had a great curiosity to see him. I shortly afterward sat next him at dinner at one of the regimental messes. In this learned Pundit I beheld a beardless lad, apparently about my own age, with an unmistakable Scotch type of countenance, reddish hair, high cheek bones. There was a certain effeminacy in his manner, which he always seemed striving to overcome. His style of conversation was greatly superior to that one usually heard at mess-tables in those days of non-competitive examination. A mystery attached to Barry's whole professional career, which extended over more than half a century. While at the Cape he fought a duel, and was considered to be of a most quarrelsome disposition. He was frequently guilty of flagrant breaches of discipline, and on more than one occasion was sent home under arrest, but somehow or other his offenses were always condoned at head quarters. In Hart's Annual army List for the year 1865 the name of James Barry, M. D., stands at the head of the list of Inspectors General of Hospitals. In the July of that same year the Times one day announced the death of Dr. Barry, and the next day it was officially reported to the Horse Guards that the Doctor was a woman. It is singular that neither the landlady of her lodging nor the black servant who had lived with her for years had the slightest suspicion of her sex. The late Mrs. Ward, daughter of Colonel Fely, from whom I had these particulars, told me further that she believed the doctor to have been the granddaughter of a Scotch Earl, whose name I do not now give, as I am unable to substantiate the correctness of my friend's surmise, and that she adopted the medical profession from attachment to an Army surgeon who has not been many years dead.—Lord Albemarle's Recollections.

THE BAPTISTS IN ENGLAND.—Conflicting historians have contrived to wrap in no little obscurity the origin, and even the progress, of the Brownists, or Baptists, who settled in Southwark in the year 1616, the year of Shakespeare's death. Crosby and Neale have confounded sects and congregations. There were notable men among the Baptist ministers of the seventeenth century. Some were tolerable scholars, others were illiterate, but earnest. A few were seceders from the Established Church; not a few exercised low but useful callings. The wiser leaders insisted on the value of scholarship when the interpretation of Scripture was in question, and the unwise naturally insisted that a dunce might be as safe an interpreter as a doctor. Among those who are to be named with respect is Canne, who, in the time of Charles the First, made Scripture interpret itself, for learned and simple, by publishing his edition of the Bible. "He was," says Mr. Pike, "the man who first collated for our English Bible a complete set of marginal references." It was the work of two-and-twenty years, and yet only the small portion of the work of a life. Canne was not a Cromwellian; he preached for the Fifth Monarchy men in Coleman street, and contrived to vex the Protector's Government in and out of the pulpit. Canne, after the restoration, withdrew to Amsterdam, where he soon died, nearly an octogenarian; and this scholar's successor in the leadership of "the ancient society" was Sam Howe, the cobbler. Many other Baptist ministers have originally been cobblers; among them Dr. Carey, the celebrated missionary. Howe preached his famous sermon, "The Sufficiency of the Spirit's Teaching," to show that inspiration was better than learning. When he had concluded, Dr. Goodwin, the learned ex-Vicar of St. Stephen's, Coleman street, who had joined the Innependents, remarked to the preacher, "You have made a calf and danced about it." The sermon, however, proved that Howe was a man of considerable culture, a fact which some Baptists are proud in disallowing. They have more cause for being proud of Keach, a man also of humble birth, but of peculiar qualifications for the life to which he devoted himself. His series of sermons, "The Jewish Sabbath Abrogated," is said to have won for him the approval of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The lower rural clergy were not half so civil to Baptist ministers, their neighbors. We read of the incumbent of Lavingham being so exasperated by the preachings of John Tredwell that the rector, with certain followers, entered the Baptist chapel and there delivered to the Nonconformist congregation, nolentibus volentibus, a sermon, two hours long, against Baptist tenets, at the end of which he retreated, rather shabbily refusing to hear a reply from Tredwell. We fancy that Mr. Spurgeon would be delighted to advertise a similar invasion of his own pulpit, especially if he might announce that a "collection" would be made after the sermon.—The Athenæum.

PROF. TYNDALL'S EXPERIMENTS ON THE TRANSMISSION OF SOUND.—Until very recently it was considered that the optical transparency of the atmosphere was directly connected with its power of transmitting sound, so that a clear air was thought to be the most favorable acoustic medium. It was also held that fog, being a collection of minute liquid particles, from which the sound could be reflected, was therefore a damper of sound. Both views were by this investigation shown to be false. Humboldt had noticed that the falls of the Orinoco sounded louder by night than by day, and he concluded, from thermometric experiments, that the convection currents of the atmosphere during the day caused the sound to be deadened by reflection at the limiting surfaces of these different layers of air. Tyndall applied this principle to explain the extraordinary quenching of the sounds of the fog-horn at distances of less than three miles, when the air was clearest and the apparatus producing the sound was plainly visible. He conceived that between his position and the source of sound unequal evaporation from the sea created mixtures of air and vapor of varying density, from which the sound was reflected. It this was so, he argued that echoes should be heard, produced by the reflection from these "acoustic clouds." On placing himself behind the source of sound, his inference was confirmed. He sums up his observations on this point in the following words: "Whatever might be the state of the weather, cloudy or serene, stormy or calm, the aerial echoes, though varying in strength and duration from day to day, were never absent; and on many days, under a perfectly clear sky, they reached (in the case of the syren) an astonishing intensity." But the special merit of Tyndall's researches is the devising a means for testing these views by means of experiments. Using a sensitive flame, and causing a number of layers of gas, with such different specific gravities as carbonic acid and coal gas, to be interposed between it and the source of sound, he found that the waves of sound were unable to penetrate these layers and affect the flame. He then carried his experiment a step further by interposing—first, layers of air of different density, and then air charged with water vapor and other more volatile liquids; in these cases also the same effect was produced. Next, he showed that reflection did actually take place according to the ordinary law for light, heat, and sound. It must be premised that in the experiments above mentioned, by skillful manipulation, one layer of heated gas or air charged with vapor was found sufficient to intercept the sound waves. The apparatus used to show reflection was as follows: Two tin tubes, open at both ends, and about two feet long, were arranged in the form of a V, across the near ends of which air of a different density to the rest was caused to rise. A bell- or high-pitched reed, to produce sound waves was placed at the end of one of the tubes; and at the corresponding end of the other, but screened from the direct action of the waves of sound, was placed a sensitive flame. When the sound was produced, it was (as before) found incapable of affecting a sensitive flame placed beyond the layer of light air; but reflected from this down the other tube, it threw the sensitive flame placed there into violent agitation. This investigation shows, then, that a non-homogeneous medium, though optically transparent, may be acoustically opaque. Next he destroyed the doctrine, prevalent since the time of Derham, that fog, rain, snow, and hail were dampers of sound. Observations in London and at the South Foreland showed that after rain, hail, and snow, sounds rose perceptibly in power; they showed also that fog did not intercept sound, because of the long distances from which it could be heard. Experiment also bore out these observations. Artificial fogs, formed of gunpowder smoke, steam, the fumes of chloride of ammonium and of phosphorus when burnt in the air, were unable to stop the sound waves, which passed most easily and showed themselves by their action upon the sensitive flame. These observations and experiments led to the conclusion that atmospheric homogeneity was the condition most favorable to acoustic transparency; and in a fog, snow, or hail-storm this condition seems best fulfilled. In conclusion of this part of the subject, let us briefly describe the steam-syren, the instrument most suitable for "plucing signals," owing to its generally trustworthy performances. It consists of a trumpet sixteen feet long, varying in diameter from twenty-seven inches at the widest to five inches at the narrowest part. Across the narrow end is fixed a disk, with radial slits cut in it, behind which rotates another disk at about two thousand revolutions a minute, also provided with openings. When the slits of the two disks correspond, the steam which is used to drive the syren escapes in puffs, giving the sound.—Good Words.

THE BALCAN MOUNTAINS.—We left Adrianople on the 1st of November, en route to Shumla, the head-quarters of the Turkish Army. For three days successively we were almost strangers to the luxury of dry clothing, the weather oscillating the whole time between rain and snow. Nor were the objects that met our view of a nature to dispel the gloom which our personal discomforts caused us. The villages through which we passed were deserted by their inhabitants and for the most part in ruins, and our line of march was strewed with the carcasses of horses, buffaloes, and camels, and the sides of the road lined with fresh graves of men. The scenery and weather improved when we approached Selimno, the town which gives its name to the Pass of the Balcan we were about to traverse the following morning. It was this Pass of which Dr. Walsh's description had made such an impression on the British public the year before. The following extract from my notes, made on the spot, will show how widely I differed in opinion from that Reverend gentleman respecting the strength of this natural barrier to an attacking army:

November 5.—After a ride of three miles we entered the mountain gorge. The Balcan here runs north-east and south-west. We traversed its side, which is covered with vineyards from the summit to the base. The road, which was paved at the beginning of the ascent, was in good order and broad enough in the narrowest part to allow two carriages to pass: it is practicable for artillery, and indeed for every description of wheel conveyance. The soil of the country, of which the road is made, is of sandstone, which, containing a proportion of common clay, forms quickly, when broken into pieces, a compact substance, admirably adapted for the purpose. It is impervious to damp; for it was neither affected by the rain of the four or five preceding days, nor by the fall of snow which was melting at the time. It is easily repairable, the soil itself forming the materials. With so much facility is this road constructed that any cart actually makes its own road by the track of its wheels. This remark is not only applicable to the Balcan, but generally to the hilly parts of Roumelia and Bulgaria, which we traversed. Hence it is evident that should an army wish to cross the mountain by the Selimno Pass, it has nothing to do but to cut away the brushwood, draw it on one side, and the baggage and battering trains form the road. This in fact was what the Russians did in that part of the Balcan by which they advanced. They cut down a few trees and filled up the inequalities of the ground. The number of carriages that accompanied that Army is a proof how trifling were the difficulties they had to encounter. Almost every field-officer had his caîche, the general officers three or four, and every company a cart for their camp-kettles. Since the publication of my Narrative, it appears that the obstacles to an invading army are even less formidable than I had anticipated; for instead of there being only five passes in the Balcan, as was then supposed, there are no less than thirteen, "besides numerous bye and cross roads, all equally fit for carts or artillery." Two days' march brought us to Shumla. The streets were so full of Turkish troops that our horses could hardly make their way through the crowd. We were taken for Russians, but no other attempt was made to annoy us than by the soldiers making an insulting noise with their mouths, and bawling Muscov (Muscovite) with all the strength of their lungs.—Lord Albemarle's Recollections.

SHETLAND FAIRY SONGS.

CRADLE SONG.

Sleep, my baby, beside the fire,
Sleep, child, sleep;
Winds are wailing, higher and higher,
Waves are rising, higher and higher,
Sleep, child, sleep;
While thy father, out on the sea,
Toils all night for thee and me.

Sleep, my baby, content and blest,
Sleep, child, sleep;
Whether the heart in thy mother's breast
Be light or heavy—so best! so best!
Sleep, child, sleep!
While thy father, out on the sea,
Toils all night for thee and me.

YOUNG AND OLD.

When we are young our days are sweet,
They climb our knees and lie at our feet;
When we are old they are hard to please,
Cold as the rock and wild as the breeze;
They kiss us kindly and speak us fair,
But we know their hearts are otherwhere.
Oh, my son's my son till he gets him a wife,
But my daughter's my daughter all her life.

When we are young our days are bright,
And full of hope from morn till night;
When we are old we sit alone,
And think of pleasant days long gone,
When the house was full of the children's noise,
The willful girls and the naughty boys.
Oh, my son's my son till he gets him a wife,
But my daughter's my daughter all my life.

"WHEN A MAN COMES HOME."

When a man comes home,
Don't begin to wrangle;
Better far to sleep
In the hungry deep,
'Neath white sheets of foam,
And of sea-weed tangle.
Peace, peace, peace;
Cease, cease, cease.
When a man comes home
Don't begin to wrangle.

When a man comes home,
Let him enter smiling;
Take the children sweet,
Playing round his feet;
Throw off grief and gloom,
And the world's beguiling.
Peace, peace, peace;
Cease, cease, cease.
When a man comes home,
Let him find all smiling.

When a man comes home,
He should still remember
'Tis not always May,
Either work or play—
Sure as June will come,
There will come December.
Peace, peace, peace;
Cease, cease, cease.
Evening brings all home,
And sunshine in December.

"A SECRET AT HOME."

The maid that deceived me was fatal and fair,
With the curl on her lip and her arrogant air;
The wife I deceived is as tender and true
As the grass on the mountain-slope covered with dew.
Ah! many a storm Love can safely outride,
But a secret at home is like rocks under tide.

The maid that forsook me was cruel and cold;
She cared not for love, she cared only for gold.
The wife of my bosom is simple and mild,
With the heart of a woman, the smile of a child.
Ah! many a storm Love can safely outride,
But a secret at home is like rocks under tide.

FAMILIAR VOICES.

Down in the deep, up in the sky,
I see them always, far or nigh,
And I shall see them till I die—
The old familiar faces.
They may have long forgotten mine—
But I remember, every line,
The old familiar faces.
Ah! nothing e'er replaces
The old familiar faces.

And all day long, so close and near,
As in a mystic dream I hear
Their gentle accents kind and dear—
The old familiar voices.
They have no sound that I can reach—
But silence sweeter is than speech;
The old familiar voices!
Nothing my heart rejoices
Like the old familiar voices.

DRINKING SONG.

Drink, my jolly boys, drink and be merry,
Bonnie the bride is, and brown as a berry;
Soft are her lips and sweet as red clover,
Drink and be merry, lads, half seas over.

Drink, my jolly boys, drink with discerning,
Wedlock's a lane where there is no turning;
Never was owl more blind than a lover,

"COME, MY CHILDREN DEAR."

Come, my children dear;
Come, my baby blossom;
Come and shelter here
In your mother's bosom.

O my life of youth,
Full of mirth and laughter,
Presumptuous and truth,
O the dark days after.

Come, my children dear;
Come, my baby blossom;
Come and shelter here
In your mother's bosom.

HOME.

By the fireside still the light is shining,
The children's arms round the parents twining.
From sweet, sweet love, oh, who would roam?
Be it ever so homely, home is home.

Should we fall out, let us mend ill-doing,
And begin anew a second wooing;
Be it ever so homely, home is home,

HOW DID THE SEAS BECOME SALT?—A question which has long been regarded as among the great mysteries of nature—the question, How did the seas become salt—seems to us to find a ready solution when we consider that the ocean once formed the earth's cloud-envelope. We may, in fact, regard the oceans as holding in solution what was washed from the earth or otherwise extracted from its substance during the ages when the waters of ocean were passing from the former to their present condition. For then all the conditions assisted the action of the waters themselves—the intense heat of the earth's crust and of the atmosphere, the tremendous atmospheric pressure, and consequently the high boiling point, (so that the waters first formed on the earth's heated crust must have been far hotter than is boiling water at the present time,) and the presence also in the atmosphere of many vapors which would greatly help the decomposing action of the water itself. Consider, for instance, the following description, abridged from a paper by Dr. Sterry Hunt, the eminent Canadian chemist and geologist. After showing that carbonic acid, chlorine, and sulphurous acids would be present in enormous quantities in the primeval atmosphere, besides, of course, still vaster quantities of the vapor of water, he proceeds: "These gases, with nitrogen and an excess of oxygen, would form an atmosphere of great density. In such an atmosphere condensation would only take place at a temperature far above the present boiling point, and the lower levels of the earth's slowly cooling crust would be drenched with a heated solution of hydrochloric acid, whose decomposing action, aided by its high temperature, would be exceedingly rapid. The primitive igneous rock on which these showers fell probably resembled in composition certain furnace slags or volcanic glasses." The process of decomposition would continue "under the action of the heavy showers until the affinities of the hydrochloric acid were satisfied. Later, large quantities of sulphuric acid would be formed, and drenching showers of heated solutions of this energetic dissolvent would fall upon the earth's heated crust. After the compounds of sulpaur and chlorine had been separated from the air, carbonic acid would still continue to be an important constituent of the atmosphere. It would be gradually diminished in gravity," through chemical processes resulting in the formation of various clays, "while the separated lime, magnesia, and alkalis changed into bicarbonates, would be carried down to the sea in a state of solution." Here we seem to have a fair account rendered of the enormous quantity of matter forming collectively what is called the brine of the ocean, and containing, besides common salt, (chloride of sodium,) sulphuric acid, magnesia, soda, sulphate of lime, and other substances. The theory that these substances have been washed from the earth's surface by causes such as are now in progress, would not, we think, be seriously entertained if the vast amount of matter thus present in the waters of the sea were remembered and considered. Brine forms, on the average, about 3½ per cent. of sea water. Hence, if we take the average depth of the ocean at two miles, or, roundly, 10,000 feet, it follows that, if all the water of the sea were evaporated, there would be left a deposit of salt averaging 350 feet in depth all over the present floor of the sea. This would correspond in quantity to salt covering all the present land surface of the earth to a depth of a thousand feet, or to a deposit two hundred feet deep over the entire surface of the globe; so that the idea of its having been washed from the land is altogether inadmissible. It may, indeed, be urged that, as the process of washing down from the land is continually going on, only a sufficiency of time would be needed to account for any quantity whatever of sea-salt. But apart from the fact that only a certain thickness of the solid crust, and that thickness by no means very great, could be drawn upon for the supply, and that the very continuance of the process shows us that even that portion of the earth's crust has not been drained of its salts, there is every reason to believe that the extraction of salt from the sea is going on and has been going on for many ages past at fully as great a rate as the addition of fresh salts. Although the process of evaporation cannot remove the salts, these, as Maury justly notes, can be extracted by other processes. "We know," he says, "that the insects of the sea do take out a portion of them, and, that the salt-ponds and arms which from time to time in the geological calendar have been separated from the sea, afford an escape by which the quantity of chloride of sodium in its waters—the most abundant of its solid ingredients—is regulated. The insects of the sea cannot build their structures of this salt, for it would dissolve again as fast as they could separate it. But here the ever-ready atmosphere comes into play and assists the insects in regulating the salts. It cannot take them [the salts] up from the sea, it is true, but it can take the sea away from them; for it pumps up the water from these pools that have been barred off, transfers it to the clouds, and they deliver it back to the sea as fresh water, leaving behind the salts it contained in a solid state. These are operations which have been going on for ages; proof that they are still going on is continually before our eyes; for the 'hard water' of our fountains, the marlbanks of the valleys, the salt-beds of the plains, Albion's chalky cliffs, and the coral islands of the sea are monuments in attestation." We must, then, regard the salts of the sea as in the main dissolved from the solid crust during that remote period when the seas were young. The seas thus indicate to us the nature of those vast chemical processes through which the earth had to pass in the earlier stages of its history. If the present crust of the earth did not afford, as it does, the clearest evidence of a time when the earth's whole frame glowed with intense heat; if we could not, as we can, derive from the movements of the celestial bodies, as well as from the telescopic appearance of some among them, the most certain assurance that all the planets, nay, the whole of the solar system itself, were once in the state of glowing vapor; the ocean brine—the mighty residuum, left after the earth had passed through its baptism of liquid fire, would leave us in little doubt respecting the main features at least of the earth's past history. The seas could never have attained their present condition had not the earth which they encompassed when they were young been then an orb of fire. Every wave that pours in upon the shore speaks to us of so remote a past that all ordinary time measures fail us in the attempt to indicate the length of the vast intervals separating us from it. The saltness of the ocean is no minor feature or mere detail of our globe's economy, but has a significance truly cosmical in its importance. Tremendous indeed must have been the activity of those primeval processes, fierce the heat of those primeval fires, under whose action sixty thousand millions of millions of tons of salts were extracted from the earth's substance and added to its liquid envelope.—R. A. Proctor in the Cornhill Magazine.

MASQUERADING IN LONDON.—This Summer I fell in with Sir Jacob Astley, afterward Lord Hastings. We were for six years fellows at Westminster. At a later period we sat together as members for Norfolk in the first Reformed Parliament. I have a special reason for remembering a grand fancy ball which he gave at the Argyll Rooms, and at which I was present. Uniforms were admitted, and I was very proud of mine. Two maiden ladies connected with Norfolk, but well known in the West of London assemblies, attracted universal attention. They were plump, dark-complexioned, and elderly; they appeared as Swiss shepherdesses, wore broad-brimmed straw hats profusely decorated with ribbons and flowers, scarlet bodices tastefully ornamented, and skirts which, if worn on the stage, would have drawn down upon the wearers the censure of the Lord Chamberlain. The Swiss costume admits of much latitude, and of this they freely availed themselves. To heighten the effect of their charms the rouge-pot had been called into requisition. The ball was kept up with great spirit till long after daylight. As in duty bound, I was among the last to go. I was hurrying down staire when my name was called and my assistance claimed in the shrill accents of my spinster friends. "Their coachman had played them false; no hackney-coach was on the stand. Would I escort them home on foot?" There was no help for it—off I set with a shepherdess on each arm. As ill-luck would have it, we encountered a crowd of bricklayers on their way to work. Their comments on the trio may be imagined, but must not be repeated. With a soldier's gallantry I stuck to my shepherdesses, but the epithets with which they and I were pelted are still ringing in my ears.—Lord Albemarle's Recollections.

GOSSIP ABOUT CUTTLE-FISHES.—Through the establishment of salt-water aquaria people are beginning to have correct notions of cuttle-fishes, their habits, and appearance. We call them fishes, but they bear no resemblance to fishes with scales, which propel themselves through the water by the agency of tail and fins. Strictly speaking, they are not fishes at all. They are very nearly related to our familiar oysters, cockles, whelks, and other mollusks. Cuttles, like oysters, are "shell-fish," in the true acceptation of the term—only that the cuttle-fish, in the great majority of cases, has its shell inclosed within its body, instead of being an external and protective structure—and the bodies of both animals, with those of all other mollusks, are built up on one great plan of structure. The chief characteristics or modifications of this plan in the case of the cuttle-fishes, consist in the elongation of the skin, or "mantle," in the neighborhood of the head, to form the arms or tentacles so distinctive of these beings, the extension of this skin to form various kinds of fins, and the presence of a tube, or "funnel," opening just below the head in front, and through which the water used in breathing is ejected. By this latter means the cuttle-fishes propel themselves backward in the water, on the same principle that a cannon recoils after a discharge. And we still remember with delight the Summer day when we first witnessed a shoal of common squids careering through the calm waters of the Firth of Forth, propelled backward by the jets d'eau from their funnels. The sharp hinder tip of the body just protruded, like the prow of a vessel, above the surface, while the head and rest of the body were below. The best known kinds of cuttle-fishes, and those which have been kept in our aquaria, are the genera sepia, loligo, sepiola, octopus, and eledone. Of the first genus, the Mediterranean sepia, sometimes found on our own coasts, is a very familiar species. The loligos include the well-known squids, and the sepiolæ are nearly allied to the sepia itself. The octopi are the most famous of aquarium-inhabitants, and differ from the three preceding kinds in possessing eight arms only; the former possessing ten arms, of which two are longer than the others, and are provided with suckers at their extremities only. The eledone is also an eight-armed cuttle-fish, and a very familiar species of this genus is the Eledone moschata, so named from the musk-like odor it emits. The domestic life and economy of the cuttle-fishes reveal some interesting and anomalous features as exhibited in aquaria. We some time ago received some interesting particulars regarding the pranks of some octopi which lived in Dr. Dohrn's famous aquarium at Naples. Three octopi shared a large tank with three lobsters, the six being original proprietors and tenants of the miniature sea. Any new comer, however nearly related he might be to either the crustacean or cuttle-fish tenants, was invariably received with demonstrations of the most hostile nature. A lobster and octopus battle is certainly a novelty in the way of animal combats, but such a fight actually occurred in the Naples arena. A lobster giant who had previously exhibited his prowess in crushing with his great pincer claws the skull of a turtle as easily as if the reptile's head had been a nut, was introduced into the happy family circle in the octopus tank. Immediately the largest octopus gave battle to the crustacean, the lobster early in the fight seizing one of the soft, pliant arms of his opponent in his claws, the octopus managing, however, after a time to withdraw the captured member. Day by day the combat dragged out its weary length, sometimes one side being temporarily victorious—as when the lobster lost a large claw—and sometimes the other. At last the combatants were separated, the lobster being placed in a new and unappropriated domain in an adjoining tank. Now comes the strangest part of the history; for the octopus, as if seized with the passion, which, if exhibited in humanity, we should term one of "dire revenge," climbed over the partition separating the tanks, seeking his enemy, and, having found him, proceeded to wage war anew. The result was most disastrous to the crustacean, for the octopus was found, we are told, with the lobster in his clutches, literally torn into halves. Thus, to natural ferocity, we find the octopus unites immense agility and a stolid persistence. This same cuttle-fish extended no sympathy to his own species; for when two others—in addition to the two who had from the first been his companions—were introduced into his tank, he chased them from the water, and forced them to take refuge on the dry rocks above. Another octopus, in a British aquarium, pulled out the plug of his tank, and brought death on himself and all his companions in a single night.—Chambers's Journal.

ARABIAN HORSES.—The first thing that strikes one in the true Arabian, setting aside what may be termed his personal beauty, is great general length. What reach, what stride these horses must have! They are born racers! were the thoughts that flashed across our mind. Next to the length, a general appearance of character and of blood, or high breeding, is conspicuous. The head is not particularly small or short in proportion to the size or height of the horse; it is not a small, neat, pretty, meaningless head. The frontal bones and the parietal bones or walls of the skull above are large, bold, often prominent, and the brain cavity is capacious and well developed, giving an appearance and power almost human. The nasal bones, on the other hand, are fine and subservient to the frontal, and of a delicate and graceful outline. The orbits of the eye are large and prominent. The eye is full, large, and lustrous; it is very beautiful; the beauty is not so much dependent upon the size of the eye as derived from its depth and expression; and when the animal is excited it displays much fire. The lids are particularly fine, and the lashes long and silky. The face is lean and full of fine drawing. The muzzle is particularly fine, the lips long and thin, the upper lip well cut, the lower lip small, compressed and terse. The nostril in a state of repose very long, beautifully curled, delicate and thin; when the horse is in action or excited the nostril opens very wide, and gives a bold square appearance to that part of the face. The lower jaws are fine and clean, the upper part of the lower jaw toward the neck is very deep, and the jaws are set wide apart. The cheek bones are sharply cut. The ears are well out, pointed, and well placed, and when pricked point inward in a peculiar manner, which is considered a point of great beauty and a great sign of high breeding. The neck is of moderate length, and of a graceful curve or gentle arch from the poll to the withers; it is a muscular, light neck, and the splenius muscle is well developed. The junction of the head and neck is very graceful. The head is well set on. The withers are sufficiently high and run well back, but are not too thin. The back is short, the loins are powerful, the croup high, the haunch very fine, the tail well set on, and the dock short. The quarters are both long and deep; the gaskins are sufficiently full and muscular without being heavy, ponderous, or vulgar; the thighs are well let down, the hocks are clean, well formed, well placed, large, and near the ground. The shoulders well placed, long, and of GOSSIP FROM FRANCE.

THE LABOR QUESTION DISCUSSED.

HOW A SOLDIER OF THE REPUBLIC OBTAINED MONEY BY TRICKERY—A DESERVED PUNISHMENT—PROGRAMME OF THE WORKING MEN'S CONGRESS—HOW DISPUTES BETWEEN EMPLOYES AND EMPLOYERS ARE SETTLED—A BIT OF PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Oct. 6, 1876.

"Tirer une carotte" is a French slang phrase, which has no exact equivalent in the English language, the literal translation being "pulling out a carrot." It is used metaphorically to express the act of drawing money from some one by tricky means. The "carotte de Joyeux" has just been rendered famous by a general order published by Gen. Ducrot, commanding the Eighth Army Corps. He says that some absurd reports have been circulated about the treatment of the troops during the Autumn manœuvres, and many lies told about the harsh treatment of the men and their lack of food. Nearly always these lies come from despicable party men, who calumniate the commanders of the Army for the purpose of making trouble; but sometimes these lies have been told by young men actually serving in the Army, who have related the most singular tales in order to benefit by them personally. A notable case of the kind is that of Private Joyeux, of the Twenty-seventh Infantry, a reservist serving out his twenty-eight days. In order to get money from his parents he wrote home that no rations were to be issued during the Autumn manœuvres, and that each soldier had to provide for himself, and an order to this effect having been issued by the commanding General. Young Joyeux received the money necessary to pay for his living during the manœuvres, but his father, being a Republican, thought that this was a very hard case, and published the fact to the world as an outrage. It got into the papers and thus came to the knowledge of Gen. Ducrot. But what made this matter worse was the fact that young Joyeux did not take part in the manœuvres at all, but was very comfortably installed in a garrison service. Young Joyeux had to pay dearly for his "carrot," for he was condemned for malveillance, or what Americans would call "cussedness," to sixty days' imprisonment, eight of them in a closed cell on bread and water. But the imprisonment was nothing to the publicity, for all this was read in a general order to the troops, and all the papers in France are now laughing over the "carotte de Joyeux."

We have a Labor Congress now in session here, and it is a marvel in its way, because in no wise connected with violence. When the matter was first mentioned there was some hesitation about granting the requisite authority; but this was finally done on a pledge that the Congress was not to occupy itself with politics, but simply with questions concerning labor. When the body was organized in the hall of the Rue de Arras, the President stated that no politics would be allowed, and said that great pains had been taken to keep out all but real working men, for fear of the bourgeois pretenders who always came forward with their chimerical ideas and socialistic dreams to make honest working men solidaire with them. This was not far from the truth, for the men who talk socialism are men who wish to live by such talk, and are not laboring men. The Droits de l'Homme, the Siècle, the Tribune, and the Rappel all tried to become official organs of the congress, but the President stated that he wanted nothing of the kind, and would not have the work of the congress identified with any political party. The reports would be placed at the disposition of all the papers without regard to their political views. This was sensible, and promised well for the future of the congress. It must be confessed that everything has passed off well, the delegates occupying themselves solely with labor questions, and the debates have been marked by a dignity and moderation unknown before in France.

The principal questions composing the programme of the Working Men's Congress are as follows: 1, The labor of women; 2, Syndical Chambers; 3, The Councils of Prud'hommes; 4, Apprenticeship and professional instruction; 5, The direct representation of the proletariat in the National Parliament; 6, Co-operative societies; 7, Societies for mutual insurance in case of sickness, pensions, &c.; 8, The union of industrial with agricultural laborers. We have enough here to occupy almost any body of men for eight days, and the time will be found too short for the treatment of all these questions. The fifth might very well be passed over, considering the importance of the rest; it is touching upon a subject full of danger. The debates upon the subject of female labor were moderate enough, but I cannot say that any new light was thrown upon the question. The orators told us that we already know that female labor is poorly paid, and the position of working women a very hard one indeed, but they did not present any practical remedy. Neither did they dwell upon the progress already made during the past few years. It is slight, to be sure, but something has been done nevertheless, and while very much yet remains to be done, we must still confess that the situation of working women is, relatively speaking, better than it was ten years ago. But, in the interests of the family, of justice, of virtue, and public morality, we have to do a great deal more. The question referring to the Councils of Prud'hommes may not be understood by all without explanation. Under the Code Napoleon we have a Tribunal of Commerce to judge of all commercial and business affairs. Below this there is a minor tribunal composed of men elected by the different trades unions, whose business it is to decide upon all trade quarrels or disputes between employer and his employes. These men are called Prud'hommes.

Perhaps I can illustrate the nature of this institution by a bit of personal experience. I will begin by saying that the corporation of tailors annually elect three men from their body to serve as Prud'hommes, and they hold their regular court like the President of the Tribunal of Commerce. Last December I ordered an overcoat from my tailor, which was to be ready in ten days. After two weeks I went in to try it on, and found that some alterations had to be made. The tailor marked them out in chalk, as usual, and sent the coat back to the journeyman. After waiting another week I went to inquire for my coat and was shown an insolent letter from the journeyman, who said that he should make no alterations until the first work had been paid for, and should keep the coat as a guarantee for the money. My tailor cut out another coat, had it made by another journeyman and summoned the first journeyman before the Prud'hommes. They decided that the journeyman was not entitled, when paid by the job or piece-work, to claim his pay until the job was done in a satisfactory way; that employers had to satisfy their customers; that journeymen were solidaire in this respect with their employers, and ordered the journeyman to give up the coat under penalty of being put under the ban, or excluded from the corporation, and pay the costs of suit, a trifling sum. As the tailor had lost the sale of the coat, the journeyman had to wait until it was sold to another party before getting his pay, the loss having resulted from his own fault. This is the sort of disputes settled by the Prud'hommes in each trade, and one can readily imagine that they render excellent service every year to the cause of justice.

THE MISSISSIPPI PLAN.

THE GOVERNOR REMINDED OF SOME RECENT OUTRAGES AND OF HIS UTTER FAILURE TO SEE THAT JUSTICE WAS DONE.

The dispatch of Gov. Stone of Mississippi to Attorney General Taft, in which he asserts that he is able and determined to execute the laws, and denied that there is either intimidation or threats of intimidation there, has elicited the following letter from the Chairman of the Republican State Committee:

To His Excellency J. M. Stone, Governor, &c.:

DEAR SIR: It has been with regret and no little astonishment that I have read your telegram to Attorney General Taft, dated the 4th inst., asking him to "give you names, dates, and places of wrongs alleged to have been committed in this State," reported to the Department of Justice. As a citizen of the State, and especially as Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Republican Party, I feel called upon to meet the testimony you have volunteered to give the public by inviting your attention to a few of the recent and more important violations of law and order in this State. In doing this your Excellency knows too well my high regard for you to suppose that I am actuated by any spirit of captiousness. Indeed, you must know that not only myself, but the Republican Party of the State, have not been disposed to find fault with your administration or to criticise your official acts with severity. But when you come forward with a statement as to the peaceable condition of the State, "evidently made for political effect," your action then becomes the subject of legitimate criticism, and I deem it not only a right, but a duty, to call your attention to a few of the many wrongs to which one class and one party of our citizens have been subjected. And allow me here to remark that I am not of the number of those who have "reported to the Department of Justice," as I have never had any communication with the Attorney General in relation to the condition of our political affairs; but I deem that those who have given him unfavorable accounts in that behalf must be regarded as "evil disposed people who seek to misrepresent."

Your Excellency says in your telegram that there is "neither intimidation or threats of intimidation. Both parties assemble in public meetings without let or hindrance, and both parties canvass without interruption in every county." I should be glad indeed to be able to take this satisfactory view of our condition, but with my knowledge of the many recent outrages in our State it is impossible for me to do so.

The following instances of wrongs which have occurred in this State, will suffice to show how little foundation there is for your Excellency's flattering representation.

First—A few weeks since a political meeting at Hernando, De Soto County, was violently broken up; at least one person was killed, and many were wounded. The consequent excitement in the county is such that the candidates for Elector in that district are deterred from attempting to speak at Hernando lest further bloodshed should occur. The parties engaged in this affair have not only not been punished, but not a single one of them has even been arrested.

Second—At this special election last August in Jefferson County for Sheriff Capt. Thomas W. Hunt was the Republican candidate. Although a man of pure character and high standing, such was the terrorism prevailing in the county that many of his friends dared not be seen at the polls, and some of them sought safety from personal violence by sleeping in the woods at night. It is well known that the county is largely Republican, but the Democratic candidate was "counted in" by a majority of 600.

Third—Less than three weeks ago there was a Republican meeting at Brandon, twelve miles from the capital of the State. While the Republican candidate for Elector was making his speech he was interrupted in the most rude and threatening manner. Alluding to the notorious intimidation by which the last election in Yazoo County was controled, he was told that he should not make such charges against "our people," and seeing that a riot was imminent, he hastened to bring his remarks to a close. A rare instance this of holding a meeting "without let or hindrance," and of conducting "a canvass without interruption."

Fourth—At the late Republican Convention at Raymond, in this county, some of the delegates had missiles shot at them by "nigger-shooters," and six of them, when quietly returning to their homes, were rudely assailed on the highway by a body of armed Democrats and abused in the most insulting manner. And now the intimidation in the Raymond district is such that Republicans dare not attend a Republican meeting at that place.

Fifth—At the time of writing your dispatch you were credited by the Democratic press with having just given your personal attention to a bloody riot in Oktibbeha County, which occurred a few days previously, in which at least two negroes were killed and many more wounded.

Sixth—The ink with which you wrote your dispatch was scarcely dry on the paper when, at a Republican meeting at Canton, Madison County, Gen. George C. McKee, who attempted to make a speech, was "interrupted" and grossly insulted by one Democrat, pushed off the stand by another, and knocked down with a club by a third, the latter being the Democratic Marshal of the town of Canton. The Democrats took possession of the ground, cut the heads in Republican drums, broke up the Republican meeting, and by violence converted it into a Democratic meeting. All this occurred in front of the Court House while the Circuit Judge was holding a session of his court, and during a short recess for dinner. At night, the Post Office, to which Gen. McKee had been taken, and where, in the care of a few friends, he was under medical treatment, was brick-batted and fired into with gun or pistol shots, some of the bullets perforating the walls of the building and wounding one of Gen. McKee's attendants.

When your Excellency shall have succeeded in causing the guilty parties engaged in the above-mentioned "wrongs" to be brought to justice, I shall be prepared to furnish you with other instances of like lawless character. So far, not one of them, as I am advised, has been punished or arrested, notwithstanding your Excellency claims that you have been and are fully able to enforce the law and conserve the peace. It is no answer to this to say that it is for the courts to deal with these violations of the law. That is true; but it is equally true that public prejudice and feeling are such that the courts are powerless to enforce the law against offenders who violate it in the interest of the Democratic Party, and it is of this that law-abiding citizens have so much cause to complain. Very respectfully, H. R. WARE,

Chairman Republican State Executive Committee.

ONE "REFORMER" DISCOURAGED.

T. L. Davis, the Democratic candidate for Congress in the Third District of Kansas, has deemed it advisable to withdraw from the race. His letters to the St. Louis widow he met on the cars, which the Globe-Democrat cruelly printed, were of such a nature that he found it impossible to successfully refute them, and hence he quietly and decorously steps down and out, with thanks to his friends and a promise that he will in due time explain all to the satisfaction of the public. It is understood that Dr. F. M. Springfield, of Topeka, will be the Democratic candidate in Davis' place. The following is a copy of Mr. Davis' withdrawal:

TOPEKA, KANSAS, October 17.

To Dr. F. M. Springfield, Chairman Third Congressional District Committee:

MY DEAR SIR—Certain charges having been published in the newspapers of the country seriously affecting my honor and integrity, and those charges being of such a nature that it is impossible for me to successfully refute them before the election, I hereby tender to the committee my withdrawal as the Democratic candidate for Congress in the district. I desire above all things else the triumph of the Democracy in this dangerous, trying hour. Believing the circumstances would be detrimental to the interests of the party, I cheerfully yield up all my aspirations. All that I can now say is that the charges made against me are untrue, and I will, in due time, explain them to the satisfaction of the public. I deem it not improper in this connection to tender my sincere and heartfelt thanks to the friends who have stood by me in this contest. Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. L. DAVIS.

EIGHT MILES SQUARE OF FIRE.

A dispatch to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat from Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 18, says: "A courier from the south-west portion of Saline County, just in, says a terrible prairie fire took place there yesterday, burning a section of eight miles square nearly clean, destroying out-houses, stables, a number of dwelling-houses, agricultural implements, hay, and grain in stack and corn in fields. On Swan Creek the wife of Peter Oleson, a Swede, was burned to death. She saw the prairie fire approaching and ran for broken ground, but stopped to let the hogs out of the pen. She appears to have fallen exhausted just before reaching the plowed ground. Her head reached plowed ground when found. The body was burned to a crisp. Another woman and her two children, names not given, are also reported burned to death on Spring Creek, five miles from the other locality, but particulars not given. The wind was blowing heavily from the south, and the fire was stopped by Turkey Creek, or it would have been much more extensive, and probably accompanied with greater loss of life."

THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL TRADE.

The Pottsville (Penn.) Miners' Journal says: "The quantity of coal sent from the Schuylkill region for the week ending Oct. 14 was, by rail, 121,636 tons; by canal, 27,033 tons—total, 148,869 tons; against 156,155 tons for the same week of last year—decrease, 7,286 tons. The quantity sent for the year was 3,304,615 tons, against 3,455,569 tons for the corresponding period of last year—decrease, 150,954 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the week was: Anthracite, 574,349 tons; bituminous, 96,352 tons—total, 670,701 tons, against 567,481 tons anthracite and 91,298 tons bituminous—total 658,779 tons—for the same week of last year. Increase of anthracite, 6,868 tons; increase of bituminous, 5,054 tons; total increase, 11,928 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the year was: Anthracite, 13,902,659 tons; bituminous, 2,822,904 tons—total, 16,725,862 tons; against 15,722,456 tons anthracite and 3,115,738 tons bituminous—total, 18,838,194 tons, for the corresponding period of last year. Decrease of anthracite, 1,819,798 tons; decrease of bituminous, 293,534 tons—total decrease, 2,112,332 tons."

POLITICAL MURDERS IN TEXAS.

LAWLESSNESS IN WHARTON COUNTY—UNOFFENDING COLORED MEN MURDERED—THE CIVIL GOVERNMENT UNABLE TO PROTECT CITIZENS—A TERRIBLE STATE OF AFFAIRS.

The following is a copy of a letter recently received by Attorney-General Taft. It shows the true spirit of the Democracy of the South:

GALVESTON, Oct. 11, 1876.

Hon. Alphonso Taft, Attorney-General United States, Washington, D. C.:

SIR: The letter of Assistant Attorney General Phillips, of the 16th ult., inclosing a copy of the letter of ex-Gov. Davis, of Texas, of Sept. 9, about the horrid murders in Wharton County, Texas, in August last, is at hand, and I have been at much pains to get at the truth. The testimony is conflicting, but from the best and most reliable information that I can get, the substantial facts are that the present State Government of Texas is totally inadequate to the protection of life and property.

About the middle of August a body of armed men, eight or ten in number, went to the houses of seven colored men in Wharton County, and deliberately shot them down, alleging that they were cattle thieves. Another colored man from some unknown cause was killed. About two weeks thereafter, ex-Sheriff Baughman (Boffman) was murdered in his house in the night time. The exact number of the murdered is not known, but credible men, who have been at pains to find the truth, vary from nine to fifteen as the number; not less than nine, not more than fifteen. United States Marshal W. J. Phillips was at his home in Wharton County at the time the horror was committed, and did and had done all that was possible for him to do. But it was a local matter, pertaining to State jurisdiction, and there was no statute of the United States, under Supreme Court decision, that permitted him to act.

The murder of the negroes was done in the daytime by undisguised white men, while that of Baughman was in the night, and his watch and other effects stolen. It seems the trouble has been anticipated, and application for protection had been made to Gov. Coke and to the Legislature then in session, which application was treated with derision. It is not my province to do more than state the facts. The subject is a great one and requires all the patriotism and statesmanship of America to understand it. Every one of the murdered men were Republicans. Under the existing laws of the United States the Marshal in such case is powerless.

The county is sparsely settled, the houses are isolated, and consequently the people are so weakened and demoralized that they dare not speak the facts, because, if they do, past history points to fatal results. The ordinary machinery of civil government is totally inadequate to the exigencies of the occasion. Gov. Davis, in his statement, seems mistaken in the number of the murdered and the continuance of the time. It was all done within a few days, and when the thirst for blood was sated, the murders ceased.

Good men of all parties deprecate the matter, but the infernal element is so strong that good men have no show, and ordinary judicial investigation would be but mockery. Death, swift and sudden, awaits any person testifying in respect to the matter, unless covered by adequate protection. The ordinary appliances of civilized society cannot protect "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Taxes are levied and collected by law and salaries are paid, but safety for life or property, out of populous places, is wanting. May God save this great nation. Very respectfully,

D. J. BALDWIN,
United States Attorney.

GEN. RUGER'S ORDER.

ITS TEMPERATE CHARACTER—STATEMENT BY A DEMOCRATIC JOURNAL.

Speaking of Gen. Ruger's order, transmitting Judge Taft's order to his subordinates, the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution says: "Gen. Ruger tells his officers that 'the prompt and firm execution of their duties' should be tempered with sound discretion and perfect courtesy. In this Gen. Ruger has given his own rule of conduct as exemplified more than once in this State, and we have no doubt that the ease and peace with which he has executed difficult labors will follow his subordinates by an adhesion to his rule. He tells them that the presence of troops 'may and should exercise a strong influence in the interests of peace and good order,' and carefully explains the negative and positive causes of this conservative influence. His reminder to the troops that wherever they may be sent they are 'not there in the interest of any political party,' but for the enforcement of the law for the general benefit of all, is timely and honest. We trust that the same spirit of the reminder will remain among those to whom it is directed. The generally prevailing idea that because one political party happens to be always calling for troops, with a view to benefiting its cause, the soldiers are partisans of that party is a gross error. We are glad, therefore, that Gen. Ruger makes this plain both to the troops and the public. The advice to avoid affiliation with acknowledged leaders of either party is also apt and correct. The gravest apprehension of trouble from the presence of troops usually arise from the people taking note of such excessive intimacies as the General declares should be avoided. We think that if the spirit of Gen. Ruger's circular is carried out by his subordinates during the election season the sting of Taft's order will not appear to harass the people. Federal troops are not bugbears to our people. Their presence anywhere in the land, when their actions are guided by law, prudence, sound discretion, and courtesy, is not a matter of uncommon note even. Therefore, let our people be wise, and meet this calm action of Gen. Ruger in the same spirit of prudence."

OUR STATE CONTEST.

Referring to the contest in this State the Ogdensburg Journal says: "The Republicans of New-York are in the majority. They have never failed to carry the State on a full vote, and since the organization of the Republican Party have never lost the State at a Presidential election except in 1868, and then only by gigantic frauds which cannot be repeated again. The Republicans are harmonious and united. Their candidates, both State and national, command the confidence and support of all Republicans without distinction of any kind. We have also with us, and heartily interested in the canvass, the great body of independent voters of the State who cannot ordinarily be counted upon to actively ally themselves with any party. If there is occasionally a person who has at some time voted the Republican ticket, who proposes now to support Tilden, there can be found two conscientious Democrats, who, convinced of Tilden's usefulness for any reasonable position, will vote against him. There are besides in this State a large number of business men who know enough to understand the danger to the reviving business of the country—which is bound up to a great extent with and dependent upon, the national credit—who will never vote to place Samuel J. Tilden and a Western Democratic and Southern rebel Congress in power. They will earnestly oppose such an experiment so fraught with peril, and which opens up so many uncertainties as to the currency, the tariff, the system of taxation, and the national credit itself. There are few influences of this kind in Indiana or any Southern State, and for that reason candidates like Tilden and Hendricks can better stand in those localities a discussion of their moral delinquencies and unsound financial views than they can in New-York State."

AN EXTRA DAY AT JEROME PARK.

The American Jockey Club has determined on giving an extra day's racing at Jerome Park, and have named Saturday, Nov. 4, as the day. There will be five races, the first a selling race for all ages, with the usual allowances, one mile and a quarter. This will be followed by a sweepstakes for all ages, $200 each, half forfeit, and $2,000 added, the second horse to receive $500 out of the stakes; two miles. Parole, the Brother to Bassett, Vigil, and Tom Ochiltree, have already been entered in this, and a grand race may be anticipated. The third event is one of mile heats for all ages, with an allowance of five pounds to beaten maidens, and the fourth race is a dash of a mile for gentlemen riders, weight for age, and the concluding race will be a handicap steeplechase, over the usual course, for a purse of $700, presented by Mr. James Gordon Bennett. This is a very interesting programme, and should the weather prove fine, a splendid day's sport will be had to wind up the season.

A THIEF CAPTURED.

John Slatterly, aged twenty-one, who refused to divulge his residence, stole a ham from the provision store No. 461 Sixth avenue, at the corner of Twenty-eighth street. He was detected in the act by one of the clerks, and he ran into the hallway of the house and made his way to the roof and thence along the roofs of the houses on Twenty-eighth street until he reached No. 152, which is near Seventh avenue. The clerk pursued him, and slatterly finding that he was in danger of arrest, sprang from the roof of No. 152 West Twenty-eighth street to the roof of a stable in the rear of No. 151 West 27th street. He fell heavily on the roof of the stable and received serious internal injuries. The Police were notified and the injured chief was removed to the West Twentieth street Police Station. He was attended to by Dr. Cochrane and taken to Bellevue Hospital.

GOV. TILDEN'S RIDE.

The Albany Times says: "Thanks to the Republican papers who are constantly harping on the matter, that collision on the New Scotland plank road last July, in which Mr. I. V. Grant, of this city was thrown from his buggy, will readily be remembered, Gov. Tilden's absence of mind on that occasion having been the subject of a great many nnnecessary remarks. His 'barrel of money' still holds out, however, and he has just settled with Mr. Grant by paying him $4,000, with the urgent request that such payment should be kept a strict secret."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE STILL HUNT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

EXTRAORDINARY PAPERS READ TO DOUBTFUL VOTERS AND FOREIGN-BORN CITIZENS, BUT NOT DISTRIBUTED AMONG THE PEOPLE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A correspondent of THE TIMES, writing from Pittsburg, states that the still hunt of the Democracy, practiced in Ohio and Indiana, is not being tried in Pennsylvania. This is not true so far as Erie County is concerned. The Democrats have a very perfect organization, embracing small neighborhoods, where leading members of the party are engaged constantly in making personal appeals to ignorant voters, and especially to foreign-born citizens. These Democrats have in their possession documents which they do not distribute to the people, but read to voters and retain in their own hands. I have vainly tried to get hold of some of them. Meetings are held to which the public are not invited. At these meetings documents for private use among the faithful are discretely distributed, and we hear afterward of their being read to such voters as are most likely to be influenced. For a number of weeks a greenback journal, called the Sun, published at Indianapolis, Ind., has been sent gratuitously to Republicans all over this county. They are not sent to Democrats, so far as I know. An examination of the sheet shows that it is published for the benefit of Tilden and to divide the Republican vote. Every number that I have seen contains attacks on Gov. Hayes, and not a word against Tilden. It supports Peter Cooper for the Presidency. If the Republicans of this State suppose that the Democrats have no hope of carrying the State and are making no special efforts in that direction, they will find out their mistake when the votes are counted on the 7th day of November. I know from my own personal knowledge that they were never more active and untiring in their efforts than since the elections in Ohio and Indiana. They have given up Ohio, but they expect to carry Indiana and New-York, and will carry Pennsylvania if work can do it.

I talked to-day with a German voter of medium intelligence who has been in this country for twenty years, and who served in the Union Army. This man told me that he had been visited "six times" by Democrats since the canvass opened; that they read from printed documents charges against President Grant, Gov. Hayes, and many leading Republicans. Everything they read to him I know to be false. But they refused to give him any of the papers, fearing, I suppose, that they would fall into the hands of Republicans and their true character be exposed. A vigorous still hunt is going on in this county, and I believe a careful investigation will show the same thing all over the State. I have reason also to believe that money is being used to purchase votes at so much a head. There are no dissensions in the Republican Party in this county, and the full vote will be polled; but doubters and grumblers and venal men who care nothing for the country may be captured by the "still hunt." We shall carry the State, for we shall poll the full vote of the party, but we ought to gain a large number of votes and a number of Congressmen.

ERIE COUNTY, Penn., Wednesday, Oct. 16, 1875.

DEMOCRATIC GOVERNMENT IN THE SOUTH.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Some writers, in discussing the "solid South," have assumed that Democratic Government in that section is good government, and therefore ought to prevail, although the Democrats are in the minority. This assumption is an assumption merely, and is not supported by the facts. Democracy overturned the Republican Government in Maryland in 1866. The expenses of the City of Baltimore at that time were about four million dollars; now they are about eight million dollars. The municipal indebtedness then was $22,755,822 69; now it is $32,095,725 77. At the last election, the Democracy drove voters from the polls and stuffed ballot-boxes on a scale that has never been equaled in this country, except in New-York in 1868. The whole State, moreover, is dominated by a Ring that is as unscrupulous and corrupt as the Tweed Ring ever was.

In 1870 the Democracy defeated the Republicans in West Virginia under the cry of reform. In that year the appropriation to pay the expenses of the Legislature was $20,000. In 1871 under the Democrats it was increased to $21,000; in 1872 the cry of reform was a little louder, and the appropriation was increased to $26,000; in 1873 it was ascertained that reform was a good thing and paid well, and so the appropriation was increased to $103,091 53; in 1875 the appropriation was $53,280 20.

Of Virginia, Capt. Everett W. Early says that every man in the State knows "that the State revenues do not meet the current expenditures and interest by about a million per annum, and that we are yearly adding that amount to our huge burden of indebtedness, and the plain question has to be met, Will you repudiate all or a portion of the State debt or increase taxation? There is no alternative, the question must be determined. So pressed were our officials for funds that recently they illegally seized $400,000 of the taxes appropriated to the support of the public schools, and applied them to the payment of interest on the State bonds, thus defrauding the children of poor men of the benefit of public money legally to be expended for their benefit. It should be remembered, too, that the Reformers have some thieves in their ranks; the State Treasurer and his assistants were detected in embezzling public funds, and many thousands are missing that cannot be accounted for."

Such are the facts in regard to these three Southern States, and if the history of Democratic rule in the other Southern States were written up, it is confidently believed that the same results would be shown. Moreover, the great want of the South at the present time is a good system of public schools. There is no other way by which good government can be attained. There never was such a system in the majority of the Southern States before the war. The Republicans have uniformly established public schools wherever they had the power. Democracy, on the other hand, has steadily opposed them by burning the school-houses when it was out of power, as in Maryland and Mississippi, or repealing the law when it was in power, as in Texas, Alabama, and Arkansas, or squandering the school fund, as in Virginia.

The facts that have been given above prove that Democratic government in the South is not good government in the sense in which those words are understood in any civilized community. But there is another proposition that is equally capable of demonstration. The present appeal of the Democracy to arms is not a protest against bad government. An intelligent observer in Mississippi, in speaking of the change in that State, says: "This bloody crusade made against the Republicans of this State is entirely uncalled for, and shows the greediness and thirst for power that have been instilled into the Democratic mind. Take, for example, Jefferson County as a comparison of Republican and Democratic rule in this State. When the Republicans took possession of the offices of that county, they found an enormous debt of about seventy thousand dollars. By economy and strict integrity in the discharge of their duties, they have paid off this debt and purchased about twenty thousand dollars' worth of school property."

The present uprising in South Carolina is not against the government of Whipper and Moses, but after the State has been under the administration of Gov. Chamberlain for nearly two years. Of that administration the Charleston News and Courier, a Democratic paper, speaks as follows: "Under the several heads the savings that have actually been made are:

In the Bonanza bill	$400,000
In the executive contingent fund	101,260
In legislative expenses	350,810
In contingent expenses	855,000
In public printing	512,418
Total	$1,719,488

This is the record of Gov. Chamberlain as shown by hard figures and unmistakable facts. We have strained or exaggerated nothing. The plain truth, as we know it has been faithfully given, and we maintain that the record as it stands is one for which Gov. Chamberlain has cause to be proud." Moreover, in the platform of this year the Republicans have advocated even further reforms. It is against this Government, which Democrats themselves have commended, that Democracy has appealed to arms, and its Northern defenders attempt to justify the appeal on the theory of the right of revolution.

The facts that have been given are sufficient to shatter the theory of a virtuous, honest Democracy in arms against a corrupt government, and drive the philosopher to some other more satisfactory conclusion. Democracy stuffs ballot-boxes in Maryland and Virginia as well as in New-York. It is expensive in Southern States as it was in the national Government before the war. It rises in arms and drives voters from the polls in Maryland as well as in Mississippi and South Carolina. It burns school-houses in Maryland and Mississippi, and repeals school laws in Texas, Alabama, and Arkansas. It controls Grand Juries and screens criminals from justice in Maryland as well as in Mississippi. Yet Democrats love it and cling to it. Why? Not because it is good, but because, with all its brutality and corruption, it gratifies the prejudices and passions that have been generated by slavery. The present appeal to arms is simply another phase of the rebellion; another manifestation of the determination to rule or ruin; another outbreak of that lawlessness which plunged the country into war in 1861. VERITAS.

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It has been my fate to live for over a year in Turkish dominions. During the period I visited many portions of the Ottoman Empire. What I saw, heard, and learned convinced me of one fact—that Turkish supremacy on the Bosphorus was nearing its end. But it seems to me that there is a great deal of popular misapprehension as to the reasons why the Moslem power should be extinguished in Europe. The explanation generally made is Russian ambition. I make bold to say that, while Russia justly covets Constantinople, that a deeper and broader principle is at the foundation of the war now threatened, if not actually begun. And it is this: Turkey has long bred political malaria. She has kept on hand a chronic war-cloud, invented by Palmerston, and perpetually wafted over Europe by Disraeli. She has prevented that grandest of Sclavic purposes—the consolidation and unity of the Greek Church. She has made of the Black Sea a stagnant pool for the commerce of the world. Her rulers, including the "Kings of Kings," present a rare galaxy of knaves and imbeciles. Her financial status is no better than that of the late Confederate States. The whole Empire is a loose and unwieldy aggiomeration of provinces governed by men who should be chopping wood. Is it unnatural, then, that Russia, with her 70,000,000 of Sclavs in close and intimate sympathy with their brother Sclavs residing on either bank of the Danube, should seek an instant and summary termination of this condition of affairs? The well-being of the peasant and pastoral population of Southern Europe, the general interests of Christendom, the transport of the breadstuffs from the Black Sea, a vigorous government in that city of cities—Constantinople, honesty, equity, Christianity, all require that Russia should occupy, and maintain her occupancy in, European Turkey. But one power stands in the way—it is England, but her colonial Empire cannot be held together by the Earl of Beaconsfield, much less can she combat three such men as Gortschakoff, Bismarck, and Andrassy—rare trinity of statesmen. ALVAN S. SOUTHWORTH.

HOW THE WIND BLOWS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

As I went up-town in a "University" street car yesterday, I was the involuntary listener to a conversation between a couple of gentlemen on the subject of politics. At first the "confab" was held in an undertone, so much so that the few opening sentences were inaudible to most of the occupants of the car, although both had become very much excited, the only distinguishable words being "Hayes," and "Tilden," and "City." Soon, however, one of the gentlemen (and they were both evidently gentlemen in manners and appearance) exclaimed: "——, you never knew me to vote a Republican ticket in my life, did you?"

"No," replied his friend, "and (excitedly) I hope I never will!"

"Yes you will," replied the other gentleman with equal fervor. "I will vote for Hayes and Wheeler this Fall, and I only speak the pent-up sentiments of 10,000 other Democrats in the City of New-York who will do the same thing. You know as well as I do that we have had too much of this infernal old fraud, Tilden, already! Ought not THE TIMES has proved against him to be enough to send him to the Penitentiary the balance of his misspent life?"

"—'sh, —'sh," whispered the other with alarm, "you don't mean it!"

"I do mean it, and you know well that I do," was all that could be heard in reply. The hearty cheers of the listeners in the car drowned the rest of the conversation. B.

NOTICE.

We cannot notice anonymous communications. In all cases we require the writer's name and address, not for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith.

We cannot, under any circumstances, return rejected communications, nor can we undertake to preserve manuscripts.

This morning THE DAILY TIMES consists of TWELVE PAGES. Every news-dealer is bound to deliver the paper in its complete form, and any failure to do so should be reported at the publication office.

The official returns from Ohio give BARNES, the Republican Secretary of State, a majority over his Democratic opponent of 6,956; BOYNTON, Republican, for the Supreme Judgeship, a majority of 9,617; and EVANS, Republican, for the Board of Public Works, 7,893. All of these exceed the majorities previously reported. The majority of Mr. COX, Representative in the Sixth Congressional District, reached 1,915, and that of Gen. GARFIELD, in the Nineteenth District, 8,663.

Mr. SCOTT LORD, in the resolution adopted by the House of Representatives on the 10th August, admitted that "the exercise of the right of suffrage is, in some of the States, notwithstanding the efforts of all good citizens to the contrary, resisted and controlled by fraud, intimidation, and violence;" and that "in such cases the object of the (fifteenth) amendment is defeated." Now, Mr. LORD, in a speech at Utica, declares that "in the Southern States where the Democracy are in power all is peace, and harmony exists between the races." We have no objection to Mr. LORD eating as much leek as may be prescribed for him by his party friends, who resented his resolution as a gross indiscretion, and voted for it only because they dared not openly assume responsibility for the tactics it condemned. But he has no right to insult the intelligence of Oneida County in order that he may regain party standing at Washington. His Congressional resolution was an indictment of the Democratic managers in the Southern States or it had no meaning at all. Whatever interference with the right of suffrage occurs is, confessedly, directed against colored voters who are Republicans; and as this interference is possible only, "where the Democracy are in power," or where, as in South Carolina, they are in armed and organized opposition to Republican authority, it follows that Mr. LORD, in his anxiety to atone for an indiscreet utterance of the truth, now goes a step or two beyond the truth to serve his party.

Our exposure of the wholesale repudiation of indebtedness by Mr. TILDEN'S "solid South" is, in the estimation of Mr. JOHN KELLY'S Express, "malicious" and "adding cruelty to oppression." The proper question is, Is it true? Have the Democratic Party signalized their return to power in certain of the Southern States by plundering the creditors of those States to the extent of millions? To this interrogatory the Express makes no answer, and it cannot make any. The figures we have published were derived from official sources, and there is no escaping the lesson they suggest. They convict the Southern Democrats of repudiation on a scale never before known in communities pretending to be civilized and honest. Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina, Alabama, Arkansas, and Tennessee must hereafter be content to rank with Mississippi in the memories of Northern and foreign capitalists and investors. There is nothing "malicious" in the statement, unless that word can be applied with propriety to revelations of gross fraud and wrong in any shape. The statement itself is rendered timely and expedient by the insolent course of the Southern Democrats and by the undeniable fact that in the event of Mr. TILDEN'S election the national credit would be once more in their keeping. Mr. TILDEN'S irregularities as a tax-payer, trustee, employer, railroad reconstructionist, and speculator, furnish ample reasons for uneasiness on the part of holders of United States securities. Even more natural is the apprehension awakened by the mere possibility of the accession to power of Southern politicians, who in their own States have shown themselves indifferent to the obligations of common honesty.

The apology put forward by the Express in their behalf does not improve their case. We are not called upon to defend the extravagance and waste of which "carpet-baggers" have unquestionably been guilty. Nor are we required to justify the policy which led to large indebtedness on account of railroads and other public works. The railroads are there to represent the money. But as between the creditors and the States, this consideration has no significance. The holders of the bonds were satisfied that the bonds were issued in conformity with law, under authority which could not be impugned. That was enough for them. When the Democratic governments go behind this fact and repudiate authority quite as valid as their own, it is plain that they open the door to endless uncertainty and fraud. The plea of the Express, infamous as it is, is, however, only partially applicable. The greater part of the debt repudiated by Virginia, as well as part of the debts which Alabama is repudiating, was incurred before the rebellion; while North Carolina, which has repudiated shamelessly, never was ruled by "carpet-baggers." The pretense that the South is too poor to pay its debts is as fallacious as the other excuses. Its Democratic rulers have cut down taxation purposely to a point which makes the payment of interest impossible. And the flat repudiation of the principal is an act of robbery which no temporary embarrassment could for a moment extenuate.

Our special correspondence from the interior of this State confirms the opinion prevalent among well informed Republicans as to the earnestness and success with which the work of canvassing and organizing is carried on away from the large cities. Everywhere we hear of faith in the success of the Republican cause—not of that blind faith which jumps to conclusions and accepts hope as a substitute for evidence, but of the discriminating estimates of strength, which take cognizance of losses as well as gains, and builds up confidence on a solid basis of fact. Here and there we trace signs of over-reliance, but they occur so rarely that they are not likely to prove a very serious source of mischief. One thing seems beyond a doubt: at least four-fifths of the Liberals and Independents may be counted among the stanch supporters of HAYES and MORGAN.

It is some satisfaction to know that the machinery of registration gives warning of the only danger with which the voting in this City is threatened and provides facilities for its prevention. To what extent fraudulent registration has been carried we shall know in due time, and unless the law fail altogether of its purpose, checks will be interposed that will defeat this feature of the TILDEN programme, and bring some of the persons concerned in it to punishment. Meanwhile there is room for informal and volunteered efforts by citizens familiar with the precincts in which frauds are most likely to be carried on. The proper officers will be diligent and, we doubt not, effective. But they may be aided materially by information which throws light upon the bonâ fide vote in any particular locality, and thus tends to determine the question of fraud.

THE TAMMANY TICKET.

When JOHN KELLY was induced to head his county ticket with the name of Mr. SMITH ELY, Jr., we gave that gentleman due credit for his consistent hostility to the schemes of plunder of the Tweed Board of Supervisors, but regretted that he was prevented from keeping a very strict watch over the jobs of the Supervisors at the time when they became most fatal to the public Treasury. We alluded to the fact that he was absent from eight out of the sixteen meetings of the board in 1868, was present at only two of the nine meetings held in 1869, and was absent from both of the concluding meetings held in 1870. To this Mr. ELY replied in a letter published in THE TIMES of yesterday, which he has thought worth while to reprodnce in our columns to-day, that he was never absent from a meeting of the board of which he had notice during these three years, except when he was absent from the country. This statement he accompanies by the suggestion that our article does him injustice.

In order to do Mr. ELY entire justice in this matter, we have taken some pains to discover what services he performed to the public at the meetings which he did attend, so that the loss to the public by his enforced absence from other meetings might be better appreciated. It is notorious, that like most legislative bodies, the closing days of the old Board of Supervisors were most replete with corruption. In the rush of nufinished business, jobs went through which have since become historical, and which have, with other transactions of the Special Board of Audit, formed the basis for most of the indictments which have been brought against the Ring officials. It would have given us some satisfaction to have discovered that Mr. ELY bore up singly but unfalteringly against the tide of corruption which marked the later sessions of the Tweed Board of Supervisors. The minutes of the last meetings attended by Mr. ELY—Nov. 24 and Dec. 27, 1869—are very voluminous, covering some two hundred and fifty printed pages. We cannot say positively that they fail to reveal any trace of his opposition to the schemes of the Ring, but we must say that they give evidence of his approval of numerous jobs which we should have expected him to disapprove. In proof of this, let the following extract from the minutes of Dec. 27, 1869, suffice:

Supervisor FOX presented the following:

Resolved, That the bills of the following named be audited and allowed and the Controller directed to pay them from proper appropriations:

Keyser & Co., repairs	$65,116 60
George S. Miller, repairs	78,903 42
A. J. Garvey, repairs	86,168 00
James A. Monaghan, repairing books, County Clerk's office	8,836 85
James A. Monaghan, repairing books, office Receiver of Taxes	8,892 72
James A. Monaghan, repairing books, Register's office	8,889 59
T. W. Roe & Co., stationery	48,168 30
T. W. Roe & Co., stationery	21,818 75
Peter McKnight, claim for riot damages, allowed, with interest, from Jan. 1, 1864.	23,000 00
A. J. Garvey	8,859 72
A. J. Garvey	7,642 99
A. J. Garvey	$72,864 00
A. J. Garvey, on account of alterations to the Register's office	69,242 00
Ingersoll & Co.	137,103 58

Which was adopted by the following vote:

Affirmative—Supervisors Bleakley, Blunt, Brice, Ely, Fox, Hayes, Herrman, Oliver, the President, Supervisors Smith, Tweed, and Willmann—12.

And the same was directed to be sent to the Mayor for approval.

Mr. ELY may have a perfectly satisfactory defense to offer of his action in approving of these monstrous claims. If so, we shall be very glad to give him the benefit of it. Some general explanation of his votes at the two closing meetings in 1869, of which votes the above is a sample, might also be desirable.

In regard to the character of the rest of the Kelly ticket, no suspension of judgment is needed. The candidates are simply a set of more or less venal politicians, who are the mere puppets of JOHN KELLY and Tammany Hall. We hear of "respectable lawyers" indorsing Mr. CALVIN for Surrogate. Do these persons think that the award of $389,224 for services to the City which would have been dear at $20,000 a recommendation for a highly-responsible and delicate judicial position? Will they ask the people to accept as a high-toned Judge the man by whom EDWARD J. SHANDLEY, who headed the "thieves' ticket" in 1871, was placed in the important position of Appraiser of the Surrogate's Court?

The bestowal of fat Receiverships on personal and political favorites furnished some of the greatest scandals of the Judiciary system which flourished under BARNARD and CARDOZO. The new Ring imitates in this respect the tactics of the old. Mr. CALVIN, ex-Judge FREEDMAN, and Alderman PURROY all occupy prominent places on the Tammany ticket, and all have received during the present year, not to go any further back, several very remunerative Receiverships. KELLY'S nominees cannot very well be much better than KELLY himself, and when he designates that notorious political rowdy RICHARD CROKER as "one of the noblest works of the Creator," he shows how hopelessly debased is his ideal of the qualifications of candidates for responsible positions of public trust. To have the two chief actors—CROKER and WOLTMAN—in that judicial farce of the inquest into the murder of MCKENNA renominated for the positions they have disgraced is an insult both to the intelligence and the moral sense of the people of New-York. The introduction of a representative of the corrupt system which flourished in the Sheriff's office under KELLY, and of another representative of the equally corrupt system which the Patronage Committee of Tammany Hall set up in the Department of Public Works, certainly does not mend the character of the ticket. REILLY is a fair sample of the political hack of ten years ago, just as GUMBLETON is a sample of the political tool of to-day. Men like LEWIS, COLE, and KEENAN are merely different types of the political mercenaries who, as editors of obscure journals or keepers of corner groggeries, sustain the corrupt oligarchy of Tammany Hall and do the bidding of JOHN KELLY. A ticket like this only needs harmonious action among the representatives of the honest and independent portion of the people of New-York to secure for it that crushing defeat which it invites and deserves.

WHICH IS THE REFORMER?

In December, 1869, the Republican candidate for the Presidency wrote to an Ohio member of Congress: "I hope, too, you will abolish the franking privilege and adopt the general principles of TBUMBULL'S bill and JENCKES' bill. It would please the people and be right and wise."

In his second inaugural, delivered Jan. 10, 1870, Gov. HAYES condemned the system under which "political influence and political services" were deemed essential qualifications for employment in the civil service, and declared that the qualifications should be "efficiency and fidelity to duty." To secure permanency in the officers of the benevolent, reformatory, and other institutions, he recommended that the State Constitution be amended with that precise object in view. By clear implication he suggested that the civil service of the nation be reformed in the same fundamental way; that is, by means of an amendment to the National Constitution.

On March 1, 1870, he wrote to a friend: "I also agree with you perfectly on the spoils doctrine. This you would know if you had read my last inaugural."

In the well-known Glendale, Ohio, speech, delivered Sept. 4, 1872, after employing the language subsequently so closely followed in the letter of acceptance, he demands that "the best obtainable bill be passed," so that the work of civil service reform "should be begun."

And he closes his clear discussion of this question with the familiar sentence: "We ought to have a reform of the system of appointments to the civil service, thorough, radical, and complete." Here we have four distinct declarations of faith on a vital issue made by the Republican candidate, in 1869, in 1870, and in 1872. Is there any doubt where Gov. HAYES stands on this question and has stood for seven years? What utterances on civil service reform did Mr. TILDEN give in 1869? His biographers are silent. What declarations did he make in the year 1870? The Literary Bureau does not enlighten us. Had he any convictions, opinions, or even impressions, about civil service reform in 1872, or in any subsequent year prior to his candidacy for the Presidency? If he had, he kept them a profound secret from the world. On which side of the question he was no one, not even his bosom "nincompoop," can find out.

TABLE MANNERS.

It was reported of Lord BYRON that he said that the most ungraceful act which a woman could perform was the eating of an egg. Commenting on this, a calm Western observer said that BYRON had probably never seen an American woman hanging on by the teeth to a blazing hot corn-cob. To many nice people this will be a shocking story. But the vast majority will see no suggestion of any breach of good manners in the practice of extricating the kernels of corn from their natural place of growth in the fashion so rudely described by the Western observer. However, it is a fair illustration of our idea of table etiquette. It was a transatlantic visitor who, following the custom of the country in the manner of eating green corn, was deluded into asking the hotel waiter to "put some more beans on that stick," as he extended to him the exhausted corn-cob, to which he had been "hanging on." As the refinement of manners is, after all, purely relative, it may be edifying to know what would be thought of our table manners by a very eminent French critic. An Arab Sheik, who has more family antiquity at his back than the most ancient of Parisian nobility, would think it the height of rudeness for an entertainer to omit to proffer to his guest, between thumb and finger, a choice bit stripped from the roasted sheep before them. He would be justly offended if the guest refused the offered token of hospitality. But the eminent French critic who has just fallen foul of M. ST. BEUVE for his ill-breeding, would be sure to enrage and disgust the high-bred Arabian. Nevertheless, the Frenchman talks as if he were giving laws to a world.

For example, M. ST. BEUVE has declared that a man of genius cannot possess bad manners—a statement which is as dangerous as it is dogmatic. Whereupon the editor of a Paris publication, the title of which may be freely translated as "The Almanac of the Art of Living," convicts ST. BEUVE of no less than eight offenses at table. These offenses, it should be said, were noted by the master of ceremonies of the household of the late Emperor NAPOLEON. It adds to their heinousness that they were committed at the imperial table, where, in his double capacity of Senator and man of letters, the author of Causeries du Lundi was wont to break his fast. It is alleged that during this impressive ceremonial M. ST. BEUVE spread his napkin over both his knees; he omitted to crush the shells of two boiled eggs which he had eaten; he asked for a second service of chicken; he touched the bones of the chicken with his fingers; he said "thank you" to one of the servants; he left his knife and fork on the cloth; he peeled a pear latitudinally instead of longitudinally, and offered half of it to a lady; and, worst of all, he sniffed at his wine before drinking it. If the hapless Senator had said that he would have "some more" wine, instead of "some" wine, or had drank his coffee with a spoon in his cup, the deep damnation of his offenses could not have been more fully established. Let the profligate American who seeks to justify his blazing hot corn-cob read the explanation and rebuke of the editor of the Almanac de Savoir-Vivre, and despair.

This eminent authority declares that it is necessary that the napkin should be nicely adjusted. It is horrible to spread it over the knees or to open it altogether. It should be partly unfolded, and "posed negligently upon the knee." Could this critic behold the capacious breast of an English milord or American Alderman whitened by the snowy fall of his napkin, his consternation would be absolute. The other crimes of which M. ST. BEUVE was convicted are duly specified, so that the anxious reader may see how much he must himself avoid. To peel a pear circumferentially, if we may use that phrase, is so manifestly "bad form" that we take it for granted that even people who seize their corn by the ear will be warned. The editor from whose criticism we have quoted finds it necessary to tell the French people how to behave at table; which ought to be a consolation to Centennial visitors at New-York hotels, when they do not know whether they should drink or wash the spoons in the water which they find in their finger-glasses. The French (and therefore the world) are told that to eat sparingly when dining out is a reflection on the quality of the feast. To dine abundantly is to confess that one has a lean larder of his own. The happy medium is commended to the anxious diner-out. If one is afflicted with a large appetite, he may take off its edge at home. If he has no hunger, he may say that he is "indisposed." These are only a few of the multifarious rules which are laid down for students in the art of living well. How much occasion there is for the dissemination of such knowledge in our own unhappy country, let those who affect the blazing hot corn-cob consider.

IS THE EARTH SOLID TO THE CENTRE?

Until very recently geologists seem to have been all but united in accepting the doctrine of a fluid heart to our world. It has been announced over and over again that the solid crust of the earth was only from twenty-five to eighty miles thick. Below that was a fiery fluid mass. We were literally anchored on a sea of liquid fire, for our crust was only a film no thicker, in comparison to the earth's diameter, than the skin of an apple is to the fruit it incloses. Two well-known facts were appealed to for support of this hypothesis—the central heat of the earth and the eruptions of volcanoes. Central heat is demonstrated by this observation, that "in all countries, in all latitudes, in all climates, wherever there are mines or deep subterranean caves, the deeper you go the hotter the earth is found to be." After the first fifty feet in depth of a mine we find that a thermometer will register an additional degree of heat for every ninety feet of additional depth, or 58° of heat to every mile. At about a mile in depth the ground would be, according to this reasoning, 105° or 106° hot, and at twenty miles in depth it would be red hot, while at no very great depth beyond the whole must be melted, or only the most infusible materials, like flint and fire-clay, present any appearance of solidity. Volcanic eruptions were confidently appealed to in support of this view, and, it must be acknowledged, justly enough, as heated liquid matter was ejected in great volumes from their craters.

This sensational hypothesis seems doomed. Since the advent of Darwinism the age of the earth has been greatly discussed by mathematicians, geologists, and biologists. As yet there seems to be no conclusion of the controversy in view, and until something like a correct theory of the earth's solidity or fluidity was reached, the necessary data for a conclusion seemed to be in part wanting. Unless, indeed, such an eminent mathematician and physicist as Sir WILLIAM THOMSON is mistaken, the solidity of the earth is a proved fact.

"Whatever may be its age, we may be quite sure the earth is solid in its interior; not, I admit, throughout its whole volume, for there certainly are spaces in volcanic regions occupied by liquid lava; but whatever portion of the whole mass is liquid, whether the waters of the ocean or melted matter in the interior, these portions are small in comparison with the whole, and we must utterly reject any geological hypothesis which, whether for explaining underground heat or ancient upheavals and subsidences of the solid crust, or earthquakes, or existing volcanoes, assumes the solid earth to be a shell of 30, or 100, or 500, or 1,000 kilometres [that is 20, 60, 300, or 600 miles] thickness, resting on an interior liquid mass."

Divested of all mathematical treatment the reasoning on which this conclusion rests is briefly as follows: The great Greek astronomer, HIPPARCHUS, discovered what is known as the precession of the equinoxes, which is a slow shifting of the equinoxes to the west, and which was explained by NEWTON as due to attraction of the sun and moon upon the matter piled up at the earth's equator. Precession, though very important in astronomy, is very slow, taking 26,000 years for its accomplishment. HOPKINS tried to discover what effect the interior fluidity of the earth would have upon this period, and came to the conclusion that the earth must be a solid throughout or the sun and moon could not produce the present period of precession. Sir W. THOMSON has lately gone over these calculations, and his conclusion is that upon this very slow period the effect of interior fluidity would be insensible. But it is quite different with its effect upon lunar mutation. Mutation is an irregular tilting of the earth's axis, due to the attraction of the moon. Its period is a little less than nineteen years. If the earth's crust were infinitely thin, the mutation would be nineteen times its present calculated amount on the theory of complete solidity, and if the crust were anywhere from zero to eighty miles in thickness this amount would be anywhere from nineteen times the calculated amount up to infinity. "This conclusion is absolutely decisive against the geological hypothesis of a thin, rigid shell full of liquid." But it may be asked, may not the crust, as a whole, be stiff enough to be practically unyielding if there be rock and continuous metal to great depths? To this it is replied, "No; decidedly it could not. On the contrary, were it of continuous steel and 500 kilometres [310 miles] thick, it would yield very nearly as much as if it were india-rubber to the deforming influences of centrifugal force and of the sun's and moon's attractions." In other words, even if the crust of the earth, granting that it had a crust, was three hundred miles thick—about ten times what is ordinarily allowed—under the attractions of the sun and moon and the centrifugal force due to rotation, such a crust would be a poultice pavement for us, and be as liable to tides as the ocean itself. And from it would result this curious fact, that if the earth's centre was a liquid, there would be no sensible tides at all, for tides are due to the rigidity of the land as compared with the flexibility of the water. Nothing can well be more complete than this demonstration.

But, thrice to slay the slain, it has been shown that, supposing the earth a thin crust of rock or metal resting on liquid matter, this crust would break in pieces no matter how rigid it was, and sink to the bottom. Its position would be, according to THOMSON, analogous to that of a ship with a hole in its side—one portion of crust up and another down, and then all down. "This process must go on until the sunken portions of crust build up from the bottom a sufficiently close-ribbed skeleton or frame to allow fresh incrustations to remain, bridging across the now small areas of lava pools or lakes." However this may be, no one can have examined the present state of geological speculation to much purpose who does not see that it is in much the same condition that astronomy was before KEPLER—a great mass of facts held together by more or less crude hypotheses. It is destitute of anything like accurate terminology. Theory succeeds theory—catastrophism gives way to uniformitarianism, which, in its turn, is supplanted by evolutionism—with a rapidity only to be compared to the succession of physical theories in Greece in the fifth and sixth centuries before our era. There is, as yet, no sign of any agreement as to the probable age of the earth, and all thinkers are now agreed that owing to the "imperfection of the geological record," little reliance can be placed on the application of the formulæ derived from observation of recent changes in strata to the chronology of their past changes. Geology is a noble science, and is rich in facts, but Darwinians and anti-Darwinians have alike committed grave mistakes in appealing so confidently to its dicta.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

A few weeks since a Presbyterian minister, residing in a New-Jersey town, was formally charged with intoxication. There were numerous precedents which might have offered him valuable hints as to his defense. He might have imitated a well-known Brooklyn preacher by remarking, in a general way, that whenever he was found out, heaven seemed remarkably near and bright, and that a variety of people would have drank more wisely in his place than he had done; and by subsequently boldly charging his accusers with a conspiracy to black-mail him, and demanding the privilege of selecting a council to acquit him of all possible charges. Or he might have followed the example of another ornament of the Brooklyn pulpit, and asserted that in the first place he was not guilty, and in the second place he had committed the fault with which he was charged for the sufficient reason that it was his belief that two Presbyterian divines were about to become Unitarians. Or he might have adopted the lofty tone of Rev. Mr. BUFFUM, of Connecticut, who, on being upbraided by his wife for a few slight conjugal infidelities, congratulated her on having "an opportunity for the exhibition of Christian grace and forgiveness rarely vouchsafed to any woman." And in case none of these varied defenses happened to meet his views, he might have run away, like Rev. Mr. BOTT, of Philadelphia, and defied the fleetest of his elders to overtake him. As it happened, however, the New-Jersey minister made no defense whatever, but openly admitted, with great sorrow, that he was a guilty man. Of course, he lost his ministerial position, but he gained the respect of his fellow-men, and as he disappears from the ministry he will carry with him the satisfaction of having taken the only course which an honorable man and a repentant Christian could have taken. No one can excuse the fault by which he had disgraced himself and brought scandal upon his brethren, but he proved himself at the last neither a coward nor a liar, and won the sympathy of the very men who were forced to visit him with ecclesiastical censure.

It is not altogether without hope that this repentant minister's example is commended to the attention of the arms and legs of Rev. Mr. TALMAGE. He has lately been proved guilty of having abused the trust placed in him by the proprietors of a journal of which he was the editor, and of having stealthily endeavored to injure their property with a view of benefiting his private pocket. A week ago he added to this grave offense by alleging in his pulpit that he had withdrawn from the journal in question because it had been sold to a Unitarian. The weakness of this assertion consisted partly in the fact that it was wholly devoid of truth and partly in the additional fact that if it had been true, it constituted no defense for TALMAGE'S conduct. In these circumstances TALMAGE must shift his ground and make an entirely new defense, and it is in the hope of saving him from further ignominy that he is now urged to make a full confession.

In such a confession it would not be necessay for him to refer to any matter except the two charges of having been guilty of a dishonorable breach of trust, and of having subsequently made a false defense. His other offenses are so well known that it would be superfluous, as well as unpleasant, for him to attend to them. Were he to publicly confess that he is vulgar, illiterate, and silly, and that his habitual conduct in the pulpit is adapted to bring religion into contempt in the eyes of those who make the mistake of confounding religion with the antics of a mountebank, he would merely repeat what is usually accepted as undeniably true. His whole life is a constant confession of these facts, and further confession is unneccessary. But what TALMAGE ought to do without delay is to confess that he betrayed his employers, that he tried to steal their subscribers, and that he told what was conspicuously untrue when he tried to produce the impression that a journal which is now edited by so eminent an orthodox minister as Rev. Mr. TAYLOR is virtually a Unitarian organ. He can thus meekly submit to the censure which he unquestionably deserves. In many circles such censure would probably take the form of a large and heavy boot powerfully and effectively wielded. Mr. TALMAGE, however, is safe from that variety of censure, for the reason that he is technically a Christian minister, and that the people whom he has wronged and slandered are professedly Christian men. The only penalty which he would probably be called to suffer would be his withdrawal from the pulpit. This, however, would leave him at liberty to give his whole talents exclusively to the flying trapeze, to which line of acrobatic business he has a clear and unmistakable call.

The good that such a confession would do Mr. TALMAGE'S private soul can hardly be overestimated. In making it, he would be spared the humiliation of standing up before his people and reading the story of his own disgrace, as any other offending and repentant minister would be expected to do. TALMAGE can write his confession in large characters, and, having gummed it to the soles of his boots, can wave it from the pulpit. Or, if he shrinks from so easy and characteristic a method of addressing his audience, he can stand on his head in a penitent attitude in sight of the congregation, while his noisiest deacon reads the confession aloud. With a little careful preliminary advertising, TALMAGE could draw an immense house to witness his last appearance as a pulpit mountebank, and could thus convert his humiliation into a brilliant triumph. In fact, he has everything to gain and nothing to lose by a frank and full confession. He is already universally known to be guilty, and if he entertains the delusion that his preposterous denials will be accepted in preference to calm assertions of Mr. TAYLOR and his associates, he is very much mistaken. The more defenses he invents the more thoroughly will his lack of moral, as well as of all other, sense be made manifest. Let him for once do a manly and honorable act by imitating the unfortunate New-Jersey preacher who has confessed his fault and earned the forgiveness of all charitable men.

THE LAST OF TEMPLE BAR.

One of the last remaining memorials of "Old London" is doomed. Temple Bar, the hideous architectural obstruction around which clusters so many historic, romantic, and literary associations, is to be removed, and this, the last tangible barrier which divided the City of London and Westminster will in a brief time live only in public memory and be embalmed in the literary compilations treating of the London of the past. Lately, Temple Bar had become even dangerous. The foundations were sapped and its walls and its Corinthian pilasters cracked and shattered. An attempt was made to prop it up out of respect to the prejudices of "antiquity mongers," until the whole pile became a wretched
